Editorial Notes.

—An editorial from J. S. K., upon his visit to Palatinate College during its late Commencement, has been unavoidably crowded out of this issue.

—We are in receipt of the Annual Catalogue of the State Normal School, Clarion, Pa. It gives an elaborate description of this successful State institution. It is presided over by A. J. Davis, M. S., A. M., Principal, with fifteen assistants, one of whom is Jos. H. Apple, A. M., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College. During the year there have been 358 students in attendance in all the departments.

—We are also in receipt of an invitation to attend the Commencement exercises of the school, which will commence June 28th, and continue until July 2d. The Graduating Class consists of fourteen ladies and fifteen gentlemen. The Commencement proper will take place on the 2d inst.

—The Twenty-first Annual Commencement of Allentown Female College took place on the 26th ult. The exercises made a very favorable impression upon all in attendance upon them. The efforts of the young lady graduates reflected great credit upon President Reily and his able assistants. The Church may well be proud of this institution and it certainly merits her general patronage. It is to be hoped that parents having daughters to educate will not overlook its claims and advantages.

—Commencement Week at Ursinus College was an enjoyable one and the friends of the institution feel greatly encouraged by the financial work of the past year. There has been secured for it the sum of $52,800, which no doubt is the largest sum raised in the history of our Church for one institution in one year. Of this amount $42,500 is for Bomberger Memorial Hall, $6,000 for the Alumni Fund, and $4,285 for general purposes.

—Ursinus College Commencement Herald is the title of a neat publication issued by the students of the College during Commencement Week. It contains the baccalaureate sermon, the speeches delivered on Class day, the orations of the speakers on Commencement Day, and other interesting matter.

—Our readers will extend sympathy to Rev. C. H. Coon, pastor of Trinity church, this city, and others of the family, in the bereavement occasioned by the departure of the mother, Mrs. Clarissa Coon who, after a long and serious illness, entered into rest, at her residence in Waynesboro, in the 74th year of her age. Six children survive her, her husband, John W. Coon, having died some years ago. For fifty years she had been a faithful member of the Reformed Church.

—It should be borne in mind that our Publishing House will fill orders for the new Hymnals to its regular customers and others upon the same terms as may be offered by the publishers. Those wishing a supply of the new Hymnal will do well to consult the list of prices and terms in the Publisher's Column of this issue and order according to it.

—Attention is called to the new offers to be found in the Publishing Department. The first will afford an opportunity to those who wish to take the MESSENGER on trial at one half the regular price for six months. Those who take the church paper should make known this offer to those who do not. The number that will avail themselves of it will depend upon the making known of it by those who already receive the paper. We hope the number will be beyond our most sanguine expectations.

—The other offer is The Christian Intelligencer, the organ of the Reformed Church in America, at a reduced price to subscribers of the MESSENGER who may wish to learn of the Church with which our own Church is about to effect a Federal Union. We shall be glad to forward a number of names to the publishers of it. Those who would wish to subscribe for The Intelligencer should do so at once as the offer may not be extended any great length of time.

—The Catalogue of the Officers and Students of Catawba College, Newton, N. C., for 1890-91, is before us. From it we gather the following: Faculty, nine professors, with Rev. J. C. Clapp, D. D., as President. The number of students during the year, 192. The Collegiate Department has a Classical and Scientific Course of four years each. The Academic Department has also a four years course. These are of a grade equal to any College and Academy in the country. The authorities are now engaged in securing an endowment so that the College may enlarge its usefulness. There is every prospect that the effort will be successful. The Fall term will open August 4th, 1891, and continue twenty weeks.

—The publisher has begun to send out bills to our subscribers as gentle reminders of the amount due for the paper they receive weekly. He should not be under the necessity of doing so, since the yellow tag, which is on the papers every week, will tell them that. Every dollar due by subscribers is needed, and should be paid promptly. Some let their subscription run two or three years and are hurt if they are asked to pay up. Let every subscriber when he receives his bill feel that he has in his pocket, two, four or six dollars, as his account stands, that does not belong to him, but to the publisher of the paper he receives and reads every week. This is plain language, but who will dispute the truth of it?

—As was announced in our columns a few weeks ago, the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania at its late sessions, elected Rev. J. Fry, D.D., of Reading, Pa., to a chair in the Theological Seminary of that Church at Mt. Airy, this city. Should he accept the appointment, it is expected that he will still continue pastor of his church in Reading, Pa., and attend to his duties as professor during two or three days in the week. Part of his pastoral duties will be in charge of an assistant. If we are not mistaken, the Seminary referred to, now in a very flourishing condition, had in the beginning, its chairs filled by pastors who lectured several days in the week to the students. Now it has several regular professors and perhaps one or two professors who fill chairs as it is expected Dr. Fry will. For some time previous to the election of Dr. Fry, we have thought such a plan might be adopted by our Theological Seminary at Lancaster, Pa., and thus its chairs be increased with little additional expense. Some pastors in the vicinity of Lancaster might be appointed to fill such a position with great advantage to the institution. And here would be an opportunity for some one to endow such a chair or lectureship. It is worthy of the attention of the Church. Other Seminaries have them and they have been found to prove helpful to the institutions, and why should not ours?

—A worthy correspondent writes us, suggesting the enlargement of the MESSENGER. He says there seems to be not room enough within its present sixteen pages to accommodate all who wish to appear in its columns. Should it be enlarged, he thinks then "the necessity for the cheaper class of and smaller papers and the small local papers published by pastors, who want to sit in an editorial chair, would not exist." He thinks a trial of enlarging it should be made, and that "the Church authorities should forbid the publishing of smaller papers, and the pastors should advise the people to take the MESSENGER, the oldest paper of the Church." He also believes that "it is the fault of the pastors that the people are so indifferent in the matter of taking the church paper." He says "it is not so in the Methodist Church. Their new members are at once taught the necessity of taking the organ of their Church." Who does not think our correspondent has the right view of things? We would like to enlarge the MESSENGER, but the very thing our correspondent refers to, cheaper and smaller papers, prevents the general support of the MESSENGER, and hence keeps its subscription list from reaching such proportions or numbers as would warrant the expense of an enlargement.

GOD IN HIS WORLD.

BY J. E. RANKIN, LL. D.

(From the German of J. G. F. Koehler.)

Rev'rent enter Nature's fane,
Lo, God's cipher written plain:
  There, where the deep thunder rolls,
  He His chariot's course controls:
Here, the solid earth is shaking,
Tumbling seas against it breaking;
  Lord the great Creator praising,
  Hymns perpetual to Him raising.

Lo, in clouds as black as night,
Where the tempest wheels in sight,
  Awe-struck, prostrate, silently
  Wait the earth and air and sea,
Now, God's voice breaks on their slumbers,
Speaking in terrific numbers,
  Then amid the lightning flashes,
  Through the toppled cedars crashes.

Through the beating rain at night,
Lo, He sends His arrows bright;
  Strikes the forest-oak, far heard;
  Slays the shepherd with his herd.
Towns are smoking, towers are falling,
Echo rocks with sounds appalling,
  Bold blasphemers pause and tremble,
  And no more their fears dissemble.

In His house of holiness,
Ye, earth's children, Him confess:
  He controls the water flow,
  Flashes in the lightning's glow;
Storm and tempest, when descending,
Faithful still His own defending;
  Great is He, bow down before Him,
  And all earth rise and adore Him.

THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Somewhere in the early seventies we were elected a director or trustee, whatever the official name may be, of the Historical Society of the Reformed Church in the United States. We have not now, nor have we ever had, any official documentary notice to vouch for this statement, and it may, therefore, not be correct, though we have reason to think that it is. The Eastern Synod was in session in Bethlehem, Pa., in 1874; and, on Friday evening, during its session, the Historical Society held a meeting, and in connection with it the Rev. Joseph H. Dubbs delivered an address. At that meeting our election took place, as we were verbally informed, the following day, by the Rev. W. H. H. Snyder, who also had the kindness to say that it was desired to have the society a live body, and members and officers were to be chosen with some reference to that feeling.

Whose fault it was we do not know—possibly our own—but truth compels us to say that we have never attended a meeting of said society, and hence cannot claim to have been very much alive in furthering its interests. In fact we have not at any time been informed of any meeting to be held by it, which somebody ought to have done, if our title to office was a good one; and it is this long-continued overlooking of our supposed rights which makes their very existence to our mind a little dubious and shadowy. We have read of one meeting held by the Historical Society since the one at Bethlehem in 1874. It was during the sessions of the General Synod at Tiffin, O., in May, 1881. We were a delegate to that Synod, but could not attend. We were told, however, that Dr. S. R. Fisher read an historical sketch of the Publication Interests of the Reformed Church before the society, and we may have seen that sketch in print at the time, though we have no definite recollection now of our seeing it. A friend, who is so situated that he might readily know, told us within the year, that he did not think that any public or general meeting of the society had been held since the one at Tiffin.

It is not to be inferred, from what we have said, that the Historical Society has been all this time inactive. We have no doubt that those in charge of it have increased its stores of historical material from year to year, and that it is today in the possession of many valuable documents and of much general information. Their work has been quietly done. And those doing it have also had many other things to attend to. Their labor has been one of love for the cause, we doubt not. Were they to give us a report of what has been accomplished, it would probably take the form of a surprise to most of us. Nor do we forget that the society lacks a suitable room for its wants, as well as funds for putting its possessions into proper shape, both for reference and for preservation. These are hindrances, and hindrances of a very serious kind. It is the society itself, however, that must press them upon the attention of the Church, if they are ever to be removed.

We were led to the foregoing reflections, by reading the proceedings of the Lutheran Historical Society, which took place during the meeting of the General Synod of the Lutheran Church at Lebanon this last May. We quote the Observer:

"The early part of the evening was devoted to the Historical Society. Rev. Dr. C. A. Hay, of Gettysburg, Pa., made his report as Curator. The Doctor has charge of the valuable library of this Society, which is kept in a room in the Theological Seminary building at Gettysburg.

"Rev. J. G. Morris, D. D., who presided, then introduced as the first speaker, Rev. M. Sheeleigh, D.D., who said in part: 'At these biennial assemblies of the General Synod there are various Societies and Boards that have places on the program. Of these the Historical Society is one. This Society is forty-eight years old, but only within a dozen years has much interest been manifested. Now the interest is general all over our Church. I wish you could all examine the collection of the Society at Gettysburg." He paid a tribute to the faithful and laborious efforts of Rev. Dr. Morris, the President, and Rev. Dr. Hay, the Curator. 'This is one of the bonds that are drawing our Church together.' Many are interested beyond the bounds of the General Synod, and this is very encouraging. This common interest brings us closer together."

It strikes us that the Historical Society could be made an interesting feature of our Synodical meetings. One year its annual meeting might be held in connection with the sessions of the Eastern Synod; the next year in connection with the sessions of the Pittsburgh Synod; the third year with those of the Potomac Synod. Or, if its annual meeting cannot be held in this way, a report from the society could be read, and suitable addresses made. This would bring the whole subject home to the Synods, and through them to the Classes, congregations and individuals. The historic sense needs quickening among us. We are losing much of our own history every year. Some of it we will never recover. In fact much of it that is valuable will be appropriated by others, and that to their own use. It is so easy to forget. It is so easy to get hold of the wrong end of the story. What is made to stand for history is often anything but the true history, and some one is at fault, often innocently, in so far as any determination on his part is concerned. Let the Historical Society find a way to enter into the living consciousness of the Reformed Church, and whatever it now lacks will come to it. Its managers will know best, probably, how to bring this about. We submit the matter to their consideration.

SACRIFICE NECESSARY FOR CHURCH UNION.

No one, we think, can fail to see the providence that has overruled the efforts put forth in bringing about the union, thus far, of the two Reformed Churches of this country. Before the recent meetings of the two General Synods, all was uncertainty and doubt. It was entirely uncertain what would be the result in the Dutch Reformed Synod, and in the German Reformed Synod no one could foresee what the vote might be. After some preliminary proceedings the sky began to clear, and the Synod in Philadelphia was just moving towards a favorable conclusion, when the telegram arrived from Asbury Park informing us that the measure had passed in the Synod there unanimously. It was not long then until a dispatch went back giving information of the unanimous vote in Philadelphia. Assuming that the measure will be confirmed in the Classes, we may look upon the union as consummated so far as preparing the machinery is concerned, and now it depends entirely upon the spirit of the two Churches as to what the union will really become.

A SPIRIT OF SACRIFICE.

The main requisite for making the union a success is a spirit of sacrifice. What sacrifice, then, remains to be made? I answer, we must be prepared to sacrifice somewhat of our attachment to the denomination for attachment to the united Church. It is understood, of course, that the two bodies are to continue, to some extent, one, its separate autonomy, but still the union implies that some things are to be given up to the Federal Synod. And just here comes the sacrifice that must be made. On each side we are attached to our separate denominational work. This has been a virtue hitherto, but now we are required, not to love our denomination less, but to love the union more.

Take for instance, the interest of foreign missions. We in the German Reformed Church are attached to our particular mission in Japan. We, as a Church, have planted and nourished it, and it will require a sacrifice to merge it, if necessary, under a higher board, into the interest of the two Churches combined. This will not, at first, be pleasant. It may, indeed, be some time before such a consolidation of this interest may be for the best, but whenever the general interest shall be promoted by the consolidation, then we must be prepared for the sacrifice. This is true of every interest which may be promoted by the union. There is a measure of selfishness in every division of the Church Catholic. Sometimes it is the selfishness of one man who leads off in forming a new sect, and sometimes it is the selfishness of a party that keeps up an unnecessary division. We have learned within our own Church that some sacrifice is necessary to preserve our denominational unity, and now we are to learn the same lesson on a broader scale.

Have not our denominations performed the special part which called them into existence, preserved and emphasized the particular phases of the truth that was precious to each one? The Holland Church has sacredly kept the Belgic Confession and the Canons of Dort, and the German Church has honored the Heidelberg Catechism, and now we are coming to see that there is a broader principle that can include, without leaving behind, these denominational confessions, and unite us in one body, the principle that looks to the person of our Lord as the source of our common Christianity. We say the time is ripe for such an advance. We will continue to love the confessions that remind us of the Reformation struggles, the heroic battles for the truth, but henceforth our faces are set forward, not backward, and in the decade upon which we have entered we will labor to prepare to enter upon the 20th century of grace with our banners united under one centre, the headship of our Lord Jesus Christ.

If these two Reformed Churches can unite in a Federal Union that will leave freedom for each denominational autonomy, and yet join us together in one, as the States of our political union are joined in our Federal Government, will we not set the example of having solved for a new century the vexed problem of church unity? And will not other Churches of the Presbyterian order join us, and so enlarge and strengthen the union so much longed for?

The large Presbyterian Church is already leading off in the same line in revising its Confession, and in proposing to us to join in forming a Consensus Creed that will embody the good of the old and incorporate the new truth that has been revealed to the Church of the present. This amounts really to their joining us in our Federal Union, though not yet formally included in our Federal Synod. But that will come. The movement is all in the same direction, and looks to the same consummation.

We German Reformed make no boast of having led the way in this movement towards Church unity, but we know, all the same, that for the last half century we have been emphasizing just those great principles which are now working out a happy solution of the Church Question. And may we not acknowledge at the same time that under divine providence the way has been preparing in other more outward ways, in the various societies that have been bringing young men in the different Churches to work together for the common cause?

While we have been working in the line of theology, advancing the Christological principle, and the supernatural character of the Holy Catholic Church as the one body of Christ, these have been moving in practical lines to realize the same great truth. And we have at times antagonized each other, they complaining of our theoretical and theological tendency, we, of their neglecting the Church for these societies, yet over all the great Head of the Church has been bringing us to the same objective point. And, then, when we consider the great revival of a missionary spirit, and the lead that has been taken in our foreign mission fields, of uniting the Churches there, as for instance, in the one Christian Church in Japan, can we not see indications all around the horizon of a union of the Churches coming? Already we hear the command to our scattered hosts from the great Leader, speak to my people that they go forward. And how shall we move onward except in one united army?

Consider this prospect and then say, are we not ready to subordinate our denominational love and pride to love for the united body that leads in calling together the scattered branches of the one Church of our Lord?

Our Federal Union thus far is strictly a union of Churches, as the States of our union are represented in the U. S. Senate, each Church having an equal vote. That is right so far as it goes. It prevents a smaller church from being swallowed up by a larger. Should the union require a representation of the people, of the membership likewise, it will not be difficult to incorporate in the union another House, in which representation will be according to the numerical strength of the Churches. But that may be left for the present. Let the two Reformed Churches now in the union under the Federal Synod now devote themselves to the task of making the union a reality, let there be full faith in the work, believing that we are being led by a higher wisdom than our own, let there be love abounding, and above all let there be evidence of true love in a spirit of sacrifice, and we need have no fears as to the success of the movement. The good Lord will complete and perfect in His own good time the work He has begun. And now let each Church reach out the hand in confidence to the other, and let each read and study the affairs of the other, let the periodicals of each circulate in the other (why not?) So that these periodicals double, at least enlarge, their subscription lists, and soon we will blend into one in inward spirit and life, as we are now one in outward form. T. G. A.

WYOMING CLASSIS.

Wyoming Classis met in Fifth Annual Session in Zion Reformed Church, Wilkesbarre, Pa., Rev. F. K. Levan, pastor, on Wednesday, May 20, A.D. 1891, at 7.30 o'clock, P.M. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring president, Rev. J. B. Kerschner, from St. John, 15th chapter, 23d and 24th verses. The two leading thoughts of the sermon were: 1. Receiving and knowing Christ; 2. Witnessing for Christ. The second depends on the first, and will be clear and strong as the first is clear and full. All the ministers were present, and most of them till the close of the session. Each charge except one was represented by an elder, and among the elders was a large number of experienced business men. Rev. Geo. A. Sorber, of Watsontown, was elected President; Rev. A. Houtz was re-elected Treasurer; and Rev. A. Noll was elected Associate Clerk. Rev. D. E. Schoedler is Stated Clerk. The following is an abstract of the proceedings of Classis:

Minutes of Classis.

Classis reiterates its action in reference to the lifting of offerings on Reformation Day, for theological education, and again directs the attention of the pastors to this matter; appoints superintendents for holding Church work conventions; urges the increased circulation of the Missionary Guardian, and the necessity of larger contributions for the needs of the Gospel; continues the committee to look up our interests at Sayre, Athens and Waverly; also the committee to examine into titles to Church property at Nanticoke and vicinity.

Minutes of General Synod.

The Classis complies with the following requests and instructions of the General Synod:

To devise and adopt a systematic plan of getting stated offerings for Home Missions; to take action to increase the funds for Foreign Missions, and for the Orphans' Homes of the Church. It recommends to pastors and people the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip; learns with pleasure that the Reformed Sunday-school literature is used by all our Sunday-schools; commends Dr. Gehr's translation of the Directory of Worship to the congregations using the German language; approves the Reformed Church Hymnal; recommends the American Sabbath Association to the sympathy and support of our pastors and people, and urges the introduction of weekly prayer-meetings wherever this has not yet been done.

Minutes of the Eastern Synod.

Classis complies with the following requests and instructions:

To seek out worthy young men for the ministry; to adopt measures to pay in full amounts apportioned for missions; to create $500 church-building funds by missionary societies, congregations and individuals. Classis falls in with the action of Synod in regard to the Society for the Relief of Aged Ministers, the circulation of the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER, etc., Bethany Orphans' Home, our Literary Institutions, and preaching in the sanctity of the Lord's Day. It assumes all the apportionments except those for teacher of elocution, Home Missions and Church Extension, reiterates its former action in regard to this matter, and declines to pay all moneys demanded of it for Wichita University, giving its reasons for so doing.

Overtures.

Classis endorses the plan of work of the W. M. S. of Wyoming Classis, and wishes it Godspeed; declines to comply with the suggestion of the Stated Clerk of Synod in reference to making up the ministerial rolls and necrological records of the Classes; declines to recommend officially to our pastors the "Presbyterian Ministers' Fund;" authorizes the organization of a Reformed congregation at Dorrance, Pa., and appoint a committee for the adjustment of the difficulties existing in the Emmanuel's charge.

Beneficiary Education.

The Classis has five students for the ministry under its care, four of whom are receiving aid. Six hundred dollars has been apportioned for this work the coming year.

Missions.

Classis creates a sustentation fund for aiding weak charges within its bounds, which, for the present year, shall be $375; withdraws the Dushore, Freeland and Nanticoke Missions from the Bi-synodic Board at the close of their respective missionary years; appropriates out of the sustentation fund, $60, to Christ Church, N. Y.; $140 to Nanticoke, on condition that an English service be held at least once a month after January 1, 1892; $75 to Freeland and $95 to Dushore; accedes to the request of the Board of Home Missions of the General Synod to provide for maintaining a mission at Scranton, Pa.; appropriates $900 for this object; welcomes Superintendent Fouse into the field at Scranton; respectfully requests Synod to be exonerated, in view of the above facts, from assuming the apportionments for Home Missions and Church Extension, and overtures Synod to further the unification of our mission work by adopting the "Plan of Unification" already submitted by the General Board, and learns with pleasure that Hazleton and Plymouth have become self-sustaining.

Delegates to Synod.

Primarii: Revs. D. E. Schoedler, D. W. Ebbert and Geo. S. Sorber; and Elders, Daniel Clinger, M. F. Koenig and D. R. Williams.

Secundi: Revs. Geo. W. Kerschner, A. M. Mæsenheimer and W. T. Auman; and Elders U. P. Getz, Alem Mauser and Henry Fornwald.

Time and Place of Next Meeting.

Christ Church, Fayette, Seneca Co., New York, was selected as the place, and Wednesday after Whitsunday, A.D. 1892, at 7.30 o'clock, P.M., as the time for the next annual meeting of Classis.

Statistics.

Ministers, 17; congregations, 36; members, 5452; unconfirmed, 3073; infant baptisms, 495; adult baptisms, 25; confirmed, 301; by certificate, etc., 167; communed, 4338; dismissed, 102; erasure of names, 106; deaths, 132; Sunday-schools, 34; officers and teachers, 461; Sunday-scholars, 3733; students for the ministry, 4; contributions for benevolent purposes, $3145; for congregational purposes, $22,589; Minutes of Synod, 187 English and 22 German.

The best of feeling and the utmost harmony prevailed throughout the sessions. Wyoming is a young, but vigorous and aggressive Classis. Its territory is largely missionary ground, and it means business in that direction.

All the special services were well attended, and great interest was manifested in the objects that were brought to the attention of the people. Sunday, May 24th, was a red-letter day in the history of the Wilkesbarre Reformed congregation. Communion in the morning; re-consecration of the church in the afternoon, when a large audience was present, and a good collection was lifted, reducing the indebtedness to within three or four hundred dollars, the repairing of the church having cost $3000; and in the evening a meeting in behalf of Sunday-school work, and of the Scciety for the Relief of Aged Ministers. Classis will constitute "Father" Meckel, the faithful pastor of the Plymouth congregation, a life-member in this society, the funds for this purpose having been raised during the last few years. D. E. SCHOEDLER, Stated Clerk.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The annual meeting of the Board of Managers will be held on Friday, July 10th. Persons having business with the Board will please address the Superintendent before that date. The Ladies' Committee will meet on the same day.

In making out the list of excursions and picnics which you expect to attend this summer, please do not forget the Anniversary and Bethany Day. Thursday, August 27th, is the date. It is confidently expected that this will be the largest gathering of Reformed people ever held in Eastern Pennsylvania. Excursion tickets will be sold as in former years, but parties desiring special rates will please address Mr. W. R. Lawfer, of Allentown, Pa., who is chairman of a special committee to make R. R. arrangements for the occsion. Schedule of trains and fare will be given later.

At the teachers' examination recently held in this district by County Superintendent Zechman, two of our boys and one girl made very creditable certificates, though all are under seventeen years of age. This proficiency in their studies was attained without neglecting their industrial work or reducing their working hours. Not all our children could do as well. Some do not have the natural abilities, others do not apply themselves as conscientiously, but we are naturally proud of all those who, applying themselves, make good use of the opportunities which the Church here offers to the orphans.

These are indeed, busy days at the Home. Term examinations in progress, house-cleaning commenced in earnest, the cherry season right upon us with any amount of the juicy fruit to gather and prepare for winter use, in the midst of hay-making, the new building going up, and the regular work to attend to. But the boys and girls, with one exception, are all well, have good appetites, plenty to eat and are equal to the occasion.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

ATTACK UPON THE RUSSIAN PRINCE IMPERIAL IN OTSU.

Says the Japanese Mail:

"An affair of a grave and lamentable character occurred May 11, at Otsu. According to the programme arranged for the Russian Crown Prince, His Imperial Highness went in the forenoon from Kyoto to Otsu by train, and having lunched at the official residence of the Governor, proceeded by jinrikisha to Lake Biwa. This method of conveyance was chosen as more suitable than a carriage to the nature of the roads, and because some of the places to be visited are difficult of access. A strong force of police had been stationed along the road to the lake. Among the policemen was one Tsuda Sanzo. This man seems to have lost his reason as the cortege approached. Drawing his sword, he stepped up from the rear at the moment when the Prince's jinrikisha passed, and struck at its occupant, inflicting a wound on the side of the forehead. The two jinrikisha men who were drawing the Prince at once stopped. Had they rushed on, the Czarevitch would certainly have been killed. One of the rika men caught Tsuda around the legs and pulled him to the ground, the other took the sword and cut at the assassin, inflicting two wounds. The man, Tsuda, was then arrested. The Prince's wound was about three inches long, but happily not of a serious character. When the telegraphic news reached Tokyo, the Emperor was profoundly affected, and the Empress broke down completely. The Emperor immediately announced his intention of visiting the Prince Imperial in Kyoto, and for this purpose left Tokyo the following morning, in a special train.

"The only ray of comfort in this terrible affair is that the Prince suffered so slightly. When we remember that the police carry Japanese swords, that the attack coming from a constable on duty, His Imperial Highness was at the mercy of the man, and that the blow actually reached its mark, it is impossible not to feel that very much more serious consequences might easily have resulted. What is especially unfortunate is that the really hearty welcome prepared by Japan for her Imperial visitors, should be thus completely marred. The coming of the Czarevitch had greatly perturbed a section of the Japanese public. Strange, uneasy rumors were circulated about the purpose of his visit. The upper classes, the nation at large, had no share in this uneasiness. But to Tsuda Sanzo the silly stories circulated probably became a night-mare. Years of discontent about his own circumstances, days and weeks of reflection on the coming of the Russian Prince Imperial, has brought him to the verge of hysteria, and when he saw the Prince he became a madman."

The Czarevitch went on board his ship at Kobe, for medical treatment, where he remained for the rest of his stay. The Emperor visited the Crown Prince in Kyoto and accompanied him to Kobe when he went on board ship.

The whole nation was in mourning during the stay of the Czarevitch. The people all felt that their Emperor was disgraced because his visitor had been injured. Many schools were closed. Everything in the way of amusements, athletic sports and parties were postponed for a time. Letters of condolence from all parts of Japan were sent to the Crown Prince. Our little Theological School wrote a very nice letter and sent it to the Prince. The Shinto Priests, the Buddhists, and the Christian Pastors and people assembled and prayed for the speedy recovery of the Imperial visitor, and that he might continue his travels through the country, or at least visit their Emperor in his palace in Tokyo. And when it was decided that he should return to Russia without a visit to their beloved O Tenshi San, there was a great cry of disappointment through the Island. Much money had been spent to make the Royal Guest comfortable and happy while here, and to have him go away without seeing the Capitol, was a great grief to all. Not only that, but it was feared the Russian Government would demand a great deal, either in money or land, for the injury done their future Czar. However the Prince spoke very friendly in giving the Emperor farewell, and the Czar has sent very friendly telegrams, so that the deep gloom that hung over the country for a little while is passing away. The wound of the Czarevitch was healing nicely when he sailed away to his own country.

At present the chief topic of conversation is the jinrikisha men. Before leaving Japan the Crown Prince summoned the two jinriki men, who grappled with the assassin, to come on board his ship. They went, dressed in their running suits and big basket hats. They probably expected to receive a little present, but when the Prince gave each one a present of twenty-five hundred yen, and a promise of a thousand a year, from the Russian Government, as long as they live, their surprise was so great that they could do nothing but stare; and when they did find their tongues, they asked if it was not a mistake. They had no pockets and so took off their big hats and carried the money in them.

The Prince talked to them awhile and said he hoped they would make good use of their money, and that they would get into some other business. Then he bade them farewell and they turned to leave the ship, but the sailors surrounded them and would not allow them to depart until they had drank their health, cheered them and chaired them, then carrying their money before them the bewildered happy men departed. One of the men was once in better circumstances. He is six feet tall and has been called the "peace maker" because whenever he sees a quarrel he tries to stop it. This man has five daughters. He put his money at once in the bank, and says that as soon as his girls are old enough he will send them to Russia to educate them. The other man speaks of going to Russia to open a curio shop.

We have been told by some of our native friends, that this this sad affair about the Prince, will draw the people closer to the Missionaries, so we can not help thinking that, "It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good."

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL MEETIFG.

Man proposes and God disposes. The Executive Council had been invited by the missionary, Rev. J. David Miller, to meet in Marysville, Pa.; but owing to the death and burial of his son, Mr. A. Kremer Miller, the meeting was held is Harrisburg, June 22d, 1891. All the members were present except Rev. Dr. Barkley.

The Superintendent reported that the church property in Sioux City, Iowa, has been transferred to the Board of Missions; that Wyoming Classis has withdrawn Nanticoke, Dushore and Freeland from the care of our Board, to give them aid from a sustentation fund of the Classis; and that the treasurer has received from Elder John L. Riegel, $500 to establish the Riegelsville Church-building Fund, for which the Council recorded a hearty vote of thanks to the giver.

The Church will be pleased to hear that the mission at Plymouth, Pa., has become self-supporting. The pastor, Rev. S. C. Meckel, built the church some years ago, gathered a congregation of earnest people, labored among them at great sacrifice, and now, even before any one could well expect it, discloses his willingness to relieve the Board. The Superintendent was instructed to extend to him and his people congratulations on their self-support, and to commend their example and spirit of self sacrifice.

Rev. John Gantenbein, D. D., of Portland, Oregon, was present; and in an interesting address of nearly an hour he gave the Board much valuable information concerning our work on the Pacific Coast. He went to Oregon as a missionary seventeen years ago, has seen the growth of the country and of missions through all this time, thoroughly understands the work, knows what the future demands of the present, and is a kind of bishop in the Portland-Oregon Classis. He is now in the East in the interest of the Pacific Coast work, and will shortly sail for Europe partly to see after getting from the missionary institutions there suitable young men willing to labor in America. The Council gave him letters of introduction, authorizing him to make inquiry in reference to securing missionaries, and to learn the conditions upon which these may be secured. He will report to the Board on his return. Rev. J. G. Biegert is his supply in his absence, from his people who on Dr. Gantenbein's return will be employed by the Board at Ablino, a suburb of Portland, and at one or two other points.

On taking up the roll we discovered that several missionaries had not reported, a few indeed not for two quarters. All wrong, brethren. The least you can do is to report promptly and regularly, especially now that the Board is paying you promptly.

The most puzzling case is that of Roanoke, Va. Rev. Lewis Reiter's report plainly shows that it is useless to try to get along without building at least a cheap church ; where shall we build it? Not in the air, surely ; and lot we have not, nor have we any money for one. Who will come to our help? He has been directed to canvass for his three interests, Basic City, Buena Vista and Roanoke, but with especial reference to the latter, for on this the others largely depend.

The supply of blanks for quarterly and yearly reports being exhausted, the Superintendent was instructed to prepare a revised form for both ; and he will be grateful to the missionaries, to members of the Board and to other pastors for suggestions in framing a more suitable form than the old.

The yearly meeting of the Board will be held in Lancaster, Pa., September 21st, 1891, at 2 P.M.

MISSIONS.

From Meyersdale we accompanied Rev. A. J. Heller to Berlin where was the next field of operations for us. A short ride by train and then up a long, steep hill on foot and we were in the ancient borough. We often heard of the place and knew that here are many who love our Reformed Zion—but had not visited the place, neither met many of these good people. Our home while here, was mostly with Elder Josiah Poorbaugh—two of whose daughters are in Japan, doing noble work for the Master and Church. We are under many obligations to this good brother—for he it was, who, in the absence of the pastor, took us among the members of the Berlin charge. In this charge we found the people in a condition making it impossible to do as much for the cause we represented as some other charges. They have a Church building that cost them $17,000, and such an expense must of necessity bear heavily upon the members. But we are pleased to say that the Church is now finished with the exception of putting in heaters —and the debt is almost wiped out. It is hardly necessary to say that they have an exceedingly fine Church building, of which they justly feel somewhat proud. We came here with the knowledge that these people had some burdens to bear and therefore did not expect as much for our work as from some other charges. We got the sum of $55—the greater part in cash. The missionary society did its share in this good work. Brother Kremer has an interesting people.

A few days must now be spent in Zion's charge under the pastoral care of Rev. A. J. Heller. But the good pastor being very much interested in the movement at Cumberland, had, before our coming, collected some funds and had them ready when we arrived. On Sunday we visited one congregation and then spent two days in visiting some of the members. The weather was warm—yes, hot—and the hills very high. Pastor Heller stood at helm manfully and piloted us around—while the mare Maude had about all she could do to draw the load. The readers of the MESSENGER must not suppose that a house to house canvass was made. No, that would be more than could be reasonably expected of us. Only some of the families were visited and the cause presented. This charge has rather an enviable reputation for liberality towards the benevolent objects of the Church. We expected something liberal here and were not disappointed. We received the snug sum of $102—nearly all in cash—and have the promise of something additional. It will be seen that we received from the charges in and about Berlin the sum of $157. We expect still more from parties that we could not see at the time. The Reformed Church is certainly strong in this part of the State. There is seemingly much wealth among our people here and they are ready to help the interests of the Church, which is something to be commended. The Church buildings are generally very good. Mt. Zion needs a new church, and the good people there are talking of building—and if they do, it will not be a small or insignificant affair. Pastor Heller and the people of the congregation will see eye to eye in this matter, without a doubt, and a new Church home will be the result. We had a very enjoyable time with pastors Heller and Kremer. They know how to entertain "strangers," and do not forget to entertain them.

* * * * *

In our article speaking about the Meyersdale congregation we were made to say that the church at that place cost $3000. We said—or meant to say—$14,000. Quite a difference, as the reader will observe. D. S. F.

THE YOUNG PROPHETESS :

A TALE OF THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

BY REV. R. LEIGHTON GERHART.

CHAPTER XXVII.

ALHADAN'S STORY.

It was a large room ; the marble floor was tesselated ; in the middle stood a vase-like basin of variegated stone, highly polished, from which spouted a thin stream of water ; the walls and ceilings were panelled, adorned with pilasters and painted in vivid colors and arabesques ; arouud the whole room ran a marble divan upholstered in crimson velvet fringed with gilt. The farther end of the apartment was finished off with arches supported by light, fluted, airy columns, the intervening spaces closed by gilded latticework. Through the lattice one could see hundreds of birds of every variety, from the gorgeous maccaw, crested cockatoo, redbreasted parakeet to the orange-plumed, black-winged oriole and vivid blue roller bird. This was the aviary, and the birds kept up an incessant chirping, whistling and calling, as they flew from perch to perch, or gathered in flocks about the grain provided them for food.

But the sight that attracted and held the attention of Alhadan, was a group of people, consisting of the Emir and two strangers, seated on a divan at one side of the saloon. One of the strangers was a man of venerable appearance, his complexion indicating great vitality, his dark eyes keen and penetrating. A linen robe of finest web, bound with a girdle of red silk, clothed him from head to foot. Over his bosom, on the hilt of his dagger, flamed a cluster of blood-red rubies, as large as an orange. He wore the green turban, a color that none but an Emir could assume, the front lit up by a crescent of pearls and diamonds, so deftly set that the net-work of silver uniting them was wholly invisible. At this man's feet, on a wide Persian rug, soft and thick, her feet folded under her, sat a superbly beautiful woman. She was reclining indolently back on the upper part of the divan,—for part of the divan was about a foot higher than the other,—supporting her head on her delicate knuckles, her oval face turned upwards, as though listening to some remark the venerable man had made. Her arms were encircled with bracelets thickly set with jewels ; her fingers weighted with gems ; about her neck were three strings of large topazes of delicate pink, finely cut and tied together with small links of gold, while the masses of her black hair were interwoven with coils of lustrous pearls ; a robe of soft yellow silk, open over the bosom to display a tunic of cambric covered with finest needle-work, descended in sheeny folds below the knees. Her girdle was a yellow Cashmere shawl. A yellow vest of satin, the wide, pointed sleeves affording full play to the arms, and voluminous trousers of white silk, with pointed morocco slippers, completed her attire ; though we must not forget to say, that the vest was covered in front and on the sleeves with an intricate pattern wrought of seed-pearls, while the front and hem of her robe was embroidered with flowers in silver.

On one side the divan, three or four yards distant, stood a group of dancing-girls holding timbrels, their heads covered with bandelettes strung with gold sequins, their slender ankles encircled with silver bells, and their arms with gold and silver bands. Their faces were flushed and their eyes sparkled as from the effort of an elaborate dance ; but, though resting, the attitudes they assumed were graceful and picturesque in a marked degree. On the opposite side, stood two handsomely-attired Ethiopians, of a stature and strength of limb fairly gigantic ; they were mutes, and dull and lizard-like of eye and stolid of face they stood facing their master, silent and motionless, as if carved of ebony. On a rug at the feet of these men sat several musicians.

Through the high orgive windows the sunlight streamed in floods of glory, streaking the tesselated floor with broad swaths of shining gold, irradiating the splashing fountain, and resting bright and warm on the Persian rug on which rested the beautiful woman.

This was the sight that caught the eye of Alhadan, as he entered the saloon. Noting his approach, Emir Aboulias said, addressing his guests :

"Here comes the slave of whom I spoke. Think you four thousand pieces of gold were too much for him?"

The venerable man fixed his eye coolly on Alhadan, and answered :

"He is strong and graceful, but such a price argues gifts of mind not often found in a slave."

"He hath them," remarked Emir Aboulias, quietly.

Prince Joussef—for that was the stranger's name—elevated his eyebrows and remained silent.

At the first word of the Emir, the beautiful woman turned also to look at the slave, though in a languid and indifferent manner, but her eye had rested on him scarcely a moment before her cheek flushed, then paled, and starting eagerly forward, as if to rise, she ejaculated below her breath, "Otho!" But the name had no sooner escaped her lips than, evidently desiring to conceal the fact of her recognition, she sank back on the divan, turned her face, lit with blushes, downward, and began playing idly with the fringe on her Cashmere girdle ; on her lips there had come a half-amused smile.

When Alhadan came within a few feet of the divan, he prostrated himself, and bending forward, touched the cool marble with his forehead ; then rising he assumed an erect attitude.

"Sir," he said, calmly addressing his master, "I await your commands."

"You are a Christian?" queried Prince Joussef, abruptly.

"Yes, my lord, I am a Christian."

"Praise God then for His mercy ! You are in the land of the true believer, and we will make a good Mussulman of you. Know you the Koran?"

"I accept no book as coming from God but the Bible, and will read none," answered Alhadan, feeling that any ambiguity in his answer would be cowardly.

"Dog ! swine-eater !" said the Prince, perfectly calm. "Your master should compel you to curse the Nazarene, or take off your head !"

The young man flushed, then replied boldly :

"Many have suffered death rather than deny the faith ; and should I be put to the test, think you my Lord and Saviour would desert me?"

Prince Joussef was about to reply again, but Emir Aboulias, who was a man of noble and liberal spirit, interfered :

"I have sent for you, Alhadan, that Prince Joussef and the lady Zobeide may hear from your lips the wondrous story of the children's army, of which, from what you have said, I judge you were a leader. Speak, then, O Alhadan, 'tis the hour of rest, and we would fain have you please our ears, as you so well can. 'Tis a marvellous tale !"

"Most noble Emir," answered Alhadan, again prostrating himself, "I fear it will prove a tedious story to Prince Joussef and the beauteous lady Zobeide, but at thy command, I will tell it."

"While we listen to this wondrous story," said the Emir to his guests, "we will partake of some refreshments." With this he clapped his hands, and immediately a slave appeared carrying a square rug of cloth of gold, which he spread out on the marble pavement, and at once retired. Then came a second, bearing a small silver table, about a foot high, richly inlaid with precious stones, which he placed in the centre of the rug and withdrew. Then a third appeared with a large golden waiter, covered with dishes of luscious fruits, delicious cakes, and fine confectionery. The dishes were of gold and of crystal, rimmed and studded with jewels—red tourmerlanes, delicate blue lapis lazuli, pearly moonstones, costly sunstones, garnets and other stones of value.

"Now," said the Emir, as, rising, he conducted his guests to the table, around which they seated themselves, "we are ready to listen."

And standing in that splendid saloon, in that far-off land, Alhadan told, in simple, affecting language, the story of the Children's Crusade—their hopes, their plans, their long marches, and the strange adventures that befell them in the way, all of which are already known to the reader. As he proceeded, the interest of his listeners increased, and when he described the terrible march over the Alps, an exclamation of amazement fell even from the lips of Prince Joussef. At length he paused, for he had come to the time when the Crusaders embarked on the ships, provided by Christopher Nicholati, to cross the sea.

"Courage, Alhadan !" spoke the Emir, "'tis a story past belief ; but let us hear of this man's treachery."

The narrator's head had sunk forward on his breast, but at these kind words, he raised it, and controling the emotions that agitated him, began again :

"In an evil hour—oh ! that God should have permitted such a disaster to come upon us—"

"The will of God be done !" ejaculated Prince Joussef, piously. And the Emir taking advantage of the interruption again softly clapped his hands, Immediately a slave came and removed the silver waiter and the dishes of fruit. Following him appeared another bearing a waiter of gold, containing slim-necked pitchers of irridescent glass filled with wine, with cups of gold studded with jewels and showing the goldsmith's highest skill.

When the Prince saw the wine he smiled, shook his head reprovingly at his host, in playful reminder of the Koran, which prohibited wine to the true believers, then, sighing resignedly, he permitted his goblet to be filled, and drank the contents with evident relish.

"Proceed," said the Emir to Alhadan.

"In an evil hour," again began the young man, "we confided ourselves to this wretch, and set sail to cross the sea. Our ships, seven in number, were soon scattered by a tempest ; nor did they ever come together again. So I can only speak of what happened to those who were on the same vessel with myself,—though, unless lost at sea, no doubt as sad a fate befell the others as came upon us. That wretch Nicholati—it cannot be but that God will bring his crime upon his own head !—carried us directly to Alexandria, and there—there—sold us—all—sold us—little and big, strong and weak, as slaves to the base infidel."

The last words slipped from the lips of Alhadan before he was aware of what he was saying, for absorbed in his story he had altogether forgotten the people in whose presence he stood. He had no sooner spoken the words than he was made aware of his mistake.

"Dog of a slave," cried Prince Joussef, angrily. "Do you dare to call the true believer a base infidel? By the camel of the Prophet, you deserve to die ! Emir Aboulias ! cut off his head !" But recollecting that such a proceeding would bring a sudden close to the story which he now desired to hear to the end, he seized his goblet, and burying his nose in it, drained it to the dregs. Then muttering, "God's will be done !" he held it out to be filled a third time.

"I beg your patience, my friend," soothingly, spoke the Emir ; "let the slave proceed," but he fixed his eye sternly on the young man, thus warning him not to repeat the offence.

"We soon left Alexandria. Seven of us, purchased by the same merchant, being in the party. We journeyed by land, all of us on foot, toward Palestine, which only as conquerors we had thought to see ; but as slaves we stood upon the sacred heights of Olivet, and looked down on Jerusalem. Then on we tramped over the heated and stony way—the way made sacred by our dear Lord's feet—until we passed the far-famed sea of Galilee.

"I have told you of a noble maiden—ah, the noblest and the purest of us all !—whose name was Madeleine. She was of our company. Her spirit sank when she discovered the treachery practised on us, and with the loss of hope her strength failed. From day to day we saw her cheek grow thin and pale ; her step, more languid. She spoke but little ; no word of complaint fell from her lips, but the pitiful looks she cast on me told me her heart was broken.

"We ascended the mountains beyond the inland sea, and here one evening, the splendor of the sinking sun casting a veil of glory over the land, she sank exhausted upon the soft moss beneath a fragrant cedar tree. She had leaned upon my shoulder nearly all that day, and hour by hour her weight grew more heavy, until I was compelled almost to carry her as we journeyed on. At midnight, when in her glory the cold moon made the far-off sea shine like a silver shield—at that hour when sacred silence reigned in earth and heaven—I saw her fair, saintly face grow deadly pale, and I knew that death was near. I knelt beside her ; she turned her eyes and looked at me ; and now she spoke, and spoke of hope. She could not tell why God had so dealt with us ; she thought perhaps we had done some wrong that had taken our power away ; but she knew that God was good, and that in that other world she would tread the streets of the New Jerusalem; and bade me meet her there ; bade me never doubt the goodness of our God, nor be recreant to our faith, but meet her there. She said, ''Tis better I should die,' and she smiled on me, and said again ; 'Our God is merciful, dear Otho ; my heart is full of peace.'

"And when the morning came, and the chill gray mist rose from the sea and curtained all the land, 'twas Madeleine's winding sheet, for beneath the cedar tree cold and dead she lay. Her dress was soiled and torn, her tender feet were bound about with rags to shield them from the flinty stones of our stony way ; she was worn and thin, but more beautiful to me than when in the freshness of her strength, she stood before me.

"There on the wooded, rocky height that looks on Galilee, I dug her grave, and there I buried her. This is my tale, Prince Joussef—" Alhadan tried to say more, but his emotions overcame him, and for a few moments he stood with head bowed down struggling for self-control. Then his grief burst all bounds, and raising his tear-stained face upward, and lifting his hands aloft as though appealing to heaven, he cried in a voice of deepest anguish :

"And here I stand, a slave ! My God, a slave !"

The beautiful woman lying on the divan had listened intently as the story proceeded. At first, she had studiously kept her eyes fixed on the ground, but at the name of Madeleine, she raised them to the face of the speaker, and from that time on, wholly absorbed in the pitiful narrative, she steadfastly gazed at him. When he told of Madeleine's death, she began softly to weep.

"I though not so to wound your heart, O Alhadan," said Emir Aboulias kindly. "God's decrees are wise ; His ways inscrutable. I will not keep you longer."

Alhadan made a low obeisance and withdrew.

"Is it not a wondrous tale? inquired the Emir, addressing his guests, as the young man disappeared.

"Yes, wonderful ! truly wonderful !" answered the Prince cooly, "but somewhat tedious in the ending," and he yawned lazily.

Emir Aboulias smiled faintly, and clapped his hands. In response to the summons, a slave came, took up the little table with the pitchers of wine, and silently withdrew. He had scarcely left the saloon before another entered carrying a silver basin of water, in which all delicately washed their hands. Then another slave brought a pot of perfume which was cast upon robes of the guests ; the beards of the gentlemen were also anointed with the fragrant essence.

Then rising, the three seated themselves once more on the divan, and at a signal from the Emir, the tinkling of the timbrels was heard, and the group of girls began an animated and graceful dance.

YOU get discouraged sometimes because you think you are accomplishing nothing. Do not be discouraged. You cannot tell how much good you do. You cannot estimate the results of your faithful life and work. Labor on steadily, faithfully. Sow the seed and water it. God will surely give the increase. Though you do not see the fruit, it will be. "Your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

The Family.

"I WILL MAKE THE DRY LAND SPRINGS OF WATER."

All my soul was dry and dead
Till I heard that Jesus bled;
Bled and suffer'd in my place,
Bearing sin in matchless grace.

Then a drop of heavenly love
Fell upon me from above,
And by secret, mystic art.
Reached the centre of my heart.

Glad the story I recount,
How that drop became a fount,
Bubbled up a living well,
Made my heart begin to swell.

All within my soul was praise,
Praise increasing all my days;
Praise which could not silent be:
Floods were struggling to be free.

More and more the waters grew,
Open wide the flood-gates flew,
Leaping forth in streams of song
Flowed my happy life along.

Lo, a river clear and sweet
Laved my glad, obedient feet!
Soon it rose up to my knees,
And I praised and prayed with ease.

Now my soul in praises swims,
Bathes in songs, and psalms, and hymns;
Plunges down into the deeps,
All her powers in worship steeps.

Hallelojah! O my Lord,
Torrents from my soul are poured!
I am carried clean away,
Praising, praising all the day.

In an ocean of delight,
Praising God with all my might,
Self is drowned. So let it be:
Only Christ remains to me.

COVETOUSNESS.

It has been said that the great sin of the Church is covetousness. Whether this is true or not, we all know that covetousness is a great sin, and a sin which, there is reason to fear, prevails extensively among the membership of the Church. It is not generally looked upon as a low and degrading sin, which it really is. One who is covetous does not think he is guilty of a sin closely allied to fetichism, yet this is a fact. "Covetousness is idolatry." Idolatry is to give the creature the place in our hearts which belongs to the Creator. If, instead of trusting in God, we are "trusting in uncertain riches," we are covetous—are idolaters. Christians, especially those upon whom God has bestowed an abnndance of this world's goods, ought to guard against this sin. Every one ought to desire to know whether or not he has fallen into it. We should not content ourselves and quiet our conscience by the thought that we are giving to the Lord somewhat liberally; and even more generously than many of our brethren. We ought to be sure that, in the performance of this, as of every other duty, we are doing what God requires us to do.

What makes this sin peculiarly dangerous is that one may profess to be a Christian and yet be covetous, without losing social or religious standing among respectable people. If he were a thief or a drunkard, he would soon be brought into disgrace. But he may keep on robbing the Lord and withholding "the tithes and offerings" all his life, and yet be considered a respectable man.

It is, without doubt, the prevalence of this sin in the Church that causes the great lack of means for carrying forward the missionary work of the Church. If all were free from this form of idolatry and giving as the Lord has prospered them, the treasuries of all the Boards would be filled to overflowing, and from the opened windows of heaven God's blessing would descend upon the whole Church.—United Presbyterian.

THE EVILS OF SCOWLING.

I have a special message for woman—one don't—small as a word, but mighty in influence. It is this: Don't scowl. Scowling spoils faces. Before you know it, my sister, your forehead will resemble a small railroad map. There is a grand trunk line from your cowlick to the bridge of your nose, intersected by parallel lines running east and west, with curves arching your eyebrows; and oh, how much older you look for it! Scowling is a habit that steals upon us unawares. We frown when the light is too strong, and when it is too weak. We tie our brows into a knot when we are thinking, and knit them even more tightly when we cannot think.

There is no denying there are plenty of things to scowl about. The baby in the cradle frowns when something fails to suit. "Constitutional scowl," we say. The little toddler who likes sugar on his bread and butter tells his trouble in the same way when you leave the sugar off. "Cross," we say about the children; and "worried to death," about the grown folks, and as for ourselves, we can't help it. But we must. Its reflex influence makes others unhappy; for face answereth unto face in life as well as in water. It belies our religion. We should possess our souls in such peace that it will reflect itself in placid countenances. If your forehead is rigid with wrinkles before forty, what will it be at seventy?

There is one consoling thought about these marks of time and trouble—the death angel almost always erases them. Even the extremely aged in death often wear a smooth and peaceful brow, thus leaving our last memories of them calm and tranquil. But our business is with life. Scowling is a kind of silent scolding. It shows that our souls need sweetening. For pity's sake, let us take a sad-iron, or a glad-iron, or smoothing tool of some sort, and straighten these creases out of our faces before they become indelibly engraved upon our visage.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A CARELESS DOLL.

Virginia Cleveland, I declare!
You're nothing but a constant care!
Such habits I must try and cure—
This time you'll get a scolding sure!
Of course you're old enough to know,
(How many times I've told you so!)
It's very wrong to run away—
Besides, it wasn't nice to say
That Maud and Ethel teased you to—
For shame! A doll as big as you!

Dear me! this muddy stain, I guess,
Will spoil your dotted muslin dress.
I had to put it in the tub,
And wash, and wring, and scrub and rub.
Perhaps you were not all to blame—
But you were careless just the same.
I might have dropped you in the sand
That time I heard the circus-band.
And Rover ran—he heard it, too—
And possibly he stepped on you!
Oh, if he did, why then you see,
I was the careless one, maybe.
To scold myself will never do—
But then!—too bad, I scolded you!

STELLA'S VICTORY.

Stella Vinton had been down town for the first time in her life to make some purchases for her mother. She had walked down and was riding home. Mrs. Vinton had told her she might have five cents for herself if there was any change left, but she had been obliged to spend every cent, and was naturally just a little disappointed. She sat in the car with her fare in her hand, waiting for the conductor to come for it.

He came along presently, and she held it out toward him, but he did not see it, and went on to the front of the car, then he stepped off the front platform, and waiting a moment, jumped on the rear again.

"He's forgotten me. He is not coming for my fare. I shall have to give it to him when I get out," she thought.

"No, I wouldn't, it is his place to come for it," the tempter suggested.

"That would be cheating. You have had your ride and ought to pay for it," whispered conscience.

"Of course, but it is not my place to make the conductor take it."

"It is everybody's business to be honest."

"Ma promised me five cents too."

"But she would not like you to get it this way."

"She need never know. I would not tell her."

"But you would know, and Jesus would know, and you profess to be a little Christian."

"So I do, and I will be, and I won't cheat."

Just then the conductor called out Baker street, and Stella Vinton rose to leave the car, as she did so, she put the five cents in the conductor's hand.

"Thank you," he said, smiling.

Stella went home and told her mother of her temptation.

Mrs. Vinton opened her purse, and taking out a twenty-five cent piece put it in Stella's hand.

"This is for my honest little girl," she said, kissing her.

So Stella had double reason to be glad that she had gained the victory.

FOR BOYS.

In one of his talks to boys, Dr. Parkhurst says: "It is manliness that tells, in this world and the next; and a person is not going to be manly when he is forty, unless the beginnings of it show themselves in him when he is ten. And then a boy who has got his little kernel of manhood in him will show it in his home."

There is only one time to begin to be a man, and that is before you get to be a man. You will be and do, after you are grown up, just what you begin to be and do, before you are grown up.—The Welcome.

Pleasantries.

A colored philosopher says: "Life am mos'ly made up o' prayin' fer rain an' wishin' 'twould clear off."

A circus never runs too long for spectators, but let a sermon run over forty minutes, and a congregation can't sit still.

At a Sabbath-school in Lowell, Mass., in answer to the question, "What is the greatest church festival?" a little orphan of six years promptly responded, "The strawberry festival."

It is related of the late Dr. Hodge of Princeton Theological Seminary that he once asked a student for a definition of eternity. The student, after some hesitation, replied that he used to know the definition. but had forgotten it. "Oh, my, my, my!" exclaimed Dr. Hodge, bringing his hand down forcibly upon the table, "What a calamity! The only man in the universe that ever knew what eternity is has forgotten."

TOPSY-TURVY.

We sometimes almost think it would be well not to read the newspapers now-a-days at all, or if we do, to brace our nerves and try to retain our balance. As matters now stand, our daily supply of news is largely of a sensational character, and we are in danger of coming to think that the world has gone topsy-turvy; that it is in some danger of being turned upside down. Let any one just glance at some of the strange things that are taking place around him from day to day, and let him ask himself whether at times he does not feel somewhat giddy. The Czar of all the Russias, the most powerful monarch in the world, cannot travel from St. Petersburg to Moscow without a guard of soldiers with him on the cars, and columns of them on the outside all along the road. The side of the car on which he sits must be lined with steel through which no bullet can penetrate. Look, however, at England so sedate, so law-abiding, convulsed by the baccarat scandal, with its throne, it is said, shaking to its foundation. Look at Philadelphia, the city of brotherly love, with its recent disclosures. Look also at every day's report of "wrong doing and outrage with which the earth is filled." But then let us, at the same time, bear in mind that these outbreaks of sin and iniquity are after all simply phenomenal. Back of them the kingdom of God is quietly, persistently, moving forward, and just because its progress is so noiseless, its wonderful strides are scarcely noticed in the secular papers.

AS YET MERE EARTHEN VESSELS.

As we cast our eyes over the religious world, we see many things that surprise us. They almost lift us off of our feet, as we look back at them,—of course, from our own point of view. What means the expulsion of the poor Jews from Russia, a Christian country, reminding us of the barbarities of the Middle Ages? There is, however, enough to arrest attention nearer home. Such people as the Dunkers, the United Brethren, the Evangelical Association (the Albrecht Lente) hitherto the most peaceful people among themselves, have broken out in fierce contentions, the conservatives moving too slow and the progressives too fast for the rest of the army. —The Covenanters around Pittsburgh have expelled a half dozen of their best preachers because they voted at an election under the Federal Constitution which has not the name of God in it. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has voted one of their best theological professors out of his chair, and Union Theological Seminary has voted that he should remain where he is, thus rebuking what it no doubt regards as the "madness of the Assembly."—Some years ago the Congregationalists, or some of them, tried their best to oust Professor Smyth from Andover Seminary, and the question still hangs fire in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, a purely secular court. —The Episcopalians are divided into two camps, notwithstanding their faith in the Episcopate, the older one apparently winking at rationalistic views, drawing converts from all denominations but giving some of them up to the Roman Catholic Church.—A part of the Unitarians have landed apparently in downright infidelity, and some of them have approached so near the evangelical faith that it is now somewhat difficult to tell whether they are orthodox or heterodox.—The Roman Catholics have shown that they are not such bad people as they were formerly supposed to be—enemies to our free republic—but friends of free republican institutions in both the new and the old world. As an offset to this, Father Mollinger has been reenacting scenes in this country which were common in Europe during the Middle Ages, and are still so in certain parts of the Catholic world, which it had been thought had passed away. Hundreds and thousands of poor people, afflicted with all kinds of diseases, the blind, the deaf, the halt, came from distant parts of the country to Pittsburgh a short time ago, spent their money in traveling with the expectation of being healed, and with perhaps, a few exceptional cases, returned to their homes no better than when they came—worst most likely, because they have been disappointed. Such exhibitions of our religious life might tempt us to think that there must be some kind of weakness in Christianity, because it does not prevent such abnormal expressions of its nature. But thus it has always been, Christianity has survived, and in the course of time, raised good but erring people out of their one-sidedness, their errors, or their remaining depravity, and enabled them to walk at liberty on a higher plane of life. The treasure has been committed to earthen vessels.

TOWN AND COUNTRY.

In the recent report of the Proceedings of Westmoreland Classis, the remark occurred that whilst there was an encouraging increase of membership in the town congregations, those in the country had been barely holding their own during the past year. In one of the pastoral reports at the late meeting of Clarion Classis, also we find these words: "The charge at present, though in a good state morally and religiously, and in a fair condition financially, is not increasing numerically." And among the reasons given for this failure of growth, we find the following: "Many of our young people are compelled to go to the West, to the oil fields, to the coal mines or to the more flourishing towns and cities at a distance from us, to make a living."

The condition of things, thus described as existing in one whole Classis, in one instance, and, in another, noticed more particularly by an individual pastor, is one worthy of more than a passing notice. It is one that most probably prevails throughout the whole length and breadth of the Church. There may be exceptions. But this is probably the rule. The country places are almost if not entirely at a stand still. The towns, at least many of them, are increasing rapidly in population and wealth.

Traveling with an intelligent elder of our Church a few days ago, he informed the writer that in making the annual assessment and registry of voters in the township in which he lives, he found, two years ago, twenty-one voters less than the year before; and that having gone over about one fourth the territory on the same business, a short time before this conversation took place, he had found six voters than last year, and expected to find at least as great a falling off as he did before. This more than bears out the statement made above that the country places are at a stand-still. But this is probably an exception. It is to be hoped so at least. But it is not easy to see why it should be so regarded. It is one of the most fertile and productive townships of the county in which the writer resides, and there are perhaps more evidences of prosperity among the farmers in that district than anywhere else in the county. According to these figures there is not only no increase here, but a very rapid decrease. And it cannot fail to have its effect on the membership of the Church; for we cannot suppose that only people of worldly character go to the towns and Christians remain in the country.

What is here stated is also borne out by the result of the late census. In one of the reports coming from the office of the Superintendent of the Census, stress is laid upon the rapid increase of the population of towns and cities, and the actual decrease of that of many country districts. There are, of course, reasons for this state of things, but it is not the object of this article to point them out. A discovery of the reasons will not in any way alter the facts in the case. It is the facts, and not the reasons for their existence, that are important, especially to a denomination having so large a portion of its churches and membership in the country as ours has.

We are not exclusively a country church. Very many of our strongest congregations are in the towns and cities. But a large portion of our strength is in the country. There is nothing in this fact to be regretted. The conservative and substantial character of our Church is no doubt largely owing to the fact that we have such a large portion of our membership in the country. But the population is drawing to the cities. Our young people are leaving the farm and going to town. So many of them are doing this of late as to make it hard for our country congregations to hold their own. And our town congregations are increasing in membership. They not only get the benefit of the young people who grow up in their own families. The expansion of business in the town is such that these find positions at home as they grow up. But the town congregations are continually being recruited by the young people who go to the town from the country. And these young people from the country often turn out to be among their best and most substantial members.

A few years ago there was a discussion as to the relative value of country and town congregations at one of our Synods, which was afterwards continued in the MESSENGER. It seems to be demonstrated that this is no longer a practical question. The young people of our country congregations are going to the towns, and we must go there with our churches, if we desire to retain them in our denomination, and if as a Church we wish to grow. Our Home Missionary efforts must be made in towns and cities or they will not succeed. It matters little how we answer the question as to the relative value of a town or country congregation. If we want any new congregations, we must go to the towns to get them. The expanding population makes room for them there, and there alone will efforts to gather new congregations be successful. This ought to be recognized by the Boards having these matters in charge, and no doubt it is so recognized and that their measures are taken accordingly.

But one word more remains to be said. The country congregations ought not to become discouraged. They ought to put forth all proper efforts to maintain themselves. They are doing an important work. There are the very best reasons for their continued existence.

They furnish a large portion of the money needed to begin and maintain new work in the towns and cities. And it requires money, and a great deal of it, to do such work. And we need the country congregations to furnish this money. And they can feel that they are putting their money where it will do the most good for the cause of Christ and for the future of their own Church.

The country congregation is not to regard itself as doing no good when it merely holds its own. Holding its own means that it receives from year to year enough members to make up for its losses by death and removal. These are often heavy. The country congregation is thus not standing still but is actively engaged in training those growing up in the community for heaven or for usefulness on earth in the congretion to which they may ultimately remove.

The writer does not believe our country population will continue to decrease permanently. The labor of the farmer is needed. Farming will be more remunerative after awhile again. As towns, and mining, and manufacturing increase there will be a better demand for produce. Farms will be divided. Land will be better tilled. And country districts will maintain twice their present population. Country churches will benefit by this. L.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES IN CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The closing exercises of Calvin College, this year, were unusually enjoyable. During the year the College had passed through severe trials, but had made such experience of divine help, that all connected with it felt thankful and hopeful when the school-year closed with bright prospects for the future. Another encouraging feature of this Commencement was the great number of visitors from a distance.

On Sunday afternoon the Reformed Young People's Societies of Clevand held their anniversary in the Second Reformed church. This anniversary is celebrated in connection with the College Commencement, because the students generally take active part in these societies. The exercises on this occasion consisted in declamations and songs by the young people and addresses by several pastors, one of which was delivered by Rev. W. Stearly of Grace church. The church was full and all seemed to feel the liveliest interest in the proceedings.

In the evening the same church was filled again to hear the baccalaureate sermon preached by Dr. Rust of Tiffin.

On Monday the German Literary Society of the College held its anniversary in the college hall. Some time before the students had arranged a concert and had realized a little more than fifty dollars from it. With this sum they had renovated the hall, and it now looked neat and inviting. It was well filled by an appreciative audience.

On Tuesday the alumni met. They had a banquet in the College refectory with toasts and short addresses, and then organized themselves into an alumni association. Steps were taken to utilize "Jung Amerika," the College-monthly, as a medium of correspondence and intercourse, and an orator was elected for next year's meeting.

On Wednesday the Commencement proper was held. The graduating class consisted of three, two of whom will enter a theological seminary, one in Tiffin and other in Lancaster. Two of their addresses were in German, one in English, all were listened to with the closest attention. The college hall was on this occasion, filled to overflowing, so much so, that those coming late found no room inside. There was present a very large number of former students, a fact especially gratifiying to the professors, besides the great majority of the audience consisted of intelligent and respectable people, many of whom spoke very favorably of the literary and Christian character of the entertainment.

By a misunderstanding, caused by the President's continued absence, one oration and one important meeting had to be omitted in this year's exercises, but this did not seem to detract from the general satisfaction felt by all present. All expressed themselves highly gratified by the evident progress made here in many respects.

WEST SUSQUEHANNA CLASSIS.

This Classis held its annual sessions in Christ Reformed church at Madisonburg, Centre Co., Pa., May 20-23. The retiring President, Rev. Geo. W. Gerhard, preached the opening sermon based on St. John iv. 14. There were only two ministers absent who were both excused. All the charges were represented by delegate elders.

Rev. John Dotterer was elected President, Rev. W. A. Haas was re-elected Treasurer, and Rev. I. W. Hendricks was elected Corresponding Secretary.

All the apportionments of Synod upon this Classis were cheerfully accepted and apportioned upon the several charges. Synod's requests and recommendations were also heard and due obedience was promised in every instance. The following resolutions were adopted on the appeal from the Society for the Relief of Ministers and their Widows :

1. That we commend this worthy cause to the prayerful consideration of the members of Classis.

2. That each pastor take a collection annually for this purpose and pay the proceeds to the Treasurer of Classis.

3. That the funds so realized be used to buy life memberships for the members of Classis under the supervision of Classis.

The following report on the Reformed Church Hymnal was unanimously adopted.

We have given it as careful an examination as the brief time allotted to us would permit. The Hymnal reflects credit on the committee and upon the Church. It is churchly ; following the order of the church year and having hymns which correspond to the different seasons, Besides it contains a large collection of miscellaneous hymns we lack in the Eastern Hymn Book. These are intended for devotional and prayer services and are most excellently adapted for that purpose. We find that it contains the best modern hymns which are not contained in the Psalms and Hymns and many not in the Eastern Hymn Book. The tunes selected are of the old masters which have enshrined themselves into the hearts of the Christian community. In view of these facts and that the Church is wanting just such a collection of hymns and tunes and the further fact that it has received the unanimous and unequalified endorsement of the best leaders of choirs in our Classis, we recommend to your reverend body the adoption of the Hymnal to be used in the several churches in the Reformed Church in the U. S.

The following is the action of Classis in reference to the Missionary Guardian. . . . In order that the subscription list may be enlarged sufficiently to justify its publication, in its present form, that our people may have the opportunity to become better informed in relation to all our missionary operations, your committee recommends the following action :

Resolved, That the pastors and elders be requested to use all proper efforts to circulate the Missionary Guardian, that our ministers speak on this subject from the pulpit and, if possible, to have some one in each congregation who will seek to get subscribers by personal solicitation, so that the publication of this periodical may be sustained and information on our missionary work may be more widely disseminated.

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."---Minutes of Synod, 1888.

The following brethren were elected delegates to Synod : Revs. W. A. Haas, S. H. Eisenberg and Geo. W. Gerhard, primarii ; Revs. A. A. Black, Miles O. Noll and L. D. Steckel, secundi ; Elders C. M. Bower, Esq., Isaac F. Brown and Jos. Neagley, primarii ; Elders Prof. Wm. Moyer, E. B. Kram and D. K. Miller, secundi.

The pastoral relation between Rev. D. O. Shoemaker and the Nittany Valley charge was dissolved. Revs. M. O. Noll, S. H. Eisenberg and A. A. Black were appointed a committee to supply the charge. Rev. D. O. Shoemaker was dismissed to Somerset Classis, Pittsburgh Synod. Classis reluctantly takes this congenial, useful brother's name off its roll and feels a sense of its loss.

Rev. John Dotterer, in view of the delicate character of his health, obtained permission to engage in such secular employment as he may be able to bear till his strength shall have sufficiently returned to resume the labors and responsibilities of the active ministry. Brother Dotterer has the deepest sympathy of his brethren in West Susquehanna Classis, and we doubt not, of the whole Church, who will not forget him in their prayers at the Throne.

After carefully examining the parochial reports, the Committee on the State of Religion feels moved to say, that the pastors seem more deeply actuated by the spirit of the Master in the prosecution of their work than ever before. It also laid before Classis for adoption expressions of gratitude to God for the good health of our ministers and people and for the decrease in the mortality list. The benevolent contributions have grown encouragingly. The missionary spirit is deepening itself in the hearts of our people. Classis supports five beneficiary students.

Good words were spoken in behalf of the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER, and it was recognized as a strong, helpful arm in our work.

The sessions of Classis were very harmonious and pleasant. The people of Madisonburg were lavish in hospitality and kindness, for which Classis expressed appreciation and thanks.

Poetry.

LIFT ME UP.

Out of myself, dear Lord,
O lift me up!
No more I trust myself in life's dim maze,
Sufficient to myself in all its devious ways,
I trust no more, but humbly at Thy throne
Pray, "Lead me, for I cannot go alone."

Out of my weary self,
O, lift me up!
I faint, the road winds upward all the way;
Each night but ends another weary day.
Give me Thy strength, and may I be so blest
As on "the heights" I find the longed-for rest.

Out of my selfish self,
O, lift me up!
To live for others, and in living so
To be a blessing wheresoe'er I go,
To give the sunshine, and the clouds conceal,
Or let them but the silver clouds reveal.

Out of my lonely self,
O, lift me up!
Though other hearts with love are running o'er,
Though dear ones fill my lonely home no more,
Though every day I miss the fond caress,
Help me to join in others' happiness.

Out of my doubting self,
O, lift me up!
Help me to feel that Thou art always near,
That though 'tis night and all around seems drear,
Help me to know that though I cannot see,
It is my Father's hand that leadeth me.

Science and Art.

A correspondent of the Lancet who has suffered from sleeplessness has found the following to be an effectual remedy in his own case: After taking a deep inspiration he holds his breath till discomfort is felt, then repeats the process a second and third time. As a rule, this is enough to procure sleep. A slight degree of asphyxia is thus relied on as a soporific agent.

The people of the island of Sangir keep time by the aid of an hour glass, formed by arranging two bottles neck to neck. The sand runs out in half an hour, when the bottles are reversed. Close by them a line is stretched on which hang twelve sticks marked with notches from one to twelve, with a hooked stick which is placed between the hour last struck and the next one. One of these djaga keeps the time for each village, for which purpose the hours are sounded on a gong by the keeper.

Hints and Recipes.

A small box filled with lime and placed on a shelf in a pantry or closet will absorb dampness and keep the air dry and sweet.

It may not be generally known that cranberries can be kept perfect all winter by picking them over carefully in the fall and immersing them in cold water. The Journal of Health recommends as quite infallible the following remedy for curing the tendency to dandruff: Take borax, half a teaspoonful; common sulphur, one heaping teaspoonful; pour over it one pint of boiling water. When cool pour into a bottle; agitate frequently for three or four days, then strain. Moisten the scalp with this three or four times a week. It is one of the most reliable preparations known.

STORING WOOLENS.—For several years I have used the very large, heavy paper flour sacks, thirty inches long, for storing woolens. I find they work perfectly. I put the clothes of each member of the family in a separate sack and write the name on the outside. I do not fill the sacks so full but that I can lay them on the machine and stitch the opening together. This is far easier and safer than pasting, and in the fall I merely cut this row of stitching off, thus shortening the sack only about a quarter of an inch each year. The filled sacks may be piled away in attic or closet, and require no further attention until needed again. Blankets and shawls may be stored in the same way. Furs should be put in pasteboard boxes and the lids pasted on by a strip of tough paper or muslin. If the articles are free from moths when put away in this manner they will be perfectly safe. A dozen sacks will cost but a trifle, and if taken care of will last several years.—Vera, in "Ladies' Home Journal."

FROM WHAT IS LEFT OVER.—The Household recommends the following ways in which appetizing dishes can be made from the little left over from a meal: 1. Take cold oatmeal, add one egg, a spoon of cream, and flour to stir stiff. Fry in little flat balls in a hot buttered skillet. Use cold rice in the same way. Always serve such cakes very warm; they fall if left to cool. 2. Nearly every family like corn meal mush, either in milk or fried crisp in drippings. If there is a cupful left and is just to be thrown away, wait a moment. Beat it up soft in a quart of milk, add a cup of molasses, one of raisins, and two eggs, with spices to suit taste. Bake two hours. It is a delicious pudding with sugar and cream. 3. Take the cup of rice left from breakfast, add a cup of cream, one-half cup sugar, the yolks of two eggs. Cook for a moment, and place in a glass dish. Use the two whites for the top and place bits of jelly upon it. Now you have a dish for tea with but little trouble.

HEGEL'S LOGIC. A Book of the Genesis of the Categories of the Mind. A Critical Exposition. By William T. Harris, LL.D., U. S. Commissioner of Education. Chicago: S. C. Griggs & Co. Price $1 25.

It is not surprising in view of the wide prevalence of a materialistic, or at least semi-materialistic philosophy, that attention is turned anew to Hegel in whom we find the opposite pole of thought. Though long under a cloud he is coming into the light again. There are many who believe he has a message for the present generation. At all events, it is well to make acquaintance with his system that we may know whether it contains any truth for us. Hegel, however, is an extremely difficult author. Not only is his thought profound, but the language in which it is expressed is of the most abstract kind. He needs an interpreter, and the reader trained to English modes of thought could have no better than Dr. Harris who began the study of Hegel as early already as 1858, and has ever since devoted himself to a mastery of the system. He, if any one, can clear up the obscurities of his author. The student of philosophy will find in this exposition of Hegel's Logic an open and free path to some of the profoundest thoughts of one of the profoundest philosophers.

THE INTERWOVEN GOSPELS AND GOSPEL HARMONY. By Rev. William Pittenger. New York: John B. Alden, Publisher. Price 59 cents, including postage.

This valuable little book comprises the four histories of Jesus Christ blended into a complete narrative in the words of the Gospels, with a complete interleaved harmony. It is the third edition of a work which we noticed when the first edition was issued, and which from the beginning met with no small degree of favor. The practical use of the book showed a lack which is now supplied, making it a Gospel Harmony as well as an interwoven text. It will be found very useful in the study of the Bible.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE BRIEFLY ANALYZED. By A. Schultze. Easton: H. T. Frueauff. Price 20 cents.

This takes up the books of the Old and New Testaments, gives their divisions and summarily sketches their contents. We trust it will serve its intended purpose to facilitate the study of the Word of God.

IN MEMORY OF REV. J. S. WAGNER.

At the annual convention of the Ladies' Classical Missionary Society, held in Amity Reformed church, Meyersdale, Pa., June 11, 1891, the following resolutions on the death of Rev. J. S. Wagner were adopted:

WHEREAS, Almighty God in His wisdom, has called to his eternal reward, our co-worker in Christ, Rev. J. S. Wagner.

Resolved, That while we are reminded that "God moves in a mysterious way" we bow in humble submission to His will, seeking to be faithful in our appointed work, until the Master calls us from time to eternity.

Resolved, That in his death the church has lost a faithful servant, the cause of missions a zealous champion, the New Centreville charge a loving pastor, and the community a respected citizen and friend.

Resolved, That we extend our deepest sympathy to those who mourn, commending them to Him who "doeth all things well" for that comfort which He alone can give.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Wagner, and that they be published in the church and county papers.

DIED.—In Walkersville, Frederick Co., Md., April 20th, 1891, Elder Christian Winebrenner, aged 91 years, 6 months and 11 days.

Father Winebrenner was born in the Glade Valley, Frederick county, Md., in 1799, and died within one mile of his birthplace. The last link connecting the present and past centuries in the history of the Glade Reformed church, he was buried at the latter within sight of the homestead farm where he was born. He came of Reformed parentage, and was from early life a member of the Glade church, and for many years an active and efficient elder of the congregation. He was a brother of Rev. John Winebrenner, founder of the sect known as Winebrenerians or Church of God, but he remained true to the faith of the church of his fathers. By occupation a farmer, he was successful in his chosen pursuit, and became prosperous and wealthy. His Creator had endowed him with a strong physical constitution, a genial, cheerful disposition, and a great attachment to home and family, and he seemed to enjoy life and its activities until the infirmities of age came on, when he found less and less pleasure in things here below, and longed more and more for release from the trials and troubles of earth, and for a higher and holier life in the world to come. Faithful in his church duties while able to go to the sanctuary, when the infirmities of his great age confined him to the house he enjoyed the visits of his pastor and Christian friends, their singing and prayers with him and for him, and he received the Holy Communion at his home when it was observed by his congregation at the church. He was quite liberal in his support of the church, especially his own congregation, and the churches of his community and surrounding country. His funeral took place at the Glade church April 23rd, Rev. S. M. Hench officiating, assisted by Rev. House of the M. E. church.

He leaves an aged widow, two sons, D. C. Winebrenner, of Frederick city, and Reverdy J. Winebrenner, of the Glade, three daughters, Mrs. Margaret Getzendaner, of West Virginia, Mrs. Harriet Fulton, of Walkersville, and Mrs. Emma Neidig, of Frederick, and a large number of grand and great-grandchildren. The funeral was atttended by a large assemblage of relatives, friends and the people of the community generally. "He was gathered to his fathers in a full age, ripe for the sickle, as a shock of corn cometh in, in his season." H.

DIED.—Near Mechanicstown, Md., May 12, 1891, Mrs. Lydia A. E. Smith, aged 42 years, 6 months and 11 days.

The subject of this notice was a faithful and consistent member of the Reformed church at Creagerstown, Md. The services of the sanctuary and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper were always to her a real means of grace.

The circumstances of her untimely death were peculiar. She was only sick a few hours, when, without warning, she suddenly fell asleep.

Scarcely were the news of her death made known, when word came that her father, who had been an invalid for a number of years, was found dead in his bed.

Both were buried at the same hour at Utica Mills Reformed church, attended by an immense concourse of people and mourning friends.

Mrs. Smith leaves a devoted husband and two infant daughters to mourn her loss. May the Lord comfort them in this hour of bereavement. PASTOR.

DIED.—Near Graceham, Md., June 8th, 1891, Mr. Burtus Bennett, aged 78 years and 3 months.

DIED.—Rocky Ridge, June 10th, 1891, Mr. John Valentine, aged 86 years, 2 mos. and 5 days.

TWENTIETH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF URSINUS COLLEGE.

The exercises connected with the annual commencement of Ursinus College began on Sunday, June 21st, with the baccalaureate sermon by Acting President H. W. Super, D.D., LL.D., from the text, Psalm clxxvii. 13, "Who is so great a God as our God?"

On Tuesday, at 10 A.M., the Board of Directors met and transacted important business in the interests of the institution.

In the evening at 8 o'clock the address before the Literary Societies was delivered by General D. H. Hastings, of Bellefonte, Pa. He chose for his subject, "What shall we do with the College graduate?"

The Alumni Association met on Wednesday at 10 A.M., in the college chapel. At 1 P.M. the Ursinus Union and friends of the college met.

The Senior class-day exercises were held at 2 P.M. The following was the programme of the occasion:

Essay, Mary Kratz; poem, Ada E. Schwenk; class history, Irvin C. Williams; class prophecy, Calvin D. Yost; presentation orators, J. E. Francis, P. Ellsworth Heimer.

In the evening the alumni oration was delivered by Rev. E. R. Cassaday, of Philadelphia, who took as his subject "Phases of Human Nature."

The Commencement proper was held on Thursday at 9.30 A.M. The exercises were held in a large tent erected upon the campus. The graduates numbered sixteen in all—the largest class that has gone out from the college. Eight of the number delivered orations or read essays as follows:

Irvin C. Williams, salutatory, "The Monastic Institutions of the Middle Ages," "The Mission of Art," Irvin P. Wagner; "The Christian Spirit among Young Men," Horace T. Wagner; "Genius Possible to All," J. G. Francia; scientific oration, "Importance of Mental Discipline," Frank B. Miller; "The Dream of Life," Miss Lillie Preston; philosophic oration, "The Destiny of the English Language," P. F. Heimer; valedictory, "Christian Education the National Safeguard," Calvin D. Yost.

The regular degrees conferred upon the members of the class, were then announced as follows:

George W. Filbert, Jr., D.S., Womelsdorf; Frank H. Fisher, A.B., Gouglersville; Jay G. Francis, A.B., Oaks; P. E. Heimer, A.B., Nazareth; Harry E. Jones, A.B., Easton; William H. Knipe, A.B., Philadelphia; May Kratz, B.L., Norristown; Frank B. Miller, B.S., Philadelphia; Lillie Preston, B.L., Ada E. Schwenk, B.L., William R. Smith, A.B., Hallie R. Vanderslice, B.L., Collegeville; Horace T. Wagner, A.B., Frederick; Irvin F. Wagner, A.B., Mahanoy City; Irvin C. Williams, A.B., Yerkes; Calvin D. Yost, A.B., McKeansburg, all of Pennsylvania.

Edward Charles Roest, of Bethlehem, A.M.; Rev. N. F. Peters, of Slatington, A.M.; W. S. B. Stewart, Esq., of York, A.M.; Prof. Davis Garber, of Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Ph.D.

Corner Stone Laying.

The laying of the corner-stone of Bomberger Memorial Hall took place at 2 o'clock, P.M. The exercises were conducted in the large tent, Acting President H. W. Super presiding.

Rev. H. H. W. Hibshman, of Tiffin, O., spoke on behalf of the directors, Dr. H. W. Super on behalf of the faculty, and Rev. J. W. Meminger, class of '84, of Lancaster, on behalf of the alumni. The concluding speech was made by Dr. D. E. Klopp, of Lebanon.

The stone was then formally laid according to the ritual of the Reformed church. Among the articles deposited in the stone were a list of the contributors of $1 and over, and the Bible used in the class rooms by Dr. Bomberger.

DEDICATION OF FAITH REFORMED CHURCH, READING, PA.

On Sunday, the 21st ult., Faith Mission was opened. This mission was founded by the late John Ermentrout.

Three services were held during the day. In the morning and afternoon Rev. George W. Williard, D.D., of Ursinus College, occupied the pulpit, and in the evening Rev. C. S. Gerhard, D.D., of Reading, preached.

The opening services proper took place in the afternoon. Rev. Dr. Bausman, Dr. Gerhard, Dr. Good, Steinmetz, L. K. Derr and H. Y. Stoner were present.

During the day the balance of debt, $3,500, was raised and the building, which cost all told $11,500, when dedicated will be free of debt.

The chapel presents a fine appearance. The windows are all memorial.

Rev. R. W. Miller, assistant pastor, assisted by the senior pastor, Rev. C. F. McCauley, D.D., took an active part in the enterprise.

After the sermon in the evening, Rev. Miller announced that Faith Mission was a free church—the first of the kind in the city of Reading, and gave an invitation to persons of every denomination to take part in the Sunday and week day services which will be regularly held there.

EDUCATION AND CARE OF FEEBLE-MINDED CHILDREN.

A Glance at the Pennsylvania Training School.

Mr. G. S. Griffith, of Baltimore, on his way home from attending the General Synod of the Reformed Church of the United States, held at Philadelphia, June 6th, visited the Training School for Feeble-Minded Children at Elwyn, Delaware county, Pa. This institution is delightfully situated on a high point overlooking a beautiful section of country, and about a mile from Media, Pa. The grounds are beautifully shaded with large oaks, and the farm and grounds cover about 200 acres. It is under the charge of Dr. Isaac N. Kerlin, who has held the position of Superintendent for over 26 years.

This is one of the largest institutions of this character in the United States. It has now 840 inmates (510 males and 330 females), and including the numerous officers and attendants, nearly one thousand persons are connected with it. The various buildings and dwellings of the officers and attendants form quite a little village. Two thousand two hundred and fifty unfortunates, of ages ranging from three to thirty years of age, have received training here during its existence.

I was courteously received and delightfully entertained by Dr. Kerlin, and spent sufficient time to become well acquainted with the workings of this admirably conducted institution. I cannot but speak in the most commendable terms of the excellent management and discipline. Scrupulous cleanliness and neatness prevailed in every department. It was my pleasure to visit this school about four years ago, and I noticed that since that time some very important improvements have been made, several additional buildings have been erected, and thus given greater facilities for classifying or grading the inmates according to their condition and capacity, and I can say that from the large experience the Doctor has had, together with all the necessary appliances at his command, he is now better prepared than ever for great usefulness among this unfortunate class of humanity. I regard this work as one of the noblest of all charities. The first building, being the centre building, is a large granite edifice, 230 feet front, surrounded by a cluster of about eight or nine other large granite structures, used for schools, dormitories, workshops and other purposes, and besides these, there are three other large stone buildings, which are called the "Hillside Group," where they have 375 inmates, comprising the worst forms of idiocy, imbecility and epilepsy, virtually separating them from the cases of those who are more susceptible of cure or improvement. The Doctor is about to erect another large building to meet the pressing demand, and in the course of a year or two will have at least 1000 under his care and training.

The system of training inaugurated by Dr. Kerlin is certainly admirable, and his good judgment in the selection of his corps of officers and other assistants has, to my mind, made this institution a model, and I believe it will rank the first of similar institutions in this country.

The Pennsylvania Legislature has been very liberal in appropriations for buildings and support of the institution, and an admirable Board of Managers, with Mr. Samuel A. Crozer as president, heartily co-operates with Dr. Kerlin in the work of ameliorating the condition of the different grades of unfortunates under his charge. The main feature in the training of these afflicted ones is to keep them actively engaged, developing habits of industry. Quite a large number are employed working on the farm, garden and in the dairy, others as tailors, bakers, shoemakers, etc. The kindergarten is an attractive feature in the school system, and they are also drilled in calisthenics. The inmates all seem very happy and their enjoyment is not overlooked. It was my pleasure to be there on Wednesday, on which day they give an entertainment by the inmates in the Keystone Hall which has a large organ of 720 pipes. The exhibition was very creditable and surprising. Above this hall is the theatre, which is supplied with the necessary scenery and stage settings for rendering operas, assisted by the teachers, and which are rendered in good style and would do credit to those of brighter minds. There are three brass bands which have two peculiar features, one is that they are composed of girls and boys, and the other that they are led by ladies. One of the bands, led by a lady of high musical ability, and which has 22 instruments, is very proficient, and gives a great deal of pleasure and enjoyment as well as helping the improvement of the inmates. The other bands are learners.

It is a great blessing and relief for parents and especially the poor who may be afflicted with children who are idiots, or imbeciles or the like, and where there is no chance of cure or improvement without the necessary training under skillful hands, and where the presence and care of such an unfortunate child proves a shadow and burden in the home, to know that such an institution as this gives them present relief and a bright hope for the future of their little unfortunate. Under this training, when there is a small spark of intelligence, it can be developed and frequently to such an extent that the little one may be greatly benefited, if not entirely cured, and restored to their parents.

All the teachers in the school are ladies, as it is thought they have more patience and tact and better calculated to win the love and confidence of the inmates than males. Every attention is given to the education of the inmates, to develop their mental and physical capacity, and especial care is taken of their moral and religious training.

Pennsylvania should indeed be proud of having such an institution under so able a superintendent and corps of assistants.

The Work Commenced in Maryland.

An institution was opened on February 19th at Owings Mills on a farm of one hundred and eighty six acres of good land purchased at a cost of ten thousand dollars. This institution is still in its infancy, yet it has already accomplished much good. There are now twenty-eight inmates, divided into two classes. Class No. 1 consists of twelve pupils, the youngest six years of age and the eldest seventeen. From 9.30 to 10.30 A. M., this class is drilled in calisthenics. The school hours are divided into half hour exercises.

Instruction is given in reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography, knitting, sewing and some kindergarten exercises, and very remarkable progress has been made.

Every possible effort is made to improve the inmates mentally, physically and morally. I city a few cases to show the benefit derived.

Annie M. is ten years old. When she entered she was a stupid, sullen child. Within the past year she has learned to count, read and write numbers to one hundred, write any copy of simple words, add a column of figures and knows most of the multiplication table. She sews, crochets and knits. Her disposition is greatly improved, and she is now manageable.

G. H. is eight years old. When admitted he knew none of the alphabet, and could not count five. He was three months learning to count ten, now he counts to one hundred. He reads and writes most of the letters of the alphabet.

W. S. is sixteen years old. He is very deficient and slow to learn. He knew nothing when he came here; now he counts to fifty, can read and write most of the alphabet.

Class No. 2 consists of twelve children. Half of each day the children are taught to sing and have religious exercises. They have Sunday-school, and every Sunday evening song service.

The officers and board of directors are greatly interested in this work, and the prospects of the success and usefulness of this school in the State of Maryland is very encouraging. They are now erecting a new building for the boys, to accommodate forty, so that the boys and girls may be separated. The farm is under good cultivation, and the prospects are very favorable for a good crop.

JUBILEE SERVICES OF FIRST REFORMED CHURCH, SUNBURY, PA.

The 107th anniversary of First Reformed church, Sunbury, Pa., Rev. J. Calvin Leinbach, pastor, took place Sunday, June 14th. It was an unusual occasion in that the church which had long been encumbered with debt, and on the occasion referred to she had the pleasure of seeing this encumbrance removed and the mortgage against her burned to ashes.

In the history of the First church were dark days which were days of struggle. Such men as Elders Hill, Mantz, Welker, Dietz, Seiler and others stood firm and pushed on till now her existence is secure and her prosperity assured.

Last February Elder H. H. Conrad undertook the work of relieving her of indebtedness. He went to work quietly and no one knew of his success until the day appointed for the jubilee services.

On that day appropriate services were held. After singing by the choir and the regular services, Pastor Leinbach preached a sermon in keeping with the joyous occasion, from the text, Psalm cxv. 1.: "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto Thy name give glory, for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake." The sermon was largely historical, reviewing the history of the congregation from the time of its organization in the year 1784, up to the present date, making the congregation one hundred and seven years old. The little congregation after organization worshipped jointly with the Presbyterian and Lutheran congregations, near the corner of Third and Chestnut streets, for a period of nine or ten years, but in the year 1793 they withdrew and built a little log church on the corner of Second and Chestnut streets. In this building they worshipped until the year 1847 when they rebuilt their church and worshipped in it until the present building was erected in 1885.

During the one hundred and seven years the congregation has had thirteen regular pastors, of whom seven are dead. The present pastorate began in 1884. Speaking of his own work among this people Pastor Leinbach gave the following interesting statistics: Members received by confirmation, 101; on certificate and renewal of faith, 220, making a total of 331. Sermons preached, 775; lectures and addresses delivered, 430; funerals, 95; marriages solemnized, 75; children and adults baptized, 134; pastoral calls made, 1840, or an average of 260 a year. Benevolent contributions, almost $1,500; congregational purposes, $15,691.

After the delivery of the sermon, the congregation rising, the choir sang with good effect the beautiful Te Deum by Warren.

Cremation Ceremony.

Elder H. H. Conrad stepping forward, addressed the congregation in his own inimitable style, and then, calling up the Treasurer of the church, he presented to him the last two hundred and sixty-six dollars, cancelling the entire indebtedness. After which, he produced, according to promise, the mortgage or judgment which had given the congregation so much anxiety. A match being applied soon started the flame, and as the paper was being slowly reduced to ashes over a pewter plate, the congregation rising and uniting in singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The pastor then spoke as follows: With this dust is mingled a something, which like a heavy, dense cloud has hovered over this church for many years past, and we now renewedly consecrate this temple wholly to the service of Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Praying that when in the grave our sleeping dust awaits the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies, the First Reformed church of Sunbury may continue to witness for Jesus. In ages yet to come, may God be worshipped here in the beauty of holiness. May all those who come after us, here continue to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, through Jesus Christ, in whose eternal glory, we devoutly pray, that we, with all those who have departed in the true faith may have our perfect consummation and bliss, both of body and soul.

A suitable prayer was next offered by the pastor.

Chas. B. Witmer, Esq., then arose and in a few well chosen remarks presented the following resolution of thanks:

WHEREAS, The congregation of the First Reformed church of Sunbury, Pa., has been burdened with debts for almost a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary absorbing to a large extent her vital energies and impeding her progress in carrying forward the labors of her mission, and,

WHEREAS, After numerous unsuccessful attempts having been made to liquidate the said debts, attended with much toil and effort, the consistory of this congregation appointed our respected and esteemed brother, Elder Henry H. Conrad to undertake the task of raising funds to liquidate the same, who by the help and assistance of the good Christian members and friends of this congregation, collected an amount by which the same were paid, whereof we rejoice on being enabled to release the house of the Lord from all human obligations. Therefore be it

Resolved, That this, the congregation of the First Reformed church of Sunbury, Pa., unite in passing a vote of thanks to our worthy brother, Elder Henry H. Conrad for his faithful and self sacrificing devotion to the duty to which he has been called, hoping that the glance of his fellows and the smiles of heaven may cheer his pathway in future life and thus reward him for his fidelity.

Resolved, That we take pleasure in acknowledging our thanks for the timely aid and assistance received from the friends of this congregation in our efforts to liquidate the indebtedness of the church.

Resolved, That this action be incorporated in the records of the church.

These resolutions were adopted by a rising vote of the congregation, and Elder Conrad expressed his appreciation for the same.

Hymn 420 was sung, the benediction pronounced by the pastor, and the service of the morning, enjoyed by all, went down into history.—Evening News, Sunbury, Pa.

ANNIVERSARY OF REV. J. W. SANTEE, D.D.

The fortieth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. J. W. Santee, D.D., at Cavetown, Md., was celebrated at the Cavetown Reformed church, Sunday, June 14, with appropriate services. A large audience was present and the occasion will go down in history as a remarkable one for the Cavetown charge. Dr. Thomas G. Apple, of Franklin and Marshall College, preached the festival sermon, taking his text from 1st Epistle to Timothy 5 : 17, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine."

Dr. Santee also preached a sermon, in which he reviewed the work of his pastorate and the history of the church. The Reformed interest at Cavetown first came under the care of Rev. Henry Kroh. Subsequently it was embraced in the pastorate of Revs. Bucher, Glessner, Bomberger, and Theodore Appel, stationed at Waynesboro. Under the postorate of Rev. Theodore Appel, the charge as existing and constituted, viz., Waynesboro, Salem, Leitersburg and Cavetown was divided. Cavetown, Leitersburg, with two points, one near Waterloo, now Harbaugh's, and Wolfsville, were constituted a charge. In the spring of 1851, Dr. Santee took charge of these four congregations, known as the Cavetown charge, and on the 27ih of April preached his introductory sermon in the church there from the text John 6: 68.

The following resume of his connection with the parish was given: Number of sermons, 3,400; attended 646 funerals—at Cavetown 336, Leitersburg 105, Wolfsville 126, and Harbaugh's 79; confirmed in this time 643—Cavetown 312, Leitersburg 79, Wolfsville 90, Harbaugh's 62; received by eertificate and reprofession—Cavetown 57, Leitersburg 24, Wolfsville 4, Harbaugh's 13, total 741; married 378 couples—Cavetown 206, Wolfsville 127, Leitersburg 32, Harbaugh's 13; baptized 949 infants—Cavetown 621, Leitersburg 136, Wolfsville 91, Harbaugh's 101 : adults Cavetown 70, Leitersburg 26, Wolfsville 9, Harbaugh's 11; total baptized, adults and infants, 1,066. There were gathered, as offerings at communion, harvest services and some special collections or offerings $3,246.12. The people paid him as salary over $22,000. All this in connection with the rebuilding of the church and parsonage constitutes his work.

Dr. Santee has lately advised his congregation of his intention to retire from the active work of the ministry, but it is probable that his people will insist on his remaining with them till the last.—Keystone Gazette.

Cracknels

BY MRS. S. T. RORER,

Principal Philadelphia Cooking School.

Add to one quart of sifted flour a half teaspoonful of grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one of Cleveland's baking powder, a half of salt; mix and rub in four ounces of butter. Add sufficient milk to make a dough. Knead and roll out, spread lightly with soft butter, fold in three, roll out again, and cut with a sharp knife into square cakes. Beat the white of one egg, a tablespoonful of sugar and one of milk together, brush over the tops and bake fifteen minutes in a moderately quick oven.

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

Cleveland's Baking Powder leavens best because its strength is produced by cream of tartar and soda only, not by ammonia or alum.

Shamokin.—Children's Day. Rev. C. B. Schneder. Sunday morning, June 14th, the Reformed chapel presented a fine appearance. The church was beautifully decorated. Rev. Schneder delivered a very able sermon to the children. In the afternoon the infant department had the services, and the little folks acquitted themselves very finely. The general school had theirs in the evening. The music was under the direction of Dr. R. Hollenback. "Send the Light" was the opening hymn, and the other numbers followed in quick succession as follows: Prayer, Rev. Schneder; Reading 92d Psalm, Pastor; The Apostles' Creed, Pastor and School; Offerings; Singing, "Our Battle Cry," School, a very pretty effect was produced in this piece by the cornet played to resemble a trumpet; Recitation, "Guilty or Not Guilty;" Exercises, "Christian Graces," Class of Girls; Exercises, "God is Love," Class of Girls; Recitation, "Preacher's Vacation;" Quartette, "Youth is a Happy Spring;" Exercise, "Temperance Band," Class of Boys; Essay, "Poor Boys;" Duett and Chorus; Recitation; Exercise, "Shield of Faith," Young Ladies; Singing, "Tell it among the Nations," School; Prayer, Rev. Lehmasters.—At this point, on the South Penn. Branch of the Cumberland Valley R. R., three miles east of Mercersburg, a new congregation was organized on Saturday, the 13th ult., by Revs. Z. A. Yearick and J. W. Knappenberger, members of the committee appointed by Mercersburg Classis to perform this duty.

On Saturday afternoon, the 21st ult., the corner-stone of a union church in course of erection, was laid with appropriate services. In consequence of an approaching storm, the services in part were held in the U. B. church, which was kindly offered. There was so large an attendance that after every available space in the church, for sitting or standing, was occupied, one-third of the people failed to gain an entrance. Rev. J. Hassler delivered an appropriate address, and was followed by Rev. J. A. Hartman of the Lutheran church. At the corner stone the services of the Reformed and Lutheran churches, conducted by Revs. Yearick and Hartman, were so combined as to have a pleasing and satisfactory effect. The Reformed congregation now numbers 18 members, all of whom are among the leading and substantial people of the community. The church to be erected will be 34x56 feet in size, with a raised floor and with two front entrances between which the pulpit will be placed. Lehmasters is a beautiful little town, surrounded by a rich and prosperous farming community.

Altoona.—The Holy Communion was administered in Christ Reformed church, Altoona, on June 14th, 1891. Six persons were added to the membership of the church—one by confirmation and five by certificate. Four infants were received by the sacrament of baptism. Alms $39.00. On the evening of the same day Rev. D. S. Dieffenbacher preached his farèwell sermon to a full house. Rev. L. E. Coblentz and many of the members of Trinity Mission were present. The sermon was based on Heb. 13: 8, and was well received by the large and attentive audience, notwithstanding the intense heat. We will simply give a short statistical summary given at the close of the sermon.

The number of members at the beginning of his pastorate was 369 Members received into the congregation during his six years ministry was 345. Trinity congregation was organized on the east side of the city, and 133 members dismissed to unite with that congregation. Thirty six members were dismissed to other Reformed churches; twenty to other churches. Confirmed members who died during his pastorate, 31; names erased, 45; present membership, 449; infants baptized, 184; adults baptized, 20; married 39 couples.

The amount contributed by the congregation during the classical year amounted to $3,400; of that amount $759 was contributed for benevolence. This is certainly a creditable record, and indicates a healthful and flourishing condition of tne congregation.

Waynesboro.—St. Paul's, Rev. Sefellen E. Stofflet, pastor. Children's Day was observed last Sunday. The exercises, including Scriptural responses, recitations and music, were greatly enjoyed. The decorations were considered grand and beautiful. The Sunday school brought their offering in envelopes, which will be devoted to beneficiary education.

Weissport.—Morgan A. Peters, a graduate of Theological Seminary, Tiffin, O., has accepted a call to this charge, and will enter upon his duties at an early date. Mr. Peters is a brother of Rev. Madison Peters of New York city, and of Rev. J. D. Peters of Hanover, Pa.

A regular pastor is desired.

COMMENCEMENT AT PALATINATE.

The commencement exercises of Palatinate College began on Saturday, the 13th of June, with a concert by the Palatinate College Harmonia Club and Orchestra. An excellent programme was rendered consisting of songs by the club, a recitation by Miss Watson, several contralto solos by Miss Haas and selections by the orchestra.

On Sunday afternoon, the Baccalaureate sermon was delivered to the graduating class, in the college chapel, by Rev. Stanley L. Krebs of Reading, Pa. It was a stirring discourse on Christian activity and was highly spoken of by all who heard it.

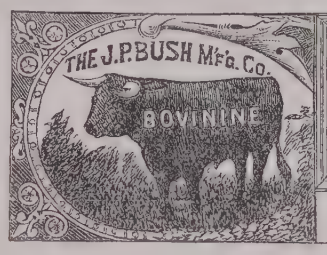
The Palatinate Literary Society celebrated its 24th anniversary on Wednesday evening, the 17th of June. Notwithstanding the disagreeable weather a large audience greeted the speakers as they came on the rostrum. After a piano duet by Misses Ella Stump and Lizzie Potteiger, and prayer by Rev. Henry Hilbish, Mr. J. F. Dechant delivered the Salutatory. A vocal trio by Misses Fannie Watson, Maggie Coover and Rosa Haas was followed with an oration on "Our Social Vices," by Paul S. Leinbach; the Eulogy, "George Bancroft," by Wilmer H. Strauss; a piano sole by Miss Ida Donges; the Palatinate Oration by Mr. Fred. C. Seitz on the "Czar and the Exile;" a violin duet by Misses Lillie Stump and Lizzie Potteiger. The honorary orator of the evening was Dr. J. Spangler Kieffer of Hagerstown, Md., who gave an able and scholarly address upon "Realism and Idealism." The programme was closed with a selection by the Harmonia Club and the benediction by Dr. Schaeffer. Mr. Nevin U. Huber was the president of the evening.

The commencement exercises proper took place in the College chapel on Thursday morning at 9 o'clock before a large audience. They began with a piano trio by Misses Ella Stump and Ida Donges and Mr. M. W. Schweitzer; and prayer by Dr. Hiester. Miss Ida Donges then delivered the Salutatory in a pleasing manner. After greeting the audience in behalf of her class she passed on to the theme of her essay "A Plea for Better Music." Mr. Irwin A. Becker spoke of "The Poorer Class" and ascribed their wretched condition to want of education. A violin solo by Mr. Alfred H. High was followed by an oration on "The Influence of German Invasions upon Subsequent History" by Mr. Edwin W. Kalbach. Miss Anna D. Hilbish read an interesting essay upon "Hidden Treasures" in which she compared the powers and faculties with which God has endowed man to the precious stones and metals which lie hidden in the bowels of the earth. A well-spoken oration on "Blessings of American liberty" by Mr. Clement D. Kressley was followed with a brilliantly executed piano solo by Miss Ella M. Stump who completed the course in music. Mr. Martin W. Schweitzer took for his subject, "Am I my Brother's Keeper?" and spoke of the duties which nations owe to their neighbors and the relations which they sustain to their contemporaries. "Universal Peace" was the subject of Mr. M. M. Fryer's oration in which he spoke of the time when nations would attain such a degree of civiliation that they would no longer resort to war but would dwell together in peace. Mr. A. F. Nace discussed the "Negro Problem" in a will written oration. The white race, he said, must deal patiently with the Negro, who had been in bondage for centuries and who could not now be civilized in a few years. Educate him and give him time. Mr. Alfred H. High spoke on "Corruption in Politics" and predicted that, unless effectual remedies were speedily devised to arrest our downward tendency, caused by the corrupt use of money and the virtual dominance of the lowest classes, our liberties and our system of free goverment would soon be swept away. Miss Anna J. Groh read a thoughtful essay on "Looking Forward and Looking Backward," comparing the two ways of making progress through life, the one by fixing our eyes upon the past with its errors and follies, the other by turning hopefully to the future.

After a piano duet by Misses Ella Stump and Ida Donges, Mr. A. R. Burbacher delivered the Valedictory. After dwelling briefly on his subject, "Design in Nature," he spoke the final words of farewell, in behalf of the class, to teachers and fellow students. The class-song and the benediction by Rev. J. W. Steinmetz then closed the most successful commencement, perhaps, ever held at Palatinate. The music on this, as on the other occasions of the week, was furnished by students in the department of music under the direction of Miss Haas to whom much credit is due for her efficient services and untiring interest during the year.

On Thursday evening the Alumni association held its meeting. After an essay by Mr. E. O. Withstine, an oration by Rev. Geo. J. Lisberger and selections of music by Misses Minnie Heitzler, Orin Moyer, Elizabeth Shaak, and Mary Ulrich the friends of the College were invited to the dining room, where refreshments had been prepared through the kindness of the Alumni Association.

ALLENTOWN FEMALE COLLEGE.



The Twenty first Annual Commencement of the Allentown Female College, took place in Music Hall, June 26th. Five young ladies received their diplomas.

The commencement exercises in the morning were largely attended. Among the visitors were about 30 clergymen of the Reformed denomination. The music for the occasion was furnished by the students, and was a delightful feature. The graduates were Minnie Grace Fogel, of Fogelsville, Pa., who, in connection with the salutatory, read an essay on "The Power of Music," Annie E. Hecker, Allentown, "Lessons from Dead Centuries;" Carrie Saxman, Latrobe, Pa., class honor, "Tangled Threads;" Lulu L. Erdman, Macungie, Pa., "The Age of Hurry;" Nan C. Guth, Allentown, valedictorian, "The Stone Sinks Away but the Circle Sweeps On."

The alumni medal to the member of the graduating class adjudged the best reader was awarded to Miss Fogel, the salutatorian. The Deshler gold medal to the student showing greatest progress in drawing and paintiug was awarded to Mary Hilbush, of Mahanoy, with honorable mention of Miss Guth, the valedictorian, and Miss Gantenbein, of Portland, Oregon. The Gernant medal for greatest proficiency in music was won by Annie M. Kline, of Allentown. In the afternoon the Alumni Association held its annual meeting.

Editorial Notes.

—Reference has before this been made to the Spiritual Conference which is called to meet in Lancaster in the Chapel of Franklin and Marshall College on the 29th next, at 8 P.M. Another from the Secretary appears in this issue. Heretofore these assemblages have been pleasant and profitable to those in attendance. It is to be hoped the expectations of the Committee for a larger attendance than ever may be more than realized. No one will fail at the close to say: "It was good for us to have been here."

—The Address of Rev. John C. Bowman, "The Interpretation of Scripture Progressive," delivered at his inauguration as Professor of New Testament Exegesis, in the Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., has been published in pamphlet form by our Publication House. Copies of it can be had at $1.50 per dozen, or 20 cents a single copy, postpaid. As the number of copies issued is limited, those desiring to read and preserve this address, which attracted much attention at the time of its delivery, on account of the views advanced, and the admirable and fresh manner in which they were presented, should send in their orders for it without delay.

—The offer of the MESSENGER for six months, from July 1st, 1891, to Dec. 31st, 1891, at the low price of Fifty cents, to new subscribers, is surely a liberal one, and there is no one who is not able to afford that amount to become a reader for at least six months of their church paper. We feel certain if they are faithful and earnest readers of it for that length of time, they will not be without it, and will be surprised at themselves for having been so long deprived of such a valuable help in their Christian life as the church paper undoubtedly is.

—Pastors and friends of the MESSENGER are doing a wrong to those who are not subscribers of the church paper if they do not tell them of the trial offer alluded to above. A few words from the pulpit about it and a little time spent in following the words spoken from house to house, will secure a number of trial subscribers in every congregation. Can we have this valuable aid in our efforts to increase the number of readers of the MESSENGER? Results will tell. We are doing our part, will our friends do theirs? We sincerely hope so.

—We received too late for our issue last week the intelligence of the death of Rev. Joshua H. Derr. From a letter recently received from him we had fears that his earthly pilgrimage would soon end. Sometime ago he laid down his work and removed to Bellevue, O., where he had been very ill, but rallied somewhat. He was, however, a great sufferer; his bodily afflictions being many and increasing in severity. Finally the end came and on Sunday, June 21st, he entered into rest, at the age of 68 years, 6 months, and 12 days. His funeral took place on the 23d ult., services being held in the Reformed church, of which he had at one time been pastor, Bellevue, O. At his request, Rev. I. H. Reiter, D. D., preached the sermon. Other ministers assisted in the services. There were twelve ministers present, eight of whom acted as pall bearers. We will not attempt to give here a sketch of the life and work of the deceased brother. More competent hands will perform that duty, and we shall give it a place in our columns. Two sons and three daughters are left to mourn his departure. May they be comforted and sustained in their bereavement.

—The ever alert Superintendent of Bethany Orphans' Home, Womelsdorf, Pa., has already called the attention of our readers to the fact that August 27th, next, is the day fixed for a gathering of the Reformed people of East Pennsylvania at the Home. We believe the MESSENGER last year suggested that a Reunion of Reformed people in East Pennsylvania, since there had been such reunions of our people in Southern Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland, and other sections. The Superintendent of Bethany's Orphan Home took up the idea and further suggested that such a reunion be held at the home upon Anniversary Day. In response to the invitation quite a goodly number met there. Steps were then taken to make it more general the next year. As already stated, August 27th, next, has been the day fixed and it will be known as "Bethany Day of the Reformed people." We trust that this will be indeed a great gathering of our Reformed people, far exceeding in numbers any reunion ever held. It will do every one good to be there. Let all mark in their diary that day as the one which will be spent with brethren that will gather at the Home. To see the Home and its beautiful surroundings, the wards of the Church who occupy it, and the hosts of people who are enrolled under the banner of the Reformed faith, will repay any one who will make a pilgrimage thither on that day.

—Some time ago the parent Board of Education held an adjourned meeting in the Lecture Room of the Reformed church at Easton, at which five members were present, the President, Dr. Thomas C. Porter, Dr. S. G. Wagner, Dr. H. M. Kieffer, the Secretary, Dr. Theodore Appel, and the Treasurer, Dr. Chas. G. Fisher. The usual business was transacted, and appropriations were made to assist a number of worthy candidates for the ministry during their studies in the institutions at Lancaster, as far as the means at hand would allow. In addition the Board discussed several questions of importance, to which we may here very properly refer. Objections have sometimes been made to supporting young men during their entire course from the Preparatory School up through the College into the Seminary. This involves a large outlay of money, which makes it difficult for the student when he gets into the ministry to replace. It was suggested that with the limited means of the Board, it would be best to assist only such as are already in the Seminary. The consensus of opinion, which was reached at Easton, was that young men who have helped themselves and done their best to do so, for a while, should always have the preference. On the strength of such a recommendation as this, to one of the students in the college, the small appropriation which he needed, was cheerfully awarded. Providentially the propriety of assisting young men of foreign German birth, also came up for consideration. The Board thought it would be wiser to assist as many of this class as its means would allow, especially such as propose to enter the missionary field. With their knowledge of the German language and some training in the English in the school at Lancaster, they will be so much the better prepared for their future labors among the German people. A beginning was made in this direction and the Board agreed to assist one young German, in his studies during his course in the Seminary. Should any of the American or German brethren desire to assist this class of students, they can send their private contributions to the treasurer, and their gifts will be strictly devoted to that purpose.

—Of late we have had in mind the subject of the establishment of a "Home for Old People of the Church." In truth, it is the next worthy object that should engage the attention of the Church and call forth her beneficence and liberality. The most of the other denominations have such Homes. Several of them are located in our city. They are in a flourishing condition, have large buildings, ample funds, and are overflowing with inmates. These all had an humble beginning. One or more good people, with hearts filled with love for their fellow men, and anxious to engage in the Master's service, undertook the work in faith. They found a building, which they rented, and received a few inmates who were homeless and penniless, and in faith looked to the charitable for help to support them in their efforts to found such a Home. Soon their humble dwelling was too small, and their self-denying and successful efforts having been noticed by the liberal, a larger one was secured and more inmates were received into it, and at the same time money came in more liberally, and thus they pushed forward until at length the large and convenient buildings they now occupy were provided. Just so could the beginning be made in our Church. It will only need one or more who have strong faith to undertake it. If such should be the case, a building could soon be found and the means come to hand to pay the rent of it and furnish it for the purpose. In no time, we feel sure, it will, under the blessing of God, become a Home in which all members of the Reformed Church will take pride and liberally support it. Who will undertake such a work for the Church?

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

"The love of Christ which passeth knowledge."—Eph. 3: 19.

O Christ, Thy love is wonderful,
What mind its breadth can measure?
A gem of rich and peerless worth,
A rare and priceless treasure;
There is no joy of earth so true,
So full of lasting pleasure.

The love of earth can ebb and flow—
It is not always flowing;
The love of Christ, like morning sun,
Is bright, and brighter growing,
And from the noontide never fades,
No sombre twilight knowing.

The earth has gems of richest glow,
And purest gold and rarest—
O earthly pride! the worth may fade
Of every gem thou wearest;
The love of Christ surpasses gold,
And earthly gem the fairest.

The joys of earth, like summer flowers
May for a season please us:
But autumn comes, and winter's gloom,
And grief and sorrow seize us;
Our joys lie withered in the tomb,
Yet lives the love of Jesus.

O Christ, Thy love is wonderful,
What mind its breadth can measure?
Be it my gem of peerless worth,
My rare and priceless treasure;
My joy, than joys of earth more rare,
And full of lasting pleasure.

ALLENTOWN FEMALE COLLEGE.

COMMENCEMENT.

Twenty-four years ago the Allentown Female College was organized; the twenty-first Commencement took place on Friday, June 26th. Getting some age on it, the institution is, and the character which such age should bring. The early years of unsettled life and doubtful growth past; the time at hand for an enlarged prosecution of its work, made possible by the experience and the strength gained in the years gone by.

As we saw the Commencement it had three parts to it. The one we struck on Thursday evening in the form of an Art Exhibition. An Allentown paper says the following of it:

"The college building and grounds were thronged last evening at the annual art reception, which usually takes place on commencement eve. The reception was a great success, both as to attendance and display. There were 120 different productions, exclusive of the chinaware, and they were exhibited in three of the rooms at the college, the double parlor and the reception room. The walls were covered with pictures—the pains-taking work of the students in the art department. The work was very creditable and ranked with the best ever displayed there before. There was a marked and noticeable improvement in the selection of designs and a more faithful and better attention to details and to the delicate shadings and blendings of colors. Miss H. A. Hill is in charge of this popular department of the college and she had fifty-one students enrolled during the year. This is the largest number in the history of the institution."

The second part consisted of the Commencement proper; or rather we might more correctly say that the second part was the Commencement, and that it consisted of a number of separate elements which most happily combined. It took place in Music Hall, a building well adapted for the purpose. The Senior Class numbered eight, five of whom spoke or read essays. Both the composition and the delivery were in each case good; creditable to the College in which the young ladies had received their training, and we should think very pleasing to their parents and friends. Two pianos were on the stage, and a number of the students gave evidence of what they had learned from the masters in music and song under the direction of Miss Moyer, the principal music teacher of the institution. The faculty, the trustees, prominent citizens, twenty-five clergymen from far and near—all were there; and the women of Allentown and vicinity, robed in the gorgeous costumes suited to the season of the year, chatty, delighted, enthusiastic, in very large numbers were there. Surely the graduating class had a brilliant-looking surrounding, by far the larger part consisting of their own sex. The weather was fine, and, as the exercises began at 9 A. M., punctually, they were brought to a close at 12 noon.

The third part of the general Commencement now followed. Its character was social. An invitation to all connected with the college, friends of the students, visiting strangers, to "return to the house," i. e., the college-building, and spend the afternoon. A cold collation, with hot coffee, for all, and social intercourse by the hour. This part had a strong East Pennsylvania flavor to it, and we for one—apparently everybody else likewise—enjoyed it "immensely." Old friends met again; old stories re-told; the serious, the witty, in happy jumble; meetings and partings. Who is there "with soul so dead" as not to have a want in him for such an occasion once in a while?

Allentown Female College has a property worth from forty to fifty thousand dollars, steadily increasing in value. It has some debt, which its trustees expect to fund at four per cent., inasmuch as the security is first class and the interest is paid punctually as it falls due. The building is large and convenient with room for fifty boarding students. The grounds large and in excellent condition; surrounded by the homes of people of wealth and refinement. Allentown is the seat of Muhlenberg College of the Lutheran Church, has a high grade of common schools, numerous churches with large congregations, four of them Reformed, and this Female College of the Reformed Church.

We have spoken favorably of the Allentown Female College in this article. We have just said what we saw and felt, and what we are sure others saw and felt. The institution is an exceptionally good one. Those connected with it have reason to take a just pride in it. It furnishes a thorough education, and a high grade of culture characterizes it in all its departments. Parents make no mistake in sending their daughters to it. On the contrary they may go far and not do as well. Its terms are moderate. Collegiate department $230.00. Add from $50 00 to $100.00 extras and a pupil has large advantages. Many prominent families have their daughters there. We congratulate Rev. Dr. Reily on the condition of the college over which he presides.

THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIOUSNESS ONCE MORE, AND T. G. A.'s CRITICISM.

We deem it due to ourselves to say that the series of articles on the general subject of the Christian consciousness, which have now appeared in the MESSENGER, were written during the latter part of the last winter, and were all in the hands of the Editor of this paper before the end of March. It will be seen, therefore, that, so far as their origin is concerned, they are independent of the earnest and somewhat heated discussions which have since arisen, in so many quarters, in consequence of the inaugural address of Dr. Briggs, concerning the same general subject, and involving the question of the relation of the Bible, the Church and the Christian consciousness as sources of divine revelation. Had we written later we should have referred to these discussions, as well as to the fifth chapter of Dr. Gerhart's Institutes of Theology, which likewise came to hand only after our articles were beyond our reach, and which we believe is in agreement with our general position.

A careful perusal of our articles, we think, will show that the charge of treating the Bible, the Church and the Christian consciousness as co-ordinate sources of divine revelation can not be made against us. In fact, we have not spoken of the Christian consciousness or of the Church as sources of revelation at all, and believe that it would be permissible to do so only on condition of attaching a different meaning to the word in relation to each of these particular subjects. To speak of them, therefore, as co-ordinate with sacred Scripture, in the sense of equality, at least, would, in our opinion, involve a confusion of thought rather than a dangerous heresy.

We thank T. G. A. heartily, in our turn, for the kind and respectful notice which he has taken of our first article; and we venture to express the belief that, if he had all our articles before him when he wrote, he would have found little that he would have cared to criticise. We believe that the points which he makes have been substantially covered in our subsequent articles, and that between him and us there exists, on this subject, no material difference.

In the sentence to which T. G. A. takes exception, we speak of the relation of the believing soul to Christ, which we say is in its nature direct and personal, and, though in its origin conditioned by Church and Scripture, yet really independent of either. What we mean is that the relation between the believer and Christ is an immediate and vital relation, apprehended directly in consciousness; so that faith possesses the quality of immediate certainty—a certainty derived directly from its object (Christ) itself, and not merely from some intermediate authority, such as that of the Church or Scriptures.

When we wrote the sentence to which exception has been taken, we had in mind the case of those Samaritans who believed on Jesus, at first, on the testimony of the woman who said that He had told her all she had ever done, but afterwards, when they had seen and heard Jesus Himself, said to the woman, "Now we believe not because of thy saying, for we have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Saviour of the world." What the testimony of the woman was to those Samaritans, that the testimony of Church and Scripture (which we do not mean to co-ordinate by thus placing them aside of each other) may be said to be to the Christian believer; whose faith, however, when once established, has its ground of certitude in Christ Himself, so as to be virtually independent of the testimony to which in some sense it owes its origin. It is just this immediateness of Christian faith or consciousness, that makes it independent of all results of Biblical criticism. Questions concerning the authenticity or credibility of books of Scripture do not affect the substance of Christian faith.

If our faith in Christ depended upon a previous conviction of the infallibility either of Scripture or of the Church, it could be no stronger than our confidence in the logical process by which that infallibility is supposed to be demonstrated; and it could, therefore, never be entirely free from doubt. We know it is the Roman Catholic hypothesis that belief in the authority of the Church must always condition faith in Christ. First I convince myself by a process of reasoning that the Church is infallible, and then I am sure that what the Church tells me about Christ must be true. But it is plain that in such case my assurance about Christ can be no stronger than that about my process of reasoning concerning the Church. But for Church substitute Scripture, and the result will be just the same, namely, faith in Christ suspended merely upon a logical process.

But there is a difference between faith and knowledge, however difficult it may be to define this difference, just as there is a difference, for example, between youth and manhood, although it would be impossible to say just where youth ends and manhood begins. And for the contents of our Christian knowledge we are always dependent upon the Bible. We agree that in this life at least the Bible must always be the canon of our knowledge of Christ. But the Bible is of no use for this end until its true meaning has been ascertained; and we hold that in the interpretation of the Bible the Christian consciousness has an office to perform which has not always been sufficiently appreciated. We do not, of course, undervalue the importance of scientific (grammatical, historical, psychological) exegesis; nor do we undervalue the importance of scientific honesty in the study of Scripture, which is a virtue that is far less common than it ought to be; but when such exegetical study comes in conflict with the dictates of the Christian consciousness, then we hold that the exegesis must be suspected to be wrong rather than the Christian consciousness. We have an eminent example of the contrary supposition in the case of Calvin, who held on to his exegetical results on the subject of the divine decrees, while his Christian consciousness revolted against them, as is plain from his own confession: Decretum quidem horribile, fateor. Scripture is never wrong; but people's understanding of Scripture may often be wrong. And of such misunderstandings the Christian consciousness is the only sure corrective. W. R.

THE REFORMED QUARTERLY.

Those who had not the privilege of hearing Professor Bowman's inaugural discourse will be glad to read it in the pages of July number of the Review. It was listened to with deep interest and received with marked approbation by a large and intelligent audience. His theme, "The Interpretation of Scripture Progressive," was well suited to the occasion of his induction into the chair of New Testament Exegesis. It gives the key note of his future work. With no uncertain sound he proclaims his faith in the Bible as divine, and as, at the same time, no less human than divine. This divine-human character of the Scriptures is wronged, on the one hand, by rationalism, which fails to see the divine elements, and on the other, by mechanical theories of inspiration, which admit of no free play to the human element. Only as both are held in organic union can we do full justice to the Bible, as the record of God's highest revelation to man. The Professor is very candid in his discourse, taking his hearers fully into his confidence. Some of his statements may possibly strike the popular mind as strange, but it ought to be known that his general view is that which is almost universally taken by the biblical scholars of to-day.

Dr. W. M. Reily furnishes an English translation with notes of an introduction to a new commentary on the Apocalypse, written in German by Dr. W. A. Helffrich and now ready for the press. Dr. South once remarked that the study of the Apocalypse either finds a man mad, or makes him so. In spite of this witty word of the brilliant English divine, much study is now bestowed on the last book of the Canon. Germany alone has produced within the last decade a large amount of literature on this subject. The critics of that country are engaged at the present time in a sharp discussion of the origin and structure of the Apocalypse, many of them contending that it is a compilation, having as its basis an earlier Jewish Apocalypse. Dr. Helffrich's book is of an entirely different character. He purposely excludes all critical investigations and scentific refinements, and addresses himself to the practical needs of the laity. The introduction sets forth his stand-point and the attitude he assumes to the Revelation of St. John. We are pleased to receive this foretaste of the forthcoming work.

Rev. A. R. Kremer contributes an interesting paper on "St. Paul and the Classic Orators." It is written in clear, vigorous English, and is pervaded by a noble earnest spirit, but his glowing enthusiasm has, perhaps, assigned to St. Paul as an orator a higher place than is his due. As the inspired Apostle to the Gentiles, he was incomparably superior to Demosthenes and Cicero; but is it not too bold to contend that in his character of orator he rose to their high plane?

Professor R. C. Schiedt displays a remarkably fine critical judgment and an extensive acquaintance with the best fictitious literature in his able discussion of the question, "Is the Modern Novel a Work of Art?" Such a paper is of immense value at a time when, like the present, the novel is an all-absorbing power. Even from a literary and æsthetic point of view, to say nothing of decency and morality, the realistic fiction of to-day should in large part be consigned to the flames. The reader will do well to give this article a careful perusal.

This is followed by an article on "Beauty and Art," and when we say that the writer of it is Dr. Titzel, one of the editors of the Review, we are sure his name will stand as a guarantee for the excellence of the essay. It is a lucid philosophical discussion of the nature of the beautiful both in its subjective and objective aspects, and of art in its several forms, its historical development and its benefits to humanity. Those who are inclined to philosophical thought will find it refreshing reading even in these hot days of July.

There are three other articles, to which, however, we can do no more at this time than invite attention: a theological discussion of "The Personality and Office of God, the Father," by Rev. J. W. Love; a biblical study of Elisha and His Times" by Rev. A. Pfanstiehl; and the continuation of Mrs. T. C. Porter's excellent series entitled "Simon Bar-Jona: The Stone and the Rock."

ST. PAUL'S CLASSIS.

St. Paul's Classis of the Reformed Church in the United States, met at Saegerstown, Crawford county, Pa., on Thursday evening, May 28th, 1891, at 7.45 o'clock, P. M.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. D. Thomas of Cochranton, from Acts 4: 11, "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head stone of the corner."

Organization for the current year is President, Rev. J. D. Thomas of Cochranton, Treasurer, C. M. Boush, Meadville, Corresponding Secretary, Dr. J. H. Twitmeyer, Sharpsville, and Stated Clerk, Rev. J. M. Schick, Greenville, Pa.

The parochial reports were of usual interest, and it was gathered from them by the Committee on the State of the Church, that "the pastors are impressed with the sacredness of their calling, filled with a devotion to it and have an abiding faith in the promises of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and that "their labor has not been in vain." The lives of the pastors have been spared. Much sickness prevailed among the members of the charges. Three charges are vacant, but have been supplied, and now look forward to securing pastors.

The new Hymnal was approved and recommended to the churches and congregations of Classis.

The Missionary Guardian was examined by a committee of elders who reported on the excellent character of the magazine, and advised a general effort to increase the circulation in the bounds of Classis.

Very interesting Missionary and Benevolence meetings were held in the evenings, and the people addressed by members of Classis on these important subjects.

The benevolence of the Classis toward the objects of Foreign Missions, Ministerial Relief and the Orphan's Home, was evidenced in that special collections of each of these objects were ordered to be taken in each congregation.

Grace church, Sharpsville, Pa., was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting of Classis, and the time fixed is the Thursday after Whitsunday, 1892.

Statistics:—Ministers, 8; Congregations, 20; Members, 2517; Unconfirmed Members, 1161; Baptized—Infants, 106, Adults, 19; Confirmed, 114; Received by Certificate, &c., 64; Communed, 2013; Dismissed, 56; Names Erased, 4; Deaths, 47; Sunday-schools, 14; Sunday-school Scholars, 1450; Students for the Ministry, 1; Benevolent Contributions, $2101; Congregational Purposes, $9469; Church papers, 95; Sunday-school papers, 400. ST. JOSEPH, MO.

The writer had the pleasure of visiting the above named city, a short time since. There are perhaps no better known cities in the United States than some of our large Western cities, owing to the fact that they have been extensively advertised or boomed. We had heard much of St. Joseph—we were anxious to see the place. We have seen the city. We had heard of the efforts of some persons, members of the Reformed Church, to start a mission there. While there we had ample opportunity for looking over the field. There are churches there, but we believe we are stating a fact, when we say, there is a grand opening here for the Reformed Church. Why? Because of her idea of Educational Religion. Among many of the churches, this has, to a very great extent, been overlooked or neglected. There is a felt want which the Reformed Church could and would supply. Again, there are here members of the Reformed Church, who, raised and having lived, in her communion for years, cannot feel at home in any other. Those who came here years ago, and found no church of their own denomination have united with other churches. The Reformed Church all over the West has lost much valuable material, many members in this way.

Efforts have been made on the part of a few faithful members to have a mission started as possible. There is here the mucleus for a good congregation—they are in earnest; are ready and willing to work; in fact are working, though many difficulties and perplexities confront them. The complexity of our missionary operations confuses and confounds them. It is hard to get people, to understand the workings of the different Boards. When told that we have three Boards and three Superintendents, the question is, why is this? There seems to be no one in particular to whom to go. The case stands just this way. Application was made for help. One Board says "we can't do anything for you;"

another promises help in the future. How to reconcile these two is the confusing thing, especially when the former statement is made public through the columns of the Church paper. The whole thing reminds one of the family in which there were three sets of children. Quarrels were of frequent occurrence. On one occasion when a disturbance of more than usual fierceness was raging outside, the father in disgust asked the mother to go out and see what was the matter. Returning she reported as follows: your children and my children are fighting our children. There is a lesson here for us.

What is to be done for St. Joseph ought to be done soon. The large cities of the West especially need attention. As a Church we make a mistake by coming into the cities late; good locations have been taken; we must take what we can get. Prices for lots are high, but we must buy—we must pay what is asked or not get anything. Many members have gone to other churches. And yet in view of these things the Church at large expects the mission to grow and is disappointed that it does not become self-supporting in a few years.

Not enough attention has been given to the cities. They have been to a great extent neglected. Let me cite one instance. In the statistical report of Kansas Classis of 1887, I find an organization at Topeka, Kansas with 17 members. For several years nothing has been done here. This year the Superintendent of Missions reported 16 members, but no services during the year. Why this is we know not. But does it not seem that during these years something ought to have been done there?

Again, we see an appeal for Roanoke, Va. If we remember correctly an effort was made here some few years ago, but abandoned. These missions do not grow in a day or a year. Now the effort will be doubly hard, simply because we get in late; lots are high; members have gone to other churches.

But to return, to St, Joseph. There is a little band of members of the Reformed Church here, working and praying for a church of their own denomination. Reader, have you ever thought how you would feel were you cut off from the Church in which you were raised; the Church you love—remove to a place where there was no church you could call your own? Try to put yourself in the place of many who are in just such a position, and think how you would feel. The Reformed Church cannot afford to lose these members. It is not the intention of this article or of those persons to overestimate or over-state things, but simply to give the facts in the case. There is a promising field open—will we occupy it? God grant that the time may speedily come when the prayers of those people will be answered, and when they and many more may find a spiritual home in a church of their own denomination. S.

MARYLAND CLASSIS.

Maryland Classis met in its seventy-first annual sessions in Trinity Reformed church. Woodbury, Md., Rev. E. R. Deatrick pastor, May 21st 1891, at 7.30 o'clock, P.M. At the request of the President, Rev. E. R. Deatrick, Rev. Geo. L. Staley, D. D., preached the opening sermon.

The Classis organized by the election of Rev. C. S. Slagle, President; Rev. E. R. Deatrick, Stated Clerk; Rev. U. Henry Heilman, Treasurer, and Rev. G. A. Snyder, Corresponding Secretary.

All the ministers having charges were present, excepting one who was sick. Twenty-four elders represented as many charges. 28 ministers were in attendance, 24 elders, 2 licentiates, and Revs. A. C. Whitmer, and M. Bachman, visiting brethren. Rev. Geo. C. Erb, was received from Iowa Classis, Synod of the Interior, Rev. Geo. W Snyder was received from Lancaster Classis, Eastern Synod, and the call extended to him by the Boonsboro charge was confirmed.

The Union Bridge and Sabillasville charges remain vacant. Messrs. T. K. Cromer and F. M. Line, recently graduated by the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, were examined and licensed, and dismissed, the former to Virginia, and the latter to Juniata Classis. Eight young men are pursuing their studies, preparatory to the gospel ministry, under care of the Classis, of whom seven are receiving aid. Beneficiary education claims much attention, and $1225 were apportioned for this purpose.

The subjects referred by General Synod and the Synod of the Potomac were all favorably acted upon excepting the item of $350 for Church Building Fund, concerning which the following action was taken: "Inasmuch as Maryland Classis has already assumed large obligations for church building, we do not feel ourselves able to assume the amount apportioned upon us by the Synod."

Brunswick, a new point on the B. and O. railroad in Frederick Co., was favorably commended as a mission field, and the pastor was authorized to solicit subscriptions for a church, wherever a lot is secured.

Classis trustees were directed to borrow $3500 for Grace Mission, Washington, D.C., to enable them to erect a parsonage. $1650 were apportioned for Home Missions, $1425 Church Extension, $217 Sustentation, and $300 additional for the same purpose conditionally. $163, were also apportioned for Hungarians and Harbor Missions.

Action concerning the Missionary Guardian was taken as follows:

Resolved, "That this Classis commend the Missionary Guardian to all our people, and that all the pastors and elders be earnestly urged to make energetic efforts to increase its circulation in their congregations."

In accordance with the request of Synod the cause of missions was again commended to our people, and they were urged to cultivate the habit of regular systematic benevolence. An interesting missionary meeting was held on Sunday evening of the session, and addresses were made by Revs. C. S. Slagle, A. T. G. Apple, C. Clever, D. D., and A. S. Weber.

A meeting in the interest of Mercersburg College was held on Saturday evening. Revs. B. R. Carnahan and T. F. Hoffmeier made the addresses.

The Committee, Rev. C. Clever, D. D., Chairman, to whom the new Hymnal was referred for examination, reported upon it favorably, and commending it highly. Classis adopted the reports, and approved the Hymnal.

Favorable action was taken concerning the Society for the Relief of Ministers and their Widows, and the congregations were directed to take up a collection for the use of the Society prior to Oct. 1st, 1891. Rev. Geo. A. Whitmore was chosen as a life member, and Rev. A. M. Schmidt for the undesignated balance.

$5,335 were apportioned for classical and benevolent purposes. Revs. J. S. Kieffer, D. D., J. W. Santee, D. D., E. R. Eschbach, D. D., C. Clever, D. D., A. M. Schmidt, G. A. Snyder, A. S. Weber, L. F. Zinkhan, J. T. Rossiter, W. J. Johnson, A. T. G. Apple, were chosen delegates primarii, and Revs. J. G. Noss, B. R. Carnahan, F. F. Hoffmeier, S. M. Hench, U. H. Heilman, J. M. Mickley, E. R. Deatrick, H. F. Dittmar, C. S. Slagle, G. L. Staley, D. D., and H. Ditzler, delegates secundi to the Synod in Chambersburg, Pa., and Elders, Ezra Willard, Jesse Dehoff, F. J. Davis, Henry Shriver, Geo. T. Shower, M. D., A. C. McCardell, C. M. Keedy, L. Kemp, M. D., C. H. Everhart, G. S. Griffith, and L. R. Schnebley, delegates primarii; and J. W. Beachley, J. L. Harbaugh, H. C. Foltz, G. J. Ramsburg, W. J. Cramer, J. Saum, J. B. Albright, W. H. Lakin, J. Utz, J. Koutz, and W. E. Fisher, delegates secundi.

Classis finally adjourned on Tuesday, 26th, at 4.30 o'clock, P.M., to meet in the Reformed church, Mt. Pleasant, Frederick Co., Md., on Thursday evening, May 5th, 1892, at 7.30 o'clock.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

ANNUAL BOARD MEETING TO-MORROW, FRIDAY, JULY 10th.

How about the re-union of former inmates in connection with the anniversary on the 27th of August? Last year a good start was made and an organization was formed. We have not heard anything about it lately. As an honorary member we are naturally interested in the matter and as treasurer of the organization we would like to hear from as many as possible before the day of the anniversary, so that upon that occasion we may present a creditable report. So far the number of those who have sent on their dollars towards the fulfillment of the pledge made last year is very small. It is to be hoped that the matter is not forgotten. As this is to be an unusually large gathering of Reformed people, there will no doubt be many of the former inmates here. An hour will be set and a place named for holding the reunion, all of which will be duly announced in this column. We had a good time last year; let us have even a better one this year.

The new building is slowly growing skywards. The door and window frames of the story above the basement are now set. We hope to have it under roof by the time of the anniversary (August 27th), yet we are not too confident about it. We have learned that in building operations one's expectations ofttimes outrun the accomplishment.

It was a genuine pleasure to have with us, on Sunday, June 28th, the Rev. John Gantenbein, D.D., of Portland, Oregon. Dr. Gantenbein was one of the founders of this Home and so is quite familiar with its early history. We listened with much interest to an account of his early life and of the steps that were taken which finally led to the founding of the Home. Dr. Gantenbein himself was Superintendent for about a year and a half, while the Home was still at Bridesburg, Phila., and is familiar with the work. He is now on his way to Europe and will re-visit the scenes of his early life which he left forty years ago, to come to America as a missionary. Before he came to this country he was familiar with a number of benevolent institutions on the continent and now expects to visit some again. He has promised an account of some of these visits which we will await with interest. We wish him a safe journey and a profitable and enjoyable time.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

THE THIRTEENTH FUND.

In January, 1889, the Women's Missionary Society of Philadelphia Classis resolved to raise a $500 Church-building Fund, and in less than three years they have finished their work. At various times they paid $200.25, $100, $50, $95, $25 and now finally $29.75.

This thirteenth Fund will go upon our records as "The Women's Missionary Society of Philadelphia Classis Church-building Fund," a lasting honor to these earnest women.

Not only have they raised this Fund, but with out a doubt they have also provoked others to do the same work. For all this help the Board of Missions records a hearty vote of thanks.

MISSIONS.

Our work is finished at Berlin. We must now turn our face toward Somerset. Going from Berlin to Somerset two changes of trains are necessary, although the distance is but short. The day is warm, as the people tell us, but we did not feel the heat much in that mountain region. About the same time it was 98 in the shade at our home in Iowa. Compared with that the heat among the Allegheny Mountains was quite moderate indeed. We arrived at Somerset at about the noon hour. Brother King met us at the depot and his residence became our home for a few days. This was our first visit to the ancient borough of Somerset. It is an old town but gives evidence of considerable thrift. Like many another place, there is here little manufacturing, and for this reason the young men leave the place in large numbers. There is much wealth here, we were assured. Why not put some of this surplus money into manufacturing interests? Why shall the farmers in this region use farming implements that are manufactured largely in Ohio and Illinois, while the lumber and other materials are at hand here for their manufacture? But we are off our subject. Funds for Church extension we are after. We are told here, as at other places, that not a very large sum must be expected, as the people have been heavily taxed for the building of the new church, which has only lately been completed. We saw only the members of the town congregation. The three congregations in the country belonging to this charge, are at a distance from the town and our time being limited, the pastor agreed to see the members of the country congregations in the interest of our work. We had only a little over a day to spend here and during this time received $62 for the good cause. We must say that we do not often find people who contributed with such apparent cheerfulness as did the good people of Somerset. They did bravely well and deserve this word of praise.

We must not fail to make mention of their fine, new church. These people have a church, which to us, seemed as neat and comfortable as a church well can be. They might have built a little larger while they were at it, but we are assured that it is sufficiently large for the present needs of the congregation. We were also assured that the debt resting on the church will all be wiped out in the near future.

We were very highly pleased with what we saw and heard at Somerset and congratulate Brother King on the good work he has done in this charge.

BEAM'S CHARGE.

This charge lies only some seven miles from Somerset. This must be visited next. Here there is no pastor—Brother Burger having vacated the charge in the early spring. We first stopped with Brother Miller at Edie and then went to the home of Brother John Biesecker, who did for us what the pastors did in other charges. We intended to gather the funds in this charge at the services on Sunday. But there was a downpour of rain equal to that at Salisbury when with Brother Evans. Nothing daunted we went to work and did the very best we could under the circumstances. We went through mud and rain and held services in the four congregations of the charge. When the day ended we had $30. This, really was very good considering that but few persons could attend the services. Brother Biesecker very kindly promised to see the members whom we could not see and gather their offerings for the cause we represented. Here is a kind people who very much desire a pastor. They should by all means have one. They have a brother in view, and let us hope he will favorably consider their call. We confidently expect to hear good reports from this charge.

This letter is dated at Mifflinburg, Pa. By the request of Classis, we will visit the city of Scranton to look up the interests of our Church there. We could not resist the temptation to turn in here and visit our old class-mate, Brother Steckel. We find him as young, seemingly, as twenty-five years ago, on the bright May morning, when, having finished our course at the Theological Seminary at Mercersburg, we went out into the world to do the work of the Master. The grown children about his board, tell us that we are growing old rapidly, and that the end of life is nearing. Something from Scranton hereafter.

THE YOUNG PROPHETESS:

A TALE OF THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

BY REV. R. LEIGHTON GERHART.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

IN THE GARDEN OF THE EMIR.

It was the evening when Alhadan left the saloon. Exhausted by the emotions roused by the recital of his story, he sought the garden where in solitude he might give himself up to his sorrowful reflections.

Slowly descending three or four terraces, he turned into a by-path which led to a dense cluster of cypress and sycamore trees, growing under the shadow of a huge mass of moss-clad rocks. The grove concealed a pavilion, and near the pavilion in a marble basin bubbled a never-failing spring. Covering his face with his hands, he threw himself upon the soft sward, and in that attitude, at intervals devoutly praying, he lay till the evening passed and the shades of night deepened on the earth.

He roused himself at length from the lethargy of grief into which he had fallen and sat up. It was the stillest of radiant Eastern nights. The moon shone peacefully amid her galaxy of twinkling stars. Near the clear stream, fed by the spring, stood a clump of lilies bearing several pure, white, trumpet-shaped flowers. A shaft of moonlight rested on the flowers, and as they stood out from the encircling shadows of the dark evergreens, they were saintly in their purity and fairness.

He had not observed the flowers when he entered the grove. As his eye now fell upon them, as though touched by an angel, a sense of strength, almost of hope, descended upon him. They spoke of God's nearness, God's providence, God's love and faithfulness. He looked at them and rebuked himself for the despair to which he had yielded.

"I can at least live bravely, and live nobly, though a slave," he mumured. "I have a generous master; my labor is of the lightest; and who knows what the future may hold! Towers of Heilbrun! hospitable walls of my dear home! I may see you yet!"

"Otho!" scarcely above a whisper spoke a musical voice, strange, yet still stranger in its faint, far-off tone of familiarity.

Years had passed since any one had called him by that dear name, yet so softly did it now sound, that the word seemed only like the whisper of his own heart, yet, withal, so real that a chill of startled awe swept over him.

"Otho!" again spoke the musical voice, with slightly increased emphasis

Again, that chill of startled awe, as slowly he turned and looked behind him. It was no delusion. Some one had spoken to him. A figure, hidden in a dark mantle, stood in the cold moonlight near him. Rising to his feet, and advancing a step, he demanded, trembling:

"Did you speak to me? who are you?"

"Have you entirely forgotten me, Otho?" and the figure raised its arms and gently threw back the dark mantle. It fell from the head and shoulders in a heap to the ground, and there standing before him, beautiful as a dream, was the lady who reclined at the feet of Prince Joussef. The jewels sparkled in her hair and glittered on her robe, and her countenance, in the unreal light of the moon, was unearthly fair. Perhaps the venture she had made and the expectation of the meeting, had paled her countenance; in the moonlight it looked unearthly fair.

Making a rapid stride toward her, Otho stammered in his astonishment; "Your voice sounds like one I knew long ago, but so long a time has passed, and so many sad events have come between, that I shame to say, I cannot recall you."

"Have you forgotten Eunice de Teelo?"

"Eunice de Teelo! the companion of my dear cousin Serena! my comrade in our ill-fated Crusade! Can it be?" and Otho seized and held the soft, white hands stretched out to him.

"But how"—hesitated he, so puzzled that he could scarcely frame an inquiry, "You seem happy, Eunice?"

"I am Prince Joussef's wife," and the lady laughed gaily. "Blame me not, Otho!" she continued, observing a change in the young man's face. "Blame me not! Like you too, I was sold at Alexandria. I was taken to Damascus, and for three years guarded and kept, while my master had me instructed in every art and accomplishment which would increase my value in the slave market. Oh, dear! Then off to Bagdad he carried me, shut up and guarded for fear the sun might get a peep at me, and tended by servants as though I were a princess. Oh, I lived well! And then Prince Joussef saw me, and bought me, and carried me off to the mountains and married me," and again came the ripple of musical laughter.

"I thought thou wouldst rather have died," spoke Otho with rebuke in his voice.

"I thought so too," came lightly from the lady's lips, "but I could not die. In spite of myself, I grew fat—they gave me such good things to eat—fatter and fairer every day," laughing again. "In spite of myself, I made every one merry around me. I thought I ought to be miserable, but in spite of myself I was not. And so I just stopped trying to be miserable, and am trying to be contented with my fate. In truth, it is not a hard one. Oh! I do not live like Eastern women—not altogether like them," she added. "Such tame, ignorant, spiritless dolls! I ride, and I hunt, and I do many things; and Prince Joussef likes it. Dear me! he does nearly all I ask of him; and I tell thee, Otho, I ask a great many things. But he is jealous! Oh! my head would pay for this visit, if it were discovered. I have to be cautious," and Eunice paused to take breath.

"But your faith, Eunice? would Prince Joussef marry a Christian?"

"Oh! I believe what I please, but I keep it to myself. I go to the mosque, at times, and kneel with my face to Mecca whenever the Mussin calls to prayer, and swear by the camel of Mohamet, and do not eat pork—bah! I do not relish it any way. But what of that? Is not God everywhere? Did you ever see a mosque, Otho?" queried the thoughtless woman. "Oh! some of them are beautiful—beautiful!"

"Oh, Eunice!" expostulated Otho, sadly. "Have you forgotten home and friends?"

"Now you are trying to make me miserable," responded Eunice in a pouting tone; "if you do I'll go. I will have to go soon, as it is. Oh! I had such a time to find you. My servant ran here and there, all over the palace, looking for you; and at last he came to the garden and spied you in the grove, and came and told me. But I must go soon, or I might be caught, and then—" Eunice whistled softly, adding, "it would be, 'Off with her head, in short order.' Have you found your father, Otho?" she concluded.

"No; I have inquired everywhere, but not a trace, not a sign have I found. I fear he is no longer among the living. It were better, perhaps, if it were so, for what could I do now except see his misery?" was the sorrowful answer.

The two talked a little while longer, and then, hastily gathering her mantle about her, Eunice bade Otho adieu, and hurried away. As they were about to part, while Otho still held her hand clasped in his own, she said, speaking more seriously than before:

"Think not harshly of me! Blame me not, Otho! If I have done wrong, God forgive me! But it was a hard fate, and I have made the best of it. Perhaps I can help you. Prince Joussef does all I ask. Farewell, Otho!"

"Farewell, Eunice!"

He walked by her side to the edge of the grove. In the distance he saw the dark figure of a man; it was the servant of whom Eunice had spoken. He had accompanied his mistress to the garden to watch and give notice if any danger of discovery threatened. Otho saw Eunice join this man, and then, walking by his side, ascend the terraces one by one and at length disappear in the dark shadow cast by the great palace. As the two vanished in the distance, he mumurred sadly to himself:

"Madeleine! Madeleine! fair, sweet soul! better, far better thy grave on the desolate height which looks down on Galilee than such a fate as this! God has indeed been merciful to thee!"

Returning to the grove, he paused by the lily, attracted by its saintly beauty, and faint, sweet odor. Silently he looked at it, and then, once more, he spoke:

"Fair flower, it is seldom an eye gazes on thee, or a voice proclaims thy beauty and thy worth! Yet here in darkness or in light thou livest out thy day, unfolding your unsullied leaves as freely as though in the presence of a king. Ay, and thy fair flower, in the darkness—in the starry darkness—is ever open heavenward; and in the morning, a dewdrop, distilled from that darkness, will sparkle, beautiful as a costly diamond, in the fragrant chamber of thy heart. So may I, though a slave, be true to my own manhood and my faith; and from the darkness of this sorrow draw a strength not to be purchased with jewels or with gold."

He stood for a few moments lost in thought, then, fearing that he had been absent from the palace too long, and that his kind master might require his attendance, he walked quickly up the smooth path to the palace.

Little did he know of the hour of terror and darkness which the near future was to bring! He thought he had tasted the dregs of the bitter cup of his misfortune; that nothing could befall him worse than had come. In the terrible hour coming on, that bitterness was to seem as sweetness compared with the chalice put to his lips. The very next day, towards noon, as he returned to the palace, after a brief absence made necessary by the discharge of some light duty, he was met by the startling cry:

"Habid Barbara, God curse the hour of his birth! has slain his master, Emir Aboulias!"

"What!" cried Alhadan, "that old man who was working in the new mulberry grove a few days ago?"

"The same."

"I was told he quarrelled much with his comrades, but was a good worker and always obedient. I cannot believe he would commit such a dastardly crime. What reason could he have?"

"It is true! vile wretch! The devil was the reason."

"Where did it happen?"

"In the fields below the mulberry grove."

"Has the body of the Emir been brought in?"

"No; they have gone to fetch it."

"Where is Habid Barbara?"

"In the fields, if not already torn in pieces, as he deserves. May his life be preserved long enough for us to put him to the torture!" and the wish was accompanied by a horrible imprecation. For Emir Aboulias was a kind and indulgent master, and much beloved by all around him, except the vicious among his servants and slaves.

With this unsatisfactory information, Alhadan ran hurriedly to the stables to get his horse. As he drew near, the clouds of dust overhanging the road and the receding clatter of many hoofs told him that a squadron of Kurdish cavalry, which the Emir ever kept near him, had set out for the scene of the crime.

His call was quickly answered, and mounting his horse, he set off at a gallop. His horse was of the Kurdish breed, famed throughout the East for their wondrous speed and endurance, and the one which he called his own was one of the fleetest in the Emir's stables. Putting the noble animal to his mettle, Alhadan swept over the ground with the swiftness of the wind.

It was not long before he came in sight of the squadron of Kurds—their horses going at a long, steady, unbroken gallop, which carried them onward only less rapidly than he was himself riding; their brilliantly colored turbans bowed slightly forward; their crimson vests rising and falling in the breeze; their tall, slender lances hung behind them, flashing as they rode. The road they were following skirted a range of high, rugged and forest-clad hills lying to the left, and beyond these hills the fatal fields lay: it led on several miles to a wide pass, through which it swept, then turned and came down to the fields from the opposite direction. This was the only route that a squadron of cavalry could take without breaking their military order, and the Kurds were pursuing it, though fully aware that it was taking them some distance out of their way.

There was a shorter road, or rather path, precipitate and rough, which, turning abruptly from the main road, ascended the hills to the summit and then plunged down on the other side. To gain time, Alhadan determined to take this path. From love of its romantic quiet and its very roughness, indeed, he had ridden it several times before. He had chosen this route when going to the mulberry grove on the very day that he held his brief interchange of words with Habid Barbara. So, he had no sooner reached the spot where the path diverged, than he turned, and without drawing rein, dashed into the thicket and up the steep ascent.

When he gained the summit he was lifted, as upon the crest of a wave, into a position commanding a wide view of the whole landscape. At the speed he was going, he simply rose to the summit, and then almost instantly sank again; but that brief moment was long enough to give him a survey of the whole landscape for miles around. Far to his right, more than a mile away, he saw the Kurds coming on at the same steady, rapid gallop which they had taken in the beginning—their turbans bowed forward, their vests fluttering, their spears dancing at their backs, their scimetars flashing in their hands, their commander a few yards in the lead. So they would have galloped for hours if it had been necessary.

But Alhadan saw another sight, nearer, over the tree-tops of the mulberry grove, seemingly at his very feet: two groups of men; one small and in agitation; the other large and almost motionless. In the centre of the large group, he saw men stooping, as over a prostrate body: the other seemed surging around a man who stood upright in the throng. Then Alhadan knew that a terrible event had, indeed, happened. He was over the summit of the hill and far down the slope before these pictures that his eye had taken in resolved themselves clearly before his mind. A few moments later, he galloped out of the thicket into the open fields.

He rode by the first group, pausing only long enough to see that the man in the centre was Habid Barbara. His tunic had been torn from him, and he stood naked to the waist; his face was streaming with blood; his arms were bound behind his back, and in his eye was a flash of fiery defiance. Reaching the larger group, and it was a very silent one, Alhadan at once dismounted. The crowd, which was composed largely of the field hands and meaner servants, recognizing in the young man one of the personal attendants of the Emir, made way for him at once. A moment later, he was bending over the prostrate and almost lifeless body of his master. The kind and gentle face was ghastly pale, though unmarked with blood, the eyes were closed and he was breathing faintly. At a glance of inquiry, one of the servants lifted the head, showing a large wound in the back of the skull, very near the top. The right arm lay helpless by his side, broken above the elbow. The Emir had drawn his scimetar, and, as an ox-goad cloven through the middle revealed, had attempted to defend himself.

On inquiry, Alhadan learned that the overseer had heard a sudden outcry. Running to the top of a spur of the hills, that, projecting into the fields, hid the fatal spot from view, he saw Habid Barbara standing by the prostrate body of the Emir, engaged in a fierce conflict with the three Afghans, who had been ploughing in that part of the field. Hurrrying forward and hearing the three men cry out: "Habid Barbara has slain the Emir!" he had struck him to the earth with a blow from his heavy staff, and immediately had him bound. The cleft goad was that of the accused.

So confident seemed every one of the guilt of Barbara, and so strong was the evidence against him, that the belief in his innocence faded, for the time, from Alhadan's mind.

DOING WRONG.

The lines of suffering on almost every human countenance have been deepened, if not traced there, by unfaithfulness to conscience, by departures from duty. To do wrong is the surest way to bring suffering; no wrong deed ever failed to bring it. Those sins which are followed by no palpable pain are yet terribly avenged in this life. They abridge our capacity of happiness, impair our relish for innocent pleasure, and increase our sensibility to suffering. They spoil us of the armor of a pure conscience, and of trust in God, without which we are naked amid hosts of foes and are vulnerable by all the changes of life. Thus, to do wrong is to inflict the surest injury on our own peace. No enemy can do us equal harm with what we do ourselves whenever and however we violate any moral or religious obligation.

The Family.

THE TWO WORDS.

One day a harsh word, rashly said,
Upon an evil journey sped,
And like a sharp and cruel dart
It pierced a fond and loving heart;
It turned a friend into a foe,
And everywhere brought pain and woe.

A kind word followed it one day,
Flew swiftly on its blessed way;
It healed the wound, it soothed the pain,
And friends of old were friends again;
It made the hate and anger cease,
And everywhere brought joy and peace.

But yet the harsh word left a trace
The kind word could not quite efface;
And, though the heart its love regained,
It bore a scar that long remained;
Friends could forgive, but not forget,
Or lose the sense of keen regret.

Oh! if we would but learn to know
How swift and sure one word can go,
How would we weigh with utmost care
Each thought before it sought the air,
And only speak the words that move
Like white-winged messengers of love!

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

"No," said the lawyer, "I shan't press your claim against that man; you can get some one else to take the case, or you can withdraw it, just as you please."

"Think there isn't any money in it?"

"There would probably be some little money in it; but it would come from the sale of the little house that the man occupies and calls his 'home.' But I don't want to meddle with the matter, anyhow."

"Got frightened out of it, eh?"

"Not at all."

"I suppose likely the fellow begged hard to be let off?"

"Well, yes, he did."

"And you caved in, likely?"

"Yes."

"What in creation did you do?"

"I believe I shed a few tears."

"And the old fellow begged you hard, you say?"

"No, I didn't say so; he didn't speak a word to me."

"Well, may I respectfully inquire whom he did address in your hearing?"

"God Almighty."

"Ah, he took to praying, did he?"

"Not for my benefit in the least. You see, I found the little house easily enough and knocked on the outer door, which stood ajar, but nobody heard me, so I stepped into the little hall, and saw through the crack of the door a cosy sitting-room, and there on the bed, with her silver head high on the pillows, was an old lady who looked for the world just as my mother did the last time I ever saw her on earth. Well, I was on the point of knocking, when she said: 'Come, father, now begin, I'm all ready.' And down on his knees by her side went an old, white-haired man, still older than his wife, I should judge; and I couldn't have knocked then for the life of me. Well, he began. First he reminded God that they were still His submissive children, mother and he, and no matter what He saw fit to bring upon them they should not rebel at His will. Of course, 'twas going to be very hard for them to go homeless in their old age, especially with poor mother so sick and helpless, and oh, how different it all might have been if only one of the boys had been spared! Then his voice kind of broke, and a thin, white hand stole from under the coverlid, and moved softly over his snowy hair. Then he went on to repeat that nothing could be so sharp again as the parting with those three sons—unless mother and he should be separated! But at last he fell to comforting himself with the fact that the dear Lord knew that it was through no fault of his own that mother and he were threatened with the loss of their dear little home, which meant beggary and the almhouse—a place they prayed to be delivered from entering, if it could be consistent with God's will. And then he quoted a multitude of promises concerning the safety of those who put their trust in the Lord. In fact, it was the most thrilling plea to which I ever listened. And at last he prayed for God's blessing on those who were about to demand justice."

The lawyer then continued, more slowly than ever: "And—I—believe I'd rather go to the poorhouse myself to-night than to stain my heart and hands with the blood of such a prosecution as that."

"Little afraid to defeat the old man's prayer, eh?"

"Bless your soul, man, you could't defeat it!" said the lawyer. "I tell you he left it all subject to the will of God; but he claimed that we were told to make known our desire unto God; but of all the pleadings I ever heard, that beat all. You see, I was taught that kind of thing myself in my childhood. And why was I sent to hear that prayer? I'm sure I don't know—but I hand the case over."

"I wish," said the client, twisting uneasily, "you hadn't told me about the old fellow's prayer."

"Why so?"

"Well, because I want the money the place would bring; I was taught the Bible straight enough when I was a youngster, and I hate to run counter to what you tell about. I wish you had not heard a word about it, and another time I wouldn't listen to petitions not intended for my ears."

The lawyer smiled.

"My dear fellow," he said, "you're wrong again. It was intended for my ears, and yours, too; and God Almighty intended it. My old mother used to sing about 'God moves in a mysterious way,' I remember."

"Well, my mother used to sing it, too," said the claimant, as ne twisted the claim papers in his fingers. "You can call in the morning, if you like, and tell 'mother and him' the claim has been met."

"In a mysterious way," added the lawyer, smiling.—Boston Globe.

LITTLE THINGS.

Suppose the little flowers should think
That they are much too small
To be of any use to us,
And so not bloom at all;
How much that's pleasant we should lose,
For as we pass them by,
See every little flower that blooms
Is pleasing to the eye.

And so, shall little children think
That they are much too small
To be of use to others here,
And do no good at all?
Ah! dearest children, think not so,
For little acts of love
Are pleasing in the sight of God,
And counted up above.

NEDDY'S LONG WORD.

"Remember, Neddy," said mamma, one day, "always to accommodate every one that you can."

"Yes'm," answered Neddy, "I will." And mamma felt sure he would, because Neddy is one of the very best boys to remember things you ever saw.

The next day Mrs. Camp called to him as he was running down the street with his new sled flying along behind him.

"Neddy, Neddy! come here a moment, won't you?"

Neddy heard her and stopped, though he didn't much want to. He was going over on the Wilson hill coasting, and was in a great hurry; but he went up to the door where Mrs. Camp was standing, and pulled off his fur cap with a polite little bow, which pleased the lady very much.

"Will you run down to the store for me, dear?" she asked. "I want a spool of twist, and I have no one to send."

Neddy's eyes clouded up the least bit in the world, but Mrs. Camp was looking in her purse for the right change, and didn't notice; and before she found it, the bright sun of good-nature was shining again in Neddy's eyes, and he answered: "Yes'm," as cheerfully as could be.

It didn't take long, after all. The store was not a great way off, and there was no other customer; and Neddy, in less than five minutes, was back again with the spool of twist.

"Thank you," said Mrs. Camp, smiling at him. Then she took a bright, new dime from her purse. "Here is something for you to buy peanuts with," said she kindly, "and I am very much obliged, besides."

But Neddy shook his head at the dime, though he liked peanuts almost as well as maple sugar, which is saying a good deal.

"You're welcome as can be, but I can't take pay for going, Mrs. Camp, 'cause, you know, mamma tells me always to a-baominate every one I can!"

Didn't Mrs. Camp laugh? She couldn't help it, though she tried so hard that she choked and frightened Neddy, who could not think what the trouble was.

"Bless your dear heart!" said she as soon as she could speak. And then she went to the corner-closet and took out a little pyramid of maple sugar; more than Neddy could have bought at the store for two dimes. "There," said she, "I know you like sap sugar, don't you? And this isn't pay; it's a present."

"Oh, thank you," cried Neddy, eagerly. "I'll go right home and show it to mamma!"

So he did; and Mrs. Camp sat down by her window and laughed and laughed.

"Bless his dear little manly heart!" said she. —Youth's Companion.

FRED AND JOE.

Fred and Joe are boys of the same age. Both have their way to make in the world. This is the way Joe does: When work is before him he waits as long as he can; he hates to touch it. Then he does not half do it. He is almost sure to stop before it is done. He does not care if fault is found. He says:

"I can't help it," or "I don't care."

Fred's way is not the same. He goes straight to his work, and does it as soon as he can and as well as he can. He never slights work for play, though he loves play as well as Joe does. If he does not know how to do a piece of work well, he asks some one who does know, and then he takes care to remember. He says:

"I never want to be ashamed of my work."

Which boy do you think will make a man to be trusted?

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1891.

IN the olden times it used to be said in Germany that the Reformed in his theology commences with God, whilst the Lutheran starts with himself,—that is with his own subjective experience. There is no doubt some truth in this distinction, just as there generally is in such short, crisp sayings that get into vogue. But it would be manifestly unjust to say that the Lutherans do not look up to God for light or that the Reformed do not look down into their own inward sanctuaries for truth. At the present day the Christian consciousness is frequently referred to as a source of divine truth, and as Reformed theologians freely use the term it looks somewhat as if they were Lutheranizing. Possibly they are getting nearer the Lutheran standpoint, just as they should, and vice versa, with the Lutherans. It would be a good sign, if both sides could make up their minds to do so. It augurs well for the sister Church that it takes kindly to the terms Christological and Christocentric, for in Christ we are all one, even if both at present seek out different camping grounds.

WITH many others, we had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Ruetenik during his recent trip to the eastern part of the Church, where he once labored. The information he gave concerning Calvin College at Cleveland, its spirit or animus, and its aspirations, was in an eminent degree satisfactory no doubt to us all. It is an Anglo-German institution, based on the idea of an Anglo-Germanism, developed and emphasized at Mercersburg by Rauch, Nevin and Schaff, a long time ago. It is not strange, therefore, that the College President got just what he very much needed at this time in his school, the pecuniary means to carry the College forward more effectually in its various operations. Many, and very many of us, we hope, at least, have taken a deep interest in the success of strictly German churches within our bounds. Our future spread and increase as a denomination depends largely on the immigration of Reformed people from Germany and Switzerland to this country. But apart from such considerations, are we not bound by the deepest sense of duty to do what we can in supplying these strangers, our own relatives we might say, with churches and the means of grace? Their schools of learning are most manifestly worthy of our sympathy, our prayers and our practical support. They are still in the days of small things, but they will grow; and we predict that with the divine blessing, Calvin College will become a powerful and influential institution of learning, if not during the present century, then in the next.

IT afforded us sincere pleasure a short time ago to meet our old friend, Dr. Gantenbein, our veteran missionary on the Pacific coast during his recent visit to the East. He looks well, and appears to be remarkably well preserved for one of his age. We saw him some seventeen or eighteen years ago, just before he started out for Oregon. The friends of missions in the Eastern Synod had cheerfully contributed the means to transport him and his family across the Isthmus of Panama to Oregon. He was then full of faith and hope, and he is of the same mind still. At Portland he went to work to gather together a congregation, which was a work of no small difficulty, as it was understood that it was to be based on strictly evangelical principles. For a period of time he was sustained by the Eastern Boatd of Missions, but a number of years ago his mission became self-sustaining, and it is now doing what it can for other poor missions. At present it owns a fine church, a parsonage, a building for the parochial school, and so on, in the central part of the city, now worth ten times as much as they cost, without any incumbrance or debt resting on it.—Dr. Gantenbein has also been active in planting other missions on the Pacific coast. A short time ago he lost his beloved wife by death, who always stood by him in his work. Her departure was a loss not only to him but to the cause of missions also. At present he is on his way to Germany, where he no doubt will excite interest in German missions in this country wherever he goes. After a short stay in his fatherland he will return to his field of labor on our western coast, where, notwithstanding past discouragements and drawbacks, he still believes our Church has a future. He is right. It could not be otherwise, unless we in the East are so unwise as not to look after this interesting field, and cultivate it.

THE EUROPEAN STATES.

For the last few years, the world has been expecting the outbreak of a terrific war in Europe, which, it was feared, would reach continental proportions. Central Europe has been massed in a triple alliance, professedly for the maintenance of peace. France, having recovered from the disastrous effects of the Franco-Prussian war, has been untiring in her preparations for renewing the contest with Germany, for the recovery of her lost national prestige, and the winning back of her lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. While Russia, chafing under the effects of the Congress of Berlin, by which she was despoiled of the fruits of her victory over Turkey, has steadily been equipping herself for a renewed assertion of her traditional policy of acquiring Constantinople, and thus securing the control of the Mediterranean Sea, together with all the far-reaching results which that control would involve. All this time, each of these nations has been increasing its armament, improving its arms and holding its armies on a war footing, at an expense which has well nigh involved its exchequer in bankruptcy, and deranged its social order and propriety. And it has been the prevailing thought, that the tremendous strain to which these nations have been subjected, would speedily precipitate the issue, and result in perhaps the greatest war of modern times.

For the last two or three years, each recurring spring time, it was expected would bring with it the opening of hostilities. But up to this time no hostile demonstration has been made. And now, the outlook for continued peace is better than during the last year or two.

France, it was supposed, would make common cause with Russia, should Russia, in endeavoring to move on Constantinople by occupying Bulgaria, be resisted by the Triple Alliance, thus opening a favorable opportunity of calling Germany to an account, and winning back her lost provinces. Accordingly, as we are informed, she proposed to Russia to enter into a defensive alliance with her. Without this, notwithstanding her full readiness for action, she was held subject to the pleasure and action of Russia. For to have acted alone, she would find herself confronted by the Triple Alliance. Thus was France handicapped, and hence sought a defensive alliance with Russia, thus securing to herself a goodly measure of action. For then, should she move upon Germany, Russia would be called upon to go to her assistance. But unhappily for this scheme, Russia declined to enter into the proposed alliance. Thus indicating her unwillingness to abdicate her position as master of the situation. She is now arming her forces with a new rifle, which will engage her attention some two or three years. During the execution of this change, she will not be ready for action. Consequently she declines any entangling alliance. This declination on the part of Russia, is acting something as a dampener upon French ardor, and now to abate still more her confidence in the Muscovite, here comes the award of Russia, who was chosen as arbitrator in a question of territorial rights in South America between Holland and France, deciding adversely to the French claims and favorably to Holland. And France now sits, chewing the cud of chagrin in the midst of the collapse of her warlike schemes.

The present status then seems to be, Russia is not ready for hostile action, and does not propose to be forced prematurely; and France in the meantime is compelled to remain quiet. Hence the outlook for Europe is, that there will be no war for at least two or three years to come.

Synodical Editors.

(Elected by the Synods.)

AT COMMENCEMENT TIME.

The day was very warm, and the hour of noon was approaching, and the Synodical Editor was very uneasy, for the omnibus was late in coming. It was very doubtful whether we could reach the train, when that useful vehicle drew up before the parsonage door. Something had gone wrong, the driver explained, and it had been found necessary to make an exchange of horses; he would do his best to get us to the station in time. So the driver exerted himself, and the boy sitting beside him administered various and vigorous lashings to the horses, and the horses did the duty they were expected to do, and we went clattering through the streets. "I think I will get you there," said the driver, looking backward at us over his left shoulder, as we sat watch in hand. He was right in his expectation. Thus the Synodical Editor feared and trembled, and good-natured omnibus-men exerted themselves, and innocent horses were flogged, all in order that we might be at Palatinate College on the evening of Wednesday, June 17th, and deliver an address on "Realism and Idealism" on the occasion of the twenty-fourth Anniversary of the Palatinate Literary Society.

There was part of a minute to spare. We leaned back in our place with a feeling of relief. We had lately succeeded in meeting many engagements, both ordinary and extraordinary; it was a gratification that we were not going to be baffled in meeting this one. There is an immense satisfaction, reader, in being able to meet one's appointments. For a while we read; and then, sitting by the open window, we closed our eyes (for we were rather tired) and allowed the sweet, clean June air to fan our cheeks. Suddenly we were conscious that something had happened; a new and subtle influence was in the air; there was a breath as if from Paradise. It was the scent of the new-mown hay, from the hay-field which, as we opened our eyes, we saw that we were passing. How strange and subtle a thing is this or that particular fragrance! It seems to touch a chord within us; it sets in motion a whole train of memories and thoughts; it transports us to other times and distant scenes. Here was a whiff of the fragrance of freshly mown hay; and, instantly, we were no longer in a Cumberland Valley R. R. car; we are no longer on our way to deliver an oration on "Realism and Idealism;" we are far away; we are once more in the years of youth; in the fragrant hay-field; helping to make hay; or finding birds' nests on the ground; or driving the cows home, across the fields in the sweet and dewy evening. This sets us to musing on the mysterious Law of Association, as it has been called. And we recalled to mind a certain passage in one of Burns' letters, which struck us when we read it as a boy, because it speaks of the mysterious influence upon our souls of certain particular sights, scents or sounds. In this passage, which we cannot quote entire, Burns says: "I never hear the loud, solitary whistle of the curlew in a summer noon, or the wild mixing cadence of a troop of gray plover in an autumnal morning, without feeling an elevation of soul like the enthusiasm of devotion or poetry. Tell me, my dear friend, to what can this be owing? Are we a piece of machinery which, like the Æolian harp, passive, takes the impression of the passing accident?"

We fall in, as we proceed on our journey, with pleasant fellow pilgrims to the same shrine; with Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Groh, whose daughter is to graduate there the next day; with Rev. H. Hilbish, who is being drawn to the same place by a similar interest. Arrived at Myerstown, we are met at the station by the Secretary of the Palatinate Society, Mr. M. W. Schweitzer, in whom we are pleased to find a son of our good Seminary friend, of former days, the Rev. S. Schweitzer, and at the College we are cordially welcomed by Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Schaeffer. We find ourselves in the midst of the pleasant stir of the first stage of a Commencement season. It is pleasant to see these groups of handsome boys and girls, and to feel the gentle and wholesome excitement of the hour. After all, we think, life in an institution of learning has a peculiar and characteristic charm of its own. The teacher's lot has its hardships; it has, also, its enjoyments. When a friend condoled with Dr. John H. Raymond, formerly President of Vassar College, because of the supposed hard and dull routine of his life as a teacher, it is said that Dr. Raymond, with the gentle smile that was characteristic of him, replied: "You find your inspiration in new truth; we find ours in new minds." Is there not much in coming in contact continually with new minds, with fresh personalities, and in being able to be an instructor and inspirer of these? This is the charming and inspiring side of a teacher's life, which, doubtless, on the other hand, has also its own trials and troubles. Let us neither envy nor pity the teacher; let us admire him, and be grateful to him.

All Commencements are interesting; all beginnings, and likewise all endings; and the College Commencement unites the two in one. The cynic makes light of the occasion; with his usual shallowness, he feels it in his bounden duty, making it the occasion of editorial comment, to remind the boy and girl graduates that they are not as much as they suppose themselves to be; that they have very false notions of actual life; that none of them are going to set the world on fire, &c., &c. We doubt whether many of them need this surly exhortation; we question whether any of them expect to set the world on fire. To him who has an eye to see, there is an infinite significance and interest in every College Commencement. All human life is interesting; all its occasions, whether of joy or sorrow, are sacred. These young persons have arrived at, and are now celebrating the close of, an important period in the history of their lives. They are about to bid adieu to their school, to their teachers, to each other. Their school-days lie behind them, holding memories that will always be sacred; their future lies before them, vast, vague, shadowy,—what will it bring forth? We confess that we would not like to be an intimate companion of that man who is destitute of the power of perceiving the interest and significance, or of feeling the tenderness and pathos, of a school or College Commencement.

There is one thing in a Commencement which always interests us,—the presence of the parents. Who can fail to sympathize with the interest which they take in this occasion? Where their children are, there their hearts are. Each one of these graduates is the center of a domestic history; some of them represent anxieties, trials and struggles known only to the parents and to Him who knows all hearts. We like to look at the pleased and thoughtful face of that elderly man in the Commencement audience, as he sits there leaning upon his cane. He is thinking of the past, as well as the present. He remembers his own college-days, and the day of his own graduation. The time has come, or is coming, for him to say to his son, "You must increase, but I must decrease;" and he will say it calmly and joyfully. We sat talking, this evening, in the parlor, with one whom we had known at College, and who had come to be present at this Anniversary, at which his son is one of the orators. Friend, those college days of ours are pretty far back in the past now. Let us not lament the fact. Though youth be no longer ours, the world is full of youth and gladness still; nor shall the beauty and enthusiasm of boyhood and girlhood ever fail from the earth. Let us rejoice in these; by sympathy with youth let us maintain a certain youthfulness of spirit for ourselves; even to the last, may there be something of the spirit of Commencement in our lives.

We cannot tell you, reader, about the Commencement exercises of Palatinate College; we were not permitted to be present at the Commencement proper, which took place on the day following our visit. We are a pilgrim and a stranger; we can tarry but a night; we come in the evening and go away in the morning. We are pleased with what we see here; with the order, the good behavior, the good work that has evidently been done. There will be many to regret the withdrawal of Dr. Schaeffer, so eminently fitted for work like this, and so successful in it. It is a matter of personal interest to us that he goes to serve as pastor of our first pastoral charge, at Huntingdon, Pa., and our best wishes follow him thither.

Another pen will tell of the performances of the Anniversary and of Commencement Day. We would like to mention individually the young people who rendered so well the beautiful music and delivered so creditably the thoughtful and earnest orations of the Anniversary; but that is not the object of this hurried article. We will only add that the oration on "Realism and Idealism" was listened to with a degree of respectful attention which almost seemed to imply an unconscious reference to the fact that, a few hours before, drivers had toiled and horses had suffered in order that it might be delivered.

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."—Minutes of Synod, 1888.

THE SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the approaching Spiritual Conference to convene in the Chapel of Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa., on the evening of July 29th, at 8 o'clock. The program appeared some time ago in the MESSENGER and will not now be repeated here.

It is proposed to print a limited number of programs, and any one making application to the undersigned will receive by return mail, free of charge, one or more copies, as may be desired. It is not proposed to send out copies of the program unless asked for, because, in the first place, to send to all the ministers would imply considerable gratuitous labor, much of which would result in no good. And in the next place, it ought to be fair to presume that any one interested in the Conference will find what appears in the church papers on the subject. But such persons as are sufficiently interested in the meeting to make application for programs shall not be disappointed. Send in your applications stating how many copies are wanted and you may expect to be supplied by return of mail.

The committee does not regard it necessary to "write up" the Conference; the more than sixty brethren who were present last year, and others who attended in former years, will testify to the very pleasant and profitable week spent in the manner provided for.

As some of the brethren complained that in former years too much time was assigned to work and too little to recreation we have endeavored to remedy this fault, if such it be, by having fewer lectures than formerly. It will be remembered, however, that a great deal of the benefit and pleasure received comes from the social intercourse, impromptu discussions, renewal of old friendships and the forming of new acquaintances.

Perhaps it ought to be added that the elders of the Church are specially invited. Few have been in attendance heretofore, but the purpose of the Conference is to have as many of them as possible give their time and presence and in this way not only give encouragement to the Conference but also be greatly benefited themselves.

Boarding as heretofore, will be furnished at Harbaugh Hall to those who desire it, but not by the same boarding master. Mr. McKinstry has moved elsewhere, but Mr. Theodore Glass has taken possession and offers boarding at the very reasonable price of $3.50 for the term or for less time in proportion.

A CARD.

Rev. J. David Miller and family would tender their sincere thanks for the many kind expressions received from their friends in their recent bereavement.

REJOICE! MY CHILD, REJOICE!

BY SUSANNA CORRELL.

I knelt beneath the cross,
And saw as ne'er before,
The anguish of the Friend
Who my transgressions bore.
And bitter tears I wept
That I could not repay,
That debt of love so great,
Increasing every day.

A Presence seemed so near,
I heard a gentle voice,
These cheering words it spake:
"Rejoice! my child, Rejoice!"
Oh! Yes, the sorrow's past,
The dead to life returned,
And angels sing the praise
The "Friend of sinners" earned.

No longer weep and mourn
Beneath the cross's gloom;
Nor stand with broken heart
Before the guarded tomb.
To heaven lift up your eyes,
And there your King behold;
His crown of thorns has changed
To one of sparkling gold.

And changed His life of woe,
To one of bliss supreme.
Of all His glory there
Earth's mortals cannot dream.
Then, oh rejoice! Rejoice!
For you through Him may llve,
And to His service here
Your time and talents give.

Though you can ne'er repay
That nameless debt of love;
Oh! strive some soul to win
To that bright home above.
And oh! when doubts arise,
Then listen for that voice,
That speaks in tenderness,
"Rejoice! my child, Rejoice!"

Science and Art.

A pocket telephone has been introduced in Berlin. The idea upon which its use is based is that electric bells are found everywhere, and there is no reason why they should not be used for telephoning as well. The pocket telephone is to be connected to the bell wires of the hotels and hospitals as well as private houses, and it is claimed that people will be able to speak to distant places by simply taking their telephone out of their pockets as they would their watch.

Professor Pickering describes in the Sidereal Messenger fourteen photographs of the planet Mars, which were taken on two successive days, the 9th and 10th of April, seven on each day, in the second of which the southern polar white spot was much larger than in the former series. In the first day's photographs the spot was dimly marked, as if veiled by fog or by particles too small to be represented separately; but on the second day the region was brilliantly white. The date of the event corresponded with the end of the southern Winter of Mars, or with the middle of February; the event itself was a snowstorm.

Items of Interest.

There are at present 553 Protestant pastors, evangelists and teachers engaged in Gospel work in Italy.

Caprivi, the German chancellor, is a warm friend of the mission cause. He sent an official representative to the Mission Conference held recently in Halle.

Ex-Empress Carlotta, who lost her reason when her husband, Maximilian, was shot by the Mexicans, has at last recovered. But the unfortunate woman remembers nothing of the long 25 years since the terrible tragedy.

The Peter's Pence of 1890 has amounted to fully half a million lire less than it was in 1889, and, as a consequence, the Papal household had determined to seek new resources of income. The Pope's budget for 1891 has a deficit of 200,000 lire.

A peculiar disease, said to resemble the terrible "black-plague" malady, which infested Europe for some years, has broken out among the Hungarians in the coke regions of this State. There are 20 cases in the Westmoreland Home, and 200 in the region.

It is said that Alexander Rankin, the Scotchman who succeeded John Brown as Highland Servant to the Queen, has obtained almost as marked an influence in the royal household as Brown possessed. He is the personal attendant of the Queen on every journey.

The constitution of Brazil deprived priests and employees of the Catholic church of the right to vote, and debarred priests from becoming members of congress. This was because they held their allegiance to spiritual superiors stronger than their allegiance to the State.

Hints and Recipes.

To have the crust of a potpie brown, set the pot on a few coals before the fire, and turn it frequently.

A Chicago woman recommends the use of horse radish as an alleviation, if not cure, for the grippe. It should be eaten at intervals during the day as well as at table.

To keep the bread-jar and cake-box sweet, rinse, after washing, with boiling water in which a little common soda has been dissolved; then set out of doors for a few hours.

To help keep the air pure in a living-room, have a large vase or jardiniere filled with cold water. It will absorb bad gases to such an extent that in a few hours it would be utterly unfit to drink.

It frequently happens that painters splash the plate or other glass windows when they are painting the sash. When such is the case, melt some soda in very hot water and wash them with it, using a soft flannel. It will entirely remove the paint.

Rice is very nice for dessert when prepared with strawberry jam. Put a layer of rice, cooked rather thick, on a plate; spread the rice with jam and cover with another layer of rice, then a layer of jam, and lastly a layer of rice. Sprinkle the top with fine sugar. Serve with cream.

Farm and Garden.

The tomato is both a fruit and a vegetable. The common distinction between a fruit and a vegetable is that the former may be eaten raw, the latter cooked. But a better distinction, having fewer exceptions, is that a fruit is sweet when ripe, while the vegetable is not. Perhaps a combination of the two distinctions makes the best definition: A fruit is sweet and may be eaten raw, a vegetable is not sweet, and needs to be cooked.

"When eggs are sold by the pound—as they must be by and by"—says a correspondent of the Tribune, "we shall all be surprised to learn that feed has more to do with size and weight of eggs than has breed. My hens when at large lay far bigger, finer eggs in moist weather, when worms are plenty, than during dry times, when the angler's bait has to burrow deep to find moisture. I believe meat is the poulterer's best food-material, especially when the birds do their own chopping."

SHADE TREES VIEWED HYGIENICALLY.—Large trees in the near neighborhood of a house may damage the foundations of a frail building by the development of lateral roots; but, according to Dr. Felix L. Oswald, from a hygienic point of view their benefit outweighs on the whole all objections. They mitigate the glare of the summer sun by a screen which opens just when sunshine is most needed, and for prospect purposes it is easy enough to cut out vistas in front of balconies or sitting-room windows. Moreover, leaf trees exhale oxygen and absorb a variety of noxious gases. "A fine tree park," says the Swiss sanitarian, Schrodt, "is a better preservative of health than a dozen drug stores," and, in spite of surrounding swamps, the town of Savannah, Ga., with its fourfold rows of magnificent shade trees, is the healthiest city of our southern coast lands.

Deaths.

Obituaries to be inserted must be no longer than two hundred and fifty words.

DIED.—June 18, 1891, in Pueblo, Col., Amos Kremer, son of Rev. J. David Miller, aged 28 years, 9 months, and 20 days, after an illness of about three weeks, resulting from a spinal injury received in a stage coach while in the line of an extensive business, in the special service of the commercial agency.

The deceased was born in Lancaster, Pa., in August, 1862. He was baptized in infancy, by the writer, with water taken from the River Jordan by his father, when a member of the United States Survey Exhibition to the Holy Land.

Reared in the bosom of a God fearing household, Mr. Miller, at an early age, was received into the fellowship of the church at the hands of his reverend father by the solemn rite of confirmation. This profession he honored by a consistent and noble life, attested by the high esteem in which he was held in his extensive and responsible business relations. In the department of his secular vocation he is deeply lamented, for his urbane manners, and for his scrupulous fidelity and efficiency in the management of his important trust.

His remains were brought to Lancaster on the 23rd of June, and laid by the side of his kindred, in his native city. The funeral services were held at the residence of his aunt, Mrs. G. W. Dodge, and there were assembled quite a number of the relatives and friends of the bereaved family.

The clergy present were—Drs. Dubbs and Titzel, Revs. D. W. Gerhard, A. C. Whitmer, and Professor Bowman. Drs. Dubbs and Titzel conducted the services at the house, which were followed with an address by the writer, all the brethren joining in a full responsive service at the grave.

"He has gone to his rest in peace,
And sleeps with the pious dead;"
From all the woes of earth released,
To dwell with Christ our Head!"

A. H. K.

DIED.—Margaret Caroline Ramsaur was born September 20, 1824. She died in Hickory, N. C., June 16, 1891, aged 66 years, 8 months and 21 days. She was married to Rev. Jeremiah Ingold December 14, 1843. They lived happily together for 47 years, 8 months and 27 days. The result of this union was eight children. Four of this number are living. Four have already crossed the river, and standing at the gates of the beautiful city were waiting to welcome their mother home. The children living are Mrs. J. F. Murrill, Mrs. G. C. Bost, and Frank Ingold, of Hickory, and Mrs. Henry Pitts, of Catawba, N. C.

Mother Ingold was a model woman. Born of noble parentage she inherited many inestimable traits of character. In infancy she was dedicated to God in holy baptism. In early life she was taught and instructed in His word, and confirmed a member of His church. This profession she ever adorned by a holy walk and conversation. Obliging as a neighbor, kind to the poor, devoted to her church, an earnest Christian, she died loved by all.

As a minister's wife she was a noble example. Few ministers' wives have so endeared themselves to the people. In sympathy with his work she was a true helpmeet to her husband, and her life, an example of holy living, was one to be imitated by all his flock. Father Ingold will miss her greatly. We bespeak the prayers of the church for him in this hour of sore affliction.

Her funeral, conducted by her pastor, assisted by Drs. Clapp and Foil, was attended by a large number of sympathizing friends. Her body was laid tenderly away in Oakwood Cemetery, while loving hands gently placed flowers upon the grave.

We commend the bereaved family to Him who does all things well.

J. L. MURPHY.

DIED.—Suddenly, at his residence, near Gettysburg, Pa., on the 2d of June, 1891, Mr. David Eckert, aged 54 years, 8 mos. and 2 days.

Mr. Eckert was a life-long member of the church. His disposition was kind and loving. As a citizen he was respected and esteemed by all who knew him. His place in the sanctuary was seldom vacant. At different times he faithfully and conscientiously filled the office of deacon. He never failed to respond to the calls of duty in the church. A faithful wife and two consecrated children mourn his departure. The Lord keep and comfort them.

NOTES ON THE MEETING OF CLASSIS OF EAST SUSQUEHANNA.

The time for the annual meeting of Classis is past. The business for another year is considered and provision made. It now rests in the hands of the various pastors and members for the fulfillment or accomplishment of that part of the Lord's work entrusted to them for the coming year.

In writing upon this subject I desire to mention some of the particulars observed.

In the opening of Classis, as is often the case, the President of Classis preaches the opening sermon, after which the services close with hymn and benediction, the congregation dismissed when the Classical organization is effected.

The organization is a part of the service and no break should be made from the opening to the close of the service. Many Classes closely observe this mode of procedure in their organization. I was never able to understand why there should be such a break in the service of the organization of Classis.

One of the peculiarities so noticeable in the opening of Classis is so many absentees. Why is it? The brethren had a whole year's time to arrange their business and work that it seems possible for them to be present at the opening of Classis.

Contingencies often arise over which we have no control. For such there is an excuse. But it is often found by a little observation that it is a habit with many to be late or not present at the opening of the first few sessions of Classis.

Very likely it is a habit into which some of the brethren get. Some of the ministers at Classis are like some of the members at the services at church. They never can get ready for the opening, but will console themselves with the old time-worn excuse, "better late than never."

Often on account of these absentees the work of Classis is hindered and clogged. In the appointment of committees the President is handicapped. Not knowing whether the absent brethren are coming to Classis he hesitates to place them on committees. With those that are present the committees cannot be filled, unless putting an undue amount of labor on a few. This is unfair and needs no comment.

Then again we find that when the members of Classis are present and all seems moving along in regular order, and the business is being done with dispatch then some one must ask to be excused from further attendance on the sessions of Classis. This is what might be called a "starter." This starts a number of brethren to think they would like to be at home. They are suddenly reminded of some very important business that should be attended to, and desire very much to be excused.

A number have announced services at some of their points of preaching and are very anxious to get excused from further attendance at Classis so that this appointment may be filled. No such appointments should be made, because every minister of Classis knows or should be conscious of the fact that his presence is desired at Classis from the opening to the closing.

The Classical communion is one of the features that is to be highly commended and rigidly observed by every member of Classis. Every member should be constrained to feel that he should most sacredly observe this holy ordinance. This is not possible when they are excused and leave before the Holy Sabbath dawns. Nor are they present when they leave on Saturday evening and return to Classis Monday morning. They may be present, so to speak, in spirit; but no doubt it is more desirable when present in body and spirit.

Then again do we find that at Classis many of the resident pastors of sister denominations make a request to have some of the members of Classis to fill their pulpits and preach for them on Sunday morning and evening. Being tired out with committee work, during the week, or other work that may have fallen to his care no pastor certainly feels like preaching or doing work outside of that belonging to Classis on the Lord's Day. It is well enough to preach for a strange pastor and become acquainted with him and his people; but how long does the acquaintance last? The poor tired, overworked pastor may seek to confer a favor by acceding to the request often to be unappreciated and soon forgotten.

Nevertheless, with all the imperfections and shortcomings so visible and undesirable, the period of the Classical meeting is fruit bearing. The overworked and discouraged pastor is greeted and cheered by a brotherly and sympathetic feeling until he forgets his woes and with renewed confidence and trust in himself and in the promises of Christ the Head of the Church he goes back to his field of labor with cheerfulness and hope.

Not knowing the inward movement of every ministerial life—that is, his joys and sorrows, his hopes and disappointments, his success or failures, his painful sacrifices and self-denials—should be a sufficient reason to be guarded in all expressions in debate on the floor of Classis that might add pain to an already overburdened heart.

Classis should be like an oasis in the desert to which the weary way-worn, travel-stained, pilgrim comes to seek rest and renewed vigor.

How kindly would it be if there were more pastors like the angel stirring the water in the pool and stretch the helping hand and with words of cheer bid his brother man step down and wash and be strong.

THE REDEDICATION OF THE REFORMED CHURCH AT ST. PETERSBURG, PA.

Sunday, June 21st, was a day of unusual joy and happiness for the pastor, Rev. S. S. Miller, and the members of the Reformed church at St. Petersburg. The occasion of their rejoicing was the rededication, after extensive repairs, and the liquidation of old debts that had long hindered the work of the congregation.

The history of the St. Petersburg congregation is in many respects unique. Few congregations have had greater moral and financial difficulties than this one has had during the past twenty years. In 1870 with the greatest difficulty it was able to pay a pastor for one-fourth of his time. Two years later on account of the discovery of oil on the farms of its members it became, for the time being, one of the wealthiest congregations in the church. The sudden acquisition of wealth had the same demoralizing effect upon the congregation as a whole that it usually has upon an individual. This effect was enhanced by the multitude of evil influences that invariably follow in the wake of the oil-excitement. But notwithstanding these things a few years later a magnificent church was built, and, during the meeting of Pittsburgh Synod at St. Petersburg, in 1877, was dedicated with a debt of $9,000, which a short time afterwards was nearly all paid. In the meantime, however, the oil-excitement had gone and with it had departed the wealth of many of the members of the congregation. One after another of these either left the place or dropped their membership. Those who tried earnestly to remain faithful became discouraged, because of the general demoralization around them. Amidst these discouragements the congregation was suddenly reminded by a huge mass of plastering falling to the floor that in building the church the workmen did the plastering and frescoing during the cold days of winter.

In the course of two or three years afterwards nearly all the plastering had fallen from the ceiling and the fresco from the walls, so that the once beautiful church presented a ghastly appearance. Investigation revealed the fact that on account of negligence the roof leaked badly and the gutters were almost entirely destroyed. In the meantime debts were allowed to accumulate, the classical apportionment was left unpaid, and the members seemed entirely disheartened and unwilling to take hold of any part of the work.

Under these circumstances, less than a year ago, Rev. Simon S. Miller accepted a call to the pastorate of this charge. He was not long at taking in the situation. He soon realized that the success of his work depended to a great extent upon the immediate payment of all old debts and the repairing of the church building. With subscription book in hand he at once visited every member of the congregation. At first this work was viewed with doubts and fears by almost everyone save Pastor Miller, who, with his genial manner and self denying earnestness and faith, soon won the hearts of his members and made the work an assured success.

The church was repaired within and without so successfully that only words of commendation could be heard. The universal verdict is that the church looks better now than it did when first completed fourteen years ago.

On the morning set apart for the rededication the large church was filled at an early hour. Every one in the community seemed interested in the work. There were present to assist the pastor on this occasion Revs. C. U. Heilman, Alexandria, Pa.; S. T. Wagner, Monroe, Pa.: A. M. Keifer, Greenville, Pa.; and Rev. Holt of the Presbyterian church. The sermon at the morning service was preached by Rev. A. M. Keifer, from the text Acts 4: 14. "And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it." After the sermon the pastor announced that $450, beside what had already been subscribed, would cover all the expenditure on repairs and in addition pay all the old debts resting on the congregation. Bro. C. U. Heilman then took the floor and in his masterly way undertook to raise the required amount. After some time the amount was so nearly raised that the pastor proceeded to rededicate the church. In the evening Bro. Heilman preached from the text Heb. 1: 14, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" It was then announced that $21.50 must be raised. In a very short time this amount was pledged and the pastor announced that during the afternoon he had procured a subscription of $25.

Thus ended a joyful day for the congregation at St. Petersburg; a day long to be remembered by all who participated in the services, and a day which no doubt will mark a new epoch in its history and work. The pastors and members are to be congratulated that under so many trying difficulties they have been able to accomplish this great work to the honor and glory of our Heavenly Father. May the richest blessing of God be with them in their work. A. M. K.

and fair sun, constituting a weather prophet's ideal summer day, were regarded as an auspicious omen for the growing enterprise of the Reformed church in West Bethlehem. The new chapel was well filled with attentive listeners, members of Christ church and friends of the Sunday-school movement. Many who had been in the building for the first time were agreeably surprised to find that the cozy little chapel had so large a seating capacity, accommodating more than 200 people. The building has been occupied by the school since last January, but was not to be given to the Lord until every cent of obligation had been met. The building and furniture are a gift from the members of Christ church, who with their pastor were happy yesterday in having reached the consummation of their plans. The pulpit was decorated with flowers, and on either side of it potted plants were tastefully arranged.

The service of consecration was opened by the Rev. G. W. Richards, assistant to Dr. Dubbs, in Allentown, who read the dedication canticle and offered prayer. Rev. W. F. More, of Catasauqua, read appropriate Scripture lesson and announced the hymn:

'O God, who lovest to abide,
In Zion's chosen gate,
More than the thousand tents beside,
Where Israel's chosen wait.'

The pastor, Rev. G. A. Schwedes, by whose activity the chapel had been erected and paid, then read the dedication service and consecrated the house of worship and instruction to children, to the worship of the Triune God. After another hymn, Rev. A. J. G. Dubbs, D.D., delivered a German address on the historical growth of the Reformed church in Lehigh and adjacent counties since the first organization in the year 1730; the Doctor asserted that the Reformed were the first to possess the land and therefore have the first right to it. His address teemed with vigor and happy remarks appropriate to the occasion, and he took delight in congratulating the pastor and people on the progress they had made. Rev. W. F. More followed with an able discourse on 1 Peter 3: 15, 'But sanctify the Lord in your hearts,' in which he forcibly set forth the necessity of self-consecration in order to the full consecration of a house of worship to the divine service. Rev. N. Z. Snyder, of South Bethlehem, delivered an address which was highly appreciated by his hearers; he said it had required a great effort for him to reach the chapel at that hour of the afternoon, beause of pastoral duties elsewhere, and referred to it in his characteristic manner. The choir of Christ church, under the leadership of Prof. Diefenderfer, added greatly to the beauty of the service with a fitting anthem, during which the offerings were received. The Sunday-school, under the efficient leadership of the superintendent and organizer, Mr. George V. Snyder, is in a prosperous condition, and it is hoped that before many years the chapel will be too small for their accommodation."

On the evening of June 21st, Rev. C. Eberman, who had delivered the baccalaureate sermon at the Moravian Ladies' Seminary in the morning of the same day, addressed our congregation on Mission Work of New York City. Rev. Eberman is Moravian pastor in Brooklyn and performs missionary service among the degraded in the metropolis. His description of the slums, the degradation of sin, the cesspools of iniquity into which the lowest immigrants are dragged, the midnight missions, the work of heroic Christians, was very vivid and instructive. The hearer was made to feel that this country is an immense missionary field and perhaps only half developed with all our progress.

On Sunday, the 14th, Children's Day was observed. At the morning service a sermonette was delivered of special interest for the young. The flower and praise service in the afternoon was the children's own hour; excellent addresses were given by Elder M. L. Cortright and Mr. J. Stocker and the pastor. A young people's service was held in the evening. The flower display was one of the most extensive ever witnessed. S.

CHURCH WORK CONVENTION.

An interesting and profitable convention was held in Emmanuel's Reformed church, Manor Dale, Westmoreland Co., Pa., June 26–28, closing with work for the endowment of the Seminary professorship. The following program formed the basis of the several addresses:

1. The Church—How to Promote her Growth and how to Advance her Cause.

2. The Educational Work of the Church;

1st. In the Family, the Sunday-school, and the Class in Catechism.

2d. In Schools, Colleges and Seminaries.

3d. The History of the Theological Seminary—Its Trials and Triumphs.

4th. The Relation of the Theological Seminary to the Congregation.

Nearly all the addresses emphasized the living relation of the Church to Christ, and of the individual member with Christ in the Church. From this it followed that stress was laid on the nurture and development of the Christian life, and the necessary means to be employed for this purpose—e. g., the training of the children in the home, and the instruction of the young in schools and seminaries. So too the necessity of constant exercise of the new life in the work of the church was set forth, and this with special reference to educational agencies. The needs and claims of the Theological Seminary were clearly set forth by Rev. A. E. Truxal, a member of the endowment committee.

Addresses were delivered by all the ministers of the district, viz., Revs. N. H. Skyles, A. E. Truxal, F. W. Brown, J. N. Bauman, J. F. Snyder and D. A. Souders, also by Rev. F. E. Laufer, of Salina, and Elder W. R. Barnhart, who were present to show their interest in the work. Considering that this is a busy season for farmers, the attendance was good on Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening. The attendance on Sunday was large, probably more than 400 persons being present.

The close attention given showed how much the people were interested in the addresses and in the work presented for their consideration. No doubt much good was done which will bear the fruit of greater zeal in time to come.

The effect of the work done by the speakers became apparent when the people were visited in their homes, and were given an opportunity to subscribe to the endowment of the Pittsburgh Synod Professorship. The entire congregation, excepting a few families living a great way off, was canvassed for the endowment fund, on Monday and Tuesday, by Revs. Truxal, Skyles, Souders, the pastor, and the pastor's son, Nevin; and interesting, even if difficult, work it proved to be. The majority of the people knew the mission which brought us to their homes, they were expecting us, and had in most instances determined what to give. It is to their credit that in many instances they gave more than they had at first intended, and seemed happy in doing so.

The amount subscribed was liberal, and if the same proportionate sums be given by all the charges, the fund will be nearer $35,000 than $30,000.

It affords pleasure to mention that all the ministers were entertained together at the parsonage by Bro. Snyder and his hospitable family. How pleasant and helpful it is for the brethren to spend some time thus together in mutual consultation and mutual recreation! It strengthened and encouraged each of us for the work in hand, and has given us help for work in the several charges which we serve. We will long remember the pleasant hours at the parsonage.

The writer, who greatly enjoys a drive in the country, adds a word of thanks to Nevin Snyder and his good horse, Jimmie, for the pleasant drives over the hills. Jimmie is of West Virginia stock and a good traveller. The only objection to him is that he does not always mind his stops, and sometimes raises the occupants of the rig from the seat. It is good to stir one's ideas up while in the endowment work, but to be raised bodily from the seat of a cart is not comfortable even though saving time is making money.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HUNGARIAN MISSION.

The friends of this mission have had no news from it for a considerable time. I therefore hasten to inform them that the work is going on with good success, and progress has been made especially in the way of an organization, which took place recently. On Sunday, May 3d, a general meeting of the Hungarian congregation was held (after divine service), and a constitution, written carefully by me after the pattern of American Reformed church constitutions, was adopted (with one slight alteration) unanimously. All members present put their signature to it, and I was charged to have it approved by the Classis and then printed for general distribution.

The meeting of Erie Classis took place on the 21st of May, at Toledo, O, and on the 25th a special committee composed of Pastors Stepler, Forwick and one elder, examined it carefully. I translated it word by word from Hungarian into German. The committee was satisfied with its tenor and only here and there an expression was changed. The committee having recommended this work to the Classis, it was approved as a whole, and at the same time the Hungarian Reformed Congregation of Cleveland, O., was received by the Erie Classis. So we are now, by God's grace, a regularly constituted Reformed congregation at Cleveland.

And inwardly, too, a remarkable progress has been made during these last months. Two elders were elected, John Veres and Francis Morvay, and besides these six deacons will be elected at our next congregational meeting. The audience is increasing every Sunday and is now always over 60, whilst it was only 30 to 40 during the winter. There are far more women coming now to the service, and Roman Catholics, too, come to hear the word of God.

I have ordered Bibles, hymnals, and catechisms from Hungary, and the people seem very ready to buy these books and impatiently await their arrival here.

I am not so satisfied with one thing in the congregation, viz., its contributions. There are very few who have contributed regularly to our expenses, though all promised to do so. I think, however, that it is only the strikes going on all this winter at Cleveland and the general stopping of work, which has hindered the people from doing their duty, and that they willingly will give their contributions when they will be freed from anxiety themselves.

I commend my work to the continued attention of those who have kindly followed its progress from the beginning.

ONE OF THE FEATURES OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ANDREW AND PHILIP.

We are continually reading in our Church papers the complaint that members, changing their place of residence, fail to connect themselves with the Reformed Church at the place to which they have removed. Sometimes it is because their pastor fails to look after them, but most always it is because of the indifference of the people themselves.

This gives us an opportunity of bringing before the Church a special feature of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, namely, its system of dismissing members from one chapter to another. A young man, a member of the chapter connected with the Church at a certain place removing to another, is given a card of dismission to the chapter at the place where he goes. On his arrival to his new home he is interested to know about the chapter connected with the Church and sets out to look it up. On entering the Church he is recognized by his badge as a member of the Brotherhood and the Reformed Church also. He is informed about their chapter meeting at which he presents his card, is received as a member and welcomed into their fellowship, after which, he is introduced to each one personally and thus is made to feel at home among them. And, as is often the case, the young man first finds the Church and the family comes with him, and he, being already acquainted, through the Brotherhood, is prepared to introduce the other members of the family. In the meanwhile the pastor is not idle, being President of the Brotherhood, on the presentation of the young man's card of dismission, he is not only made acquainted with the young man, but is informed further by his card which contains the name and address of former pastor and church, thus he is prepared to approach all the family and to welcome them as members of the Reformed Church. Otherwise it often takes months to get acquainted, both on part of the pastor with the people and people with congregation. And sometimes the people first make their acquaintanceship and are induced to join the Church of their acquaintances, whether it be Reformed or not. First associations in a new place often shape the future, and the Brotherhood recognizing this fact, seeks, by means of this system, to have the young men make their first acquaintance in their own Church, and thus save many who otherwise are lost to the Church and to the Saviour.

Fruit Pinwheels.

BY MARIA PARLOA.

Mix together and rub through a sieve one pint of flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, half a teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of Cleveland's baking powder. Into this mixture rub two generous tablespoonfuls of butter. Wet with a scant half-pint of milk. Sprinkle the board with flour, and, putting the dough upon it, roll down to a large square about half an inch thick. Spread a heaping tablespoonful of soft butter on this and then spread with a cupful of sugar and a cupful of currants. Grate a little nutmeg over all, and roll up like a jelly roll—or pinwheel style. Cut in slices about three-quarters of an inch thick and lay in well buttered pans. Do not let the slices touch each other. Bake in a very quick oven for about twelve minutes. These are nice for luncheon or tea.—(Copyright, 1891, by Cleveland Baking Powder Co.)

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

With Cleveland's Baking Powder cake keeps fresh; breads are fine grained; biscuit light and flaky. Try a can, Cleveland's.

INSTALLATION.

On June 24th, Rev. D. O. Shoemaker was installed pastor of the Stoytown charge, by a committee of Somerset Classis, consisting of Revs. A. R. Kremer, A. J. Heller, and H. King. The opening services were conducted by Rev. King, a very appropriate and edifying sermon was preached by Rev. Heller, and the office of installation was performed by Rev. Kremer.

Bro. Shoemaker enters upon the duties of his office in this charge with bright prospects of a successful pastorate. He and his people seem already to know each other, and pastor and people are evidently of one mind to work in the Lord's vineyard and build up His Zion. Those people are to be congratulated on their securing a pastor of large experience and well known efficiency.

Bro. Fouse, the indefatigable Superintendent of Missions, was also present, and at the close of the services presented his cause in a strong address, with good practical results. A. R. K.

A CORRECTION.

In an article entitled "Dedication of Faith Reformed Church, Reading, Pa.," published in the MESSENGER, July 2d, the statement is made that in the evening Rev. Miller announced that "Faith Mission was a free church—the first of the kind in the city of Reading." This is not correct, and does great injustice to the other churches. St. John's, Zion's, St.

Stephen's, Calvary, St. Andrew's, Olivet, and St. Thomas have no pew rents, and are as free as Faith Mission. And in all the Reformed churches of Reading strangers are as heartily welcome as in Faith Mission.

BRADDOCK MISSION.

Some time in June a card was sent to many of the ministers of the church, asking one dollar or more, if it could be spared, towards the purchase of a bell for our new church. To be given by the pastor, Sunday-school or Missionary Society. We hope that the card will not be tossed into the waste basket, until it is prayerfully considered. It is but a small request, yet looked upon favorably by all, will make quite an item to our little band of worshipers here.

The following have sent a response to the appeal, to whom our heartfelt thanks are hereby extended. Who will be added next to the list?

PENNSYLVANIA.

Anselma.—Rev. J. Lewis Fluck. Holy Communion was celebrated at St. Paul's on Sunday, June 28th, and at St. Matthew's on Sunday, July 5th. The attendance upon both services was very good, and about ninety per cent. of the membership participated. Fresh interest in church work seems to be awakening and the future is full of promise.

Heller's.—Children's Day. Children's Day services were held June 14th in Salem (Heller's) church, Rev. D. W. Gerhard, pastor. The church was beautifully decorated. The school entered singing a processional hymn, and enjoyed an excellent programme, including several recitations, and also an address by the pastor. The collection was for the Society of Disabled Ministers and in part for Beneficiary Education.

Mainville.—On Wednesday of last week the members of Emanuel's Reformed church at Mainville, tendered their pastor, Rev. G. B. Dechant, a very pleasant surprise in honor of his sixty-fourth birthday. After the first effects of the surprise were over a fine suit of clothes was brought out and presented to him, and later a handsome watch-guard. Having arrayed himself in his new attire, the pastor in a few words expressed his thanks and appreciation of their kindness. Nor was Mrs. Dechant forgotten, for when they had seated themselves about the table so bountifully supplied by the friends, her gift was found in gold carefully hidden in the folds of her napkin. After supper the evening was pleasantly passed, and when the friends departed for their respective homes it would have been hard to say which had found the most enjoyment in the occasion, the donors or the recipients.

Maytown.—Rev. M. M. Noacher. Children's Day service was observed at Conestoga June 21st, with appropriate exercises. The weather being very inclement kept many from enjoying these beautiful services. The exercises of the evening consisted of singing, recitations, and addresses. Instead of an address by the pastor he preached the anniversary sermon of his first year's pastorate. The decorations were beautiful. Offerings devoted to the Orphans' Home at Womelsdorf.

At Maytown the service was similar to that of Conestoga. The day was a perfect one, so far as the weather was concerned; and the exercises were interesting and profitable. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and greens. The new pulpit just put in by the "Ladies' Aid Society," added greatly to the appearance of the audience room of the church. The music was excellent, and the cantata, entitled, "The Christian Graces," performed by twelve little girls, under the supervision of Prof. Glenn, of Bedford county, was well received. These services are always well attended in our town, but this was beyond the average. Offerings, $6.25, devoted to the Orphans' Home at Womelsdorf.

Braddock.—St. Luke's Church, Rev. S. C. Long. The first quarter was closed in this mission by the celebration of the Holy Communion on the 28th ult. Services preparatory began on Thursday evening previous. On Friday evening, two persons, both heads of families, were received by renewal and confirmation. On Sunday four others were received by certificate, making the additions at this our first communion, six. The attendance was good. On Sunday evening a missionary service was held, and an offering received for missions.

Sunday, the 21st of June, at 6.30 P.M., this Sunday-school had an interesting Children's Day service, being the first the children enjoyed in the new church. A large audience was present. The floral display was beautiful, and some lessons were taught from the beautiful flowers.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore.—St. Paul's, Rev. Warren J. Johnson. Children's Day by the Sabbath School on the 28th ult., was marked by characteristic spirit and interest. The service used was an admirable one and faultlessly rendered. The elaborate decorations were harmonious and Scripturally suggestive, and were arranged by an efficient committee. A pleasant feature was the presence of the former pastor, Rev. M. L. Firor, who delivered an address. The pastor delivered the concluding address.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Upper Davidson.—Rev. J. C. Leonard. The first anniversary of the Young People's Missionary Society of Pilgrim congregation was held on Saturday evening, June 20th. The exercises consisted of recitations, addresses, a missionary dialogue written by a member of the society, and the best of music. The young people have done a good work during the year; among other worthy deeds they presented the congregation with a fine communion service. There is no telling what a spiritual power there is in a band of young people thoroughly consecrated to the service of Christ. This society has proved of great efficiency in aiding the pastor.

KANSAS.

Wichita.—At a communion held June 28th, there were nine additions—three by adult baptism and confirmation, two by confirmation and four from other churches who have lived out of the church for years, by a renewal of profession. The communion was large, as was also the attendance of visitors. With the 17 added on Easter this makes 26 new members received this spring.

PERSONAL.

Rev. M. O. Noll and bride, of Bellefonte, Pa., a notice of whose marriage will be found in the usual place, was accorded a pleasant reception on Friday evening, June 26th, by the members of the congregation at the residence of C. M. Bower, Esq. A large number were present and most cordially received their popular pastor and his bride. The evening was most agreeably and pleasantly spent in conversation and promenading. Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Bower were much commended for their kind hospitality and generous entertainment. The MESSENGER joins with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Noll in hearty well-wishes.

For a want of particulars, at this late date we note the marriage of Rev. D. N. Harnish of Butler, Pa., to Miss Mary E., daughter of Rev. P. C. Prugh, D.D., Superintendent of St. Paul's Orphan Home, Butler, Pa. The ceremony took place on June 4th, and was performed by the bride's brother, Rev. J. H. Prugh, of Pittsburgh, Pa. The MESSENGER wishes the happy couple well.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Eleventh Annual Reunion of the graduates of the different Soldiers' Orphans' Schools will be held at Reading, Pa., August 18–20, 1891. Full information can be had of Jacob A. Gramm, Box 547, Harrisburg, Pa., or of Isaac W. Hull, 217 Oley street, Reading, Pa.

In the Missionary Guardian of July it was stated under the head of W. M. S. of Lancaster Classis, that the Treasurer had reported that "over $600 had come into the hands of the Treasurer, of which amount nearly $400 had been given towards sending a lady missionary to the foreign field." The latter is correct, but the $600 has not yet come into the hands of Mrs. G. Z. Kunkle, the treasurer, but is coming, as will be seen by the acknowledgments in our columns. This correction is made with the view of preventing the impression being made by the above statement that the amount ($600) has been raised to equip the new lady teacher.

MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF LANCASTER CLASSIS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Lancaster Classis convened in annual session at Hummelstown, May 22, 1891, in the United Brethren church. At 10 o'clock, A.M., the meeting was called to order by the Vice-President, Mrs. Rev. D. W. Gerhard. Encouraging reports were read by the delegates. The following were elected as delegates to attend the Synodical Missionary Meeting at Harrisburg, in October, 1891: Mrs. Rev. M. H. Sangree and Mrs. C. K. Small, primarii, and Miss J. M. Powers and Miss Susan K. Keener, secundi.

From the treasurer's report it appeared that $28 had been paid to home and foreign work, and $150 was pledged to be paid into the Synodical treasury by the first of October, of which amount $50 was pledged by delegates present, $50 by the Woman's Missionary Society of Lancaster, Pa., and $51 remaining in the treasury. An interesting report was read by Mrs. G. Z. Kunkle, treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society of General Synod, showing that almost $700 had come into her hands, of which amount nearly $400 had been paid toward sending a new woman missionary to the foreign field.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of Mrs. Rev. D. W. Gerhard, president; Miss Susan K. Keener, vice-president; Miss Mary Graeff, recording secretary; Miss J. M. Powers, corresponding secretary; Miss Annie L. Nissley, treasurer.

It was decided to hold the semi-annual meeting in St. Paul's Reformed church, October 1, 1891. The Missionary Guardian was earnestly recommended.

At the evening services the devotional exercises were conducted by Dr. J. S. Stahr. An anthem by the choir, and solo and recitation by Miss V. Early of Hummelstown. Interesting and instructive addresses were delivered by Revs. M. M. Noacher, D. W. Albright, J. W. Meminger and J. H. Pannebecker.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF EAST SUSQUEHANNA CLASSIS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of E. Susquehanna Classis met in the Reformed church at Sunbury, June 15th, for the purpose of reorganization. After devotional services and reading of the constitution the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. W. H. Faries, Sunbury; vice-president, Mrs. A. C. Buck, Millersburg; recording secretary, Miss Agnes R. Shuman, Catawissa; corresponding secretary, Miss Christie Dietz, Sunbury; treasurer, Mrs. J. C. J. Kurtz, Shamokin; editress, Mrs. C. B. Schneder, Shamokin; organizing committee, Miss Annie Hanburger, Ashland, Miss Ella M. Dechant, Mt. Carmel; delegates to the Synodical meeting at Harrisburg, Mrs. W. H. Faries and Miss Agnes Shuman; alternates, Mrs. J. C. J. Kurtz and Mrs. C. B. Schneder.

It was resolved that this society give the Missionary Guardian its earnest support, and the delegates present were instructed to urge the pastors of the respective charges to bring this interesting publication to the notice of the people, and appoint persons at once to solicit subscriptions for the same.

It was further resolved that this society give to the Mt. Carmel congregation the sum of one hundred dollars, to be collected from the various charges by October 1st, 1891.

The ladies of this society entered into this reorganization full of zeal for this holy cause, and they earnestly hope for the active, practical support of every pastor in the Classis, for we feel that there is a great work to be done for the Master.

The meeting adjourned to meet at Catawissa, October 3rd, in executive session.

Editress.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

COMMENCEMENT OF EDGE HILL INSTITUTE.

The parlors of the Edge Hill Institute, which seat of learning is situated at Littlestown, Adams Co., Pa., on the evening of Friday, June 26th, were the scene of a most select and delightful gathering. It was the closing day of the year of study—the Commencement Day of the institution, so to speak—and a program of musical and literary selections happily arranged, had been prepared for the especial entertainment of the friends and patrons of the school. One fourth of the large parlor reserved for the performers, was shut off by a curtain which was opened and drawn between the several numbers of the program. The remainder of the room, together with the adjoining halls and outer porches was filled with visitors. As to the exercises, suffice it to say, that the program contained not a single poor numbr. The choruses and the quartettes were strong and even, both in shading and attack, while the soloists evinced a vast deal of preliminary training. The recitation, the piano duet and the overture were unusually good. As was to be expected, the dramatic part of the entertainment won the greatest share of praise, and it truly deserved such. The play presented was "The Women of Lowenburg," a historical comedy in five scenes, written by Miss E. Murray. The gist of the comedy is: The men of Lowenburg, in meeting assembled, vote to curtail the freedom of the women of the town with respect to their choice of Church, compelling their allegiance to the Church of their husbands' choice. The women resent this usurpation of their rights and go "on a strike." The men, left to cook their own meals and mind the "squawlin' brats," repent themselves of their selfish legislation and are glad enough to repeal their unwise enactment. Each one who took part in the comedy played his or her part with credit, and in several instances with distinction. The costumes were gay and striking, delineating with historical exactness that picturesque, staid burgher life of the 16th century which has furnished a theme for so many of our artists. The costumes were all made by the young ladies of the school.

Following is the program:

1. Overture, "Garden of Roses," by Miss Slagenhaupt on the piano and Messrs. Walter and Nevin Lefevre on the violins.
2. Quartette, "Come Where the Lilies," Misses Zecher and Yount, and Messrs. Unger and Gutelius.
3. "The Wild Ash Deer."
4. Recitation by Miss Evelyn May Hart.
5. Piano Duett by Miss Yount and Mr. Unger.
6. Quartette, "I have a cold."
7. Bugle Song, by Mr. W. M. Irvine.
8. Comedy, "The Women of Lowenburg."
9. "Taps," by Mr. W. M. Irvine.
10. Solo, "Bird from over the Sea," by Miss Rose Zercher.
11. Chorus, "Good Night."

Pianist, Miss Slagenhaupt.

Those who took part in the play:—Misses Yount, Noss, Evelyn Hart, Alice Hart, Clara Zercher, Rose Zercher, Katie Meyers, Faith Meyers, Hinkle and Crouse. Messrs. Fleagle, Maurice Unger, Parr, Wahler, Edward Unger, Curtis Hartman, Willis Hartman, Gutelius, Angel, Schriver, Wehant, Nevin Lefevre, James Lefevre, and Maurice Slagenhaupt.

Possibly none in the audience were more jubilant than Prof. and Mrs. W. E. Krebs. And they had abundant reason. Edgehill was never in a more prosperous condition than it is at present. Twenty-six scholars were in attendance during the past year. Three will enter college in the fall, two at Lancaster and one at Gettysburg. This record along with the high character of the entertainment above mentioned, and the hearty feeling of good will and confidence prevalent in and about the school, made it evident that teacher and pupils are working unreservedly in the spirit of "το καλον κατεχετε," the beautiful motto of Edgehill Institute.

Editorial Notes.

—Thursday, August 13th, is the day fixed for the Reunion of Reformed people in Southern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, and Pen Mar is the place at which it will be held. The reunion last year was a success, and it is fully expected that the one this year will far exceed it in numbers and interest. Our people in that section come out and have a pleasant and interesting time.

—The authorities of the Mission House, Sheboygan, Wisc., at its late Commencement conferred the degree of D. D., upon Rev. John Bachman of Cincinnati. The many friends of Dr. Bachman will be glad to learn that he has thus been honored and the MESSENGER with them extends hearty congratulations.

—Rev. J. Cal. Leinbach, pastor of First Reformed Church, Sunbury, Pa., has our thanks for a copy of a souvenir of the jubilee services recently held by the congregation over the extinction of the debt that had been long hanging over it, containing, among other things connected with the interesting services, a copy of the sermon preached by the pastor. It will be a valuable memento of the occasion to all who took part in it.

—The monument to be erected to the memory of the late Dr. Higbee by the contributions of the school children of the State of Pennsylvania is now ready to be placed over his grave at Emmitsburg, Md. It was designed by Herman Stucker of Reading, Pa. It is made from a single block of Quincy granite, weighing over twelve tons, and represents a huge rough boulder, upon which leans a cross. On the reverse side on a polished surface is the inscription:

ELNATHAN ELISHA HIGBEE,
D. D., LL. D.
Superintendent of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania.
MARCH 27, 1830.
DECEMBER 13, 1889.
Erected by the Schools of Pennsylvania.
"A Man Greatly Beloved."
Daniel 10c. 19v.

—Rev. H. W. Super, D.D., LL.D., who has been acting President of Ursinus College since the death of Dr. Bomberger, was re-elected by the Board of Directors to that position for another year. At a recent special meeting of the Board he was relieved of some of the branches heretofore taught by him. Prof. Charles H. Wheeler, of Syracuse University, has been elected to the Chair of Mathematics, vacated by Dr. Super, who is thus releived of all duty in the Collegiate Department of the institution, and will hereafter devote all his time to his chair in the Theological Department.

—Having an occasion recently to trace the line of our ancestry we learned through one of the family who has paid some attention to the subject, that our great great grandfather, on the maternal side, Isaac La Yan by name, came from the Palatinate, near the borders of France, and settled near Reading, Pa. He there bought a section of land called the Black Forest, built a manor house, and besides erected the first house that was built in the city of Reading, Pa. No doubt from him sprang the family of Levan, now so numerous in the State of Pennsylvania, and especially in the eastern portion of the State. It is interesting, as well as important, to trace the line of ancestry, and it should be done before it is impossible to gather together all the connecting links.

—Clarion Collegiate Institute, we are informed, closed a year of successful work with an entertainment in the Reformed church at Rimersburg, on the evening of June 30th. At the meeting of the trustees on the previous day, Prof. W. W. Deatrick, who had been Principal of the Institute for the last seven and a half years, offered his resignation, which was accepted. The school has been placed in the hands of Mr. A. O. Reiter, for several years Prof. Deatrick's able and popular assistant, now a member of the Junior Class in Franklin and Mashall College. There will therefore be no interruption in the regular work of the school. The trustees are desirous of securing the services of a permanent Principal. A married man, who will reside in the building, apt to teach, and with experience in work of this kind, is preferred. The officers of the trustees have been directed to open correspondence to this end. Rev. R. C. Bowling, Kittanning, Pa., is President, and Rev. D. B. Lady, Curllsville, Pa., is Secretary.

—The publisher, as stated a week or so ago, is sending out bills to subscribers. They are gentle reminders of what is due for the paper, and that an immediate payment is desired and absolutely necessary would those who owe wish the publisher to meet his obligations incurred in sending the MESSENGER to them from week to week. Should any one receive a bill that is not correct, it will be a favor to the publisher if information to that effect is sent him, and the correction necessary will be most cheerfully made and his thanks will be due the informant. Mistakes will occur though the utmost care be exercised.

—To the regret of the publisher, some who have allowed their paper to come to them two or more years unpaid for, have taken offence at the method used to have them pay up. But such have only themselves to blame. Time and again have they been earnestly requested to remit amount due and no heed has been given to it. Remitting after receiving a notice to do so, some have ordered the discontinuance of their paper. They, in truth, are the losers in the end and not the publisher, since they are depriving themselves and their families of a valuable aid in their Christian life. No doubt, second thought will show them that they alone are at fault.

—Last week we had the pleasure of welcoming to our sanctum Rev. John Gantenbein, D. D., of Portland, Oregon, now on a visit East, after an absence of a score of years. We remember well when he and his family started from our city to begin the work on the Pacific coast. We have always felt an interest in his work there, and therefore enjoyed greatly the account he gave us of his labors and his prospects in the future. He will shortly sail for a visit to the Fatherland, and return in time to visit the Synods in the fall. We wish him a safe voyage from and to this, his adopted home and many years of usefulnes in behalf of our Church on the Pacific coast.

—The most, if not all the Classes, at their recent meetings, recommended the Missionary Guardian, and strongly urged pastors and the friends of missions to take an active hand in increasing its circulation. It is to be hoped, for the sake of the cause and the magazine itself, that the recommendation of the Classes be not as a dead letter, but that without delay efforts be put forth to have every member of the Church become a subscriber of it. If the subscription list be not soon greatly increased one of two things must be done, either the subscription price be doubled or its publication be discontinued. The list as it now numbers does not meet the expenses incurred in its publication, and no one can expect the publisher to issue it at a loss.

—It would be a burning shame if the Church should allow the attempt to publish a magazine devoted solely to the interests of so great a work as missions to fail because of want of interest and of support. The Missionary Guardian is highly spoken of by those who receive it monthly, and is pronounced to be worth double the price asked per year for it. Why is it not more generally circulated? Who is to blame? The editors and publisher do their part, why then do not those who alone can effect its wide circulation do their part? Think of it; only a little more than two thousand copies of it in circulation, and the price asked for it,—a monthly of thirty-two pages, being only fifty cents a year. We repeat, its existence in the future lies solely with those who can and ought to give diligent heed to the voice of the Mission Boards and the Classes of the Church. Will they do it?

Poetry.

ONLY.

Only a word for the Master,
Lovingly, quietly said;
Only a word
Yet the Master heard,
And some faint hearts were fed.

Only a look of remonstrance,
Sorrowful, gentle and deep;
Only a look,
Yet the strong man shook,
And he went alone to weep.

Only some act of devotion,
Willingly, joyfully done;
"Surely, 'twas naught,"
(So the proud world thought)
But yet souls for Christ were won.

Only an hour with the children,
Pleasantly, cheerfully given;
Yet seed was sown
In that hour alone,
Which would bring forth fruit for heaven.

"Only"—but Jesus is looking Constantly, tenderly down
To earth, and sees
Those who strive to please,
And their love He loves to crown.

For the Reformed Church Messenger.

THIS, THAT AND THE OTHER THING.

We read lately that a congregation in San Francisco, Cal., was putting up a chapel for one hundred and fifty dollars, which it intends to use until it can afford to build a better one. If it succeeds in that chapel the fact should be made known. Much will depend upon the definiteness and strength of attachment to their own denomination on the part of the members. Twenty persons, who know precisely what they want, are worth more for all practical purposes than a hundred who do not know. Intelligent comprehension of aim is a great help in the prosecution of any cause. The lack of it has much to do with the difficulties which we encounter in church extension, especially in towns and cities where a denomination is planting its first congregation. If the people who are to be members from the start want it, and really know what that means, then a very modest building will do, if needs be, to start with, and yet success may follow.

After all is there not a strong tendency to overdo the matter of athletics in some of our American colleges? We have read somewhere of a Chinese scholar traveling in this country who was said to have written home something like this: "Near the city of Boston there is a great college called Harvard. Young men are sent there to learn boxing, rowing, playing foot-ball, base-ball and other games; and when it rains they also do some studying in books." A Southern religious paper has the following to say under the heading, Reaping the Whirlwind.

"The leading colleges down East are reaping the legitimate results of the ruinous length to which athletics have been cultivated. A nation of rowdies and prize-fighters is the natural fruit. We clip: 'The proprietors of Young's Hotel and the Parker House, Boston, have notified the Faculty of Harvard College that no more large bodies of under-graduates will be permitted to dine at either of these hotels hereafter. Twenty-five Yale students have been called before the Faculty for discipline for throwing torpedoes among the animals of Barnum's circus. Several persons were injured by the horses and elephants being frightened.'"

From the same paper we take the following, which, though rather severe, cannot be said to be without truth. It is substantially one and the same worldliness which we find in the life of the people and in the thought of Huxley and the school to which he belongs. The one is the thing in practice; the other in theory. We quote:

"Dr. A. B. Leonard, one of the Secretaries of the Missionary Society of the Northern Methodist Church, we take to be a competent witness on this point. In the Christian at Work he has an article on the reasons why the masses are not reached by the Church. He locates the whole difficulty in the impaired power of the Church, consequent on its worldliness. Although his statements apply to all denominations, yet because of his official and church relations they have a special bearing on Methodism, and on his own Church in particular. He says:

I affirm that, to an extent that is alarming, the Churches have surrendered to the "world," and by so doing have lost their power to savingly influence the masses. There prevails a semi-infidelity among both clergy and laity. Latitudinarianism abounds. If a man holds strongly to old orthodox views, he is regarded as narrow and Puritanical, while the man who believes all creeds a little, and none of them very much, is held to be broad-minded, charitable, and intelligent. There are ministers occupying what are supposed to be orthodox pulpits who delight to be called 'higher critics,' and who advocate theories that are destructive of evangelical religion. There are professors in theological seminaries who repudiate the divine inspiration of the Bible. They are disciples of Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall & Co., rather than of Jesus Christ and the apostle Paul. They preach doctrines which, if believed, have no power to save men from sin."

In some of the religious papers there has lately been a discussion of the question as to the relative number of children baptized annually compared with the number of members in the different denominations. It was begun in Baptist circles, and has been taken up by others. Some of the statistics given are both interesting and instructive. For example, it appears to be a fact that on an average one birth comes annually to a general population of from 20 to 25. This fact has to be borne in mind when we consider the rate of baptisms of children to membership. From the statistics given the following results appear, the rate given being on an average of several years in the different Churches named.

Episcopal,	1	infant baptized to		11	members.
Reformed,	1	"	"	13	"
Methodist,	1	"	"	25	"
Presby'an,	1	"	"	31	"
Congr't'al,	1	"	"	51	"

On this list the Reformed Church stands second as will be seen. If the Lutheran rate were given (we do not have it at hand) it would probably stand about the same. Adult baptisms are not included in the foregoing statement. They would lower the rate considerably more.

CHARITY BY BEQUEST.

Some new views are accepted without full and careful study just because they are new, and taking on the surface. Such is the case, we think, with Mr. Carnegie's view in regard to charity by bequest. There is no charity, he maintains, in a man's leaving his wealth to charitable objects when he can no longer use it himself. This view has, no doubt, been so generally accepted, without more careful consideration, because of the accompanying position, that it is better for a man to use his money for charitable objects while living than to wait and leave it by will to such objects when he is about to die. This position may be correct, and yet its admission as correct does not by any means prove that there can be no charity in leaving wealth by will to charitable objects. The argument that he cannot hold his wealth personally any longer than he lives, and that at death he must of necessity surrender it to others, does not prove that his spirit of charity may not continue to live and operate after he is dead. Men's lives continue to exert an influence after they are dead. A sinful life continues to exert an evil influence after the death of the individual, and who would maintain that he is not held responsible for the evil it continues to exert through years after he is gone from the earth? Tom Paine is responsible for the evil influence his infidel work has exerted since his death. The same is true of the life of a good man. It is true that a rich man cannot retain his wealth after he is dead, but he may control its use by will, and he may be the cause of its doing good instead of evil. All right law recognizes the right of bequest, it grants that, within certain limits, one of which is the right of inheritance, a man may designate what use shall be made of his money after he is dead.

Now, is it not an act of genuine charity if a man directs by will that the wealth he has lawfully acquired while living shall be employed in works of benevolence after he has left the earth? Grant that it might have been wiser and better to have used it for such objects during his lifetime. Of that he must be allowed to be the judge. Still it is a gross wrong, we think, to deny the character of charity to his act in making his will by which he controls the operation of his wealth for charitable objects after he is dead. "A man deserves no credit for disposing wisely and well of his wealth when he is no longer able to retain it in this life!" Is not that a monstrous proposition? As well might it be said a man deserves no credit while living for giving to good purposes that which he cannot enjoy himself, or use upon himself? That margin beyond the sum needed for his own living may be the result of many years of hard labor and self-denial, just in order that he may give it to others, and is there no charity in this? Indeed, it is not just so clear and certain that in all cases a man will use his wealth wiser and better by directing its use while living, than to leave it under wise direction after his death. His own personality, his private preferences, his whims or prejudices, may operate in some cases unfavorably, whereas the direction of his wealth after he is dead will be free from such hindrances. The case seems so clear that a charitable bequest, if made with proper motives, is just as full of love as the benediction of an aged patriarch upon his children, that we cannot feel the need of arguing the proposition. Yet the general favor with which the view of Mr. Carnegie has been received, that there is no charity in disposing of wealth by will, must have something to account for it. We think the fallacy may, perhaps, be found in the statement that there can be no virtue in a man's parting with his wealth when he cannot hold it any longer. That, in the abstract, seems true. But consider what may be included in that giving, even though in the abstract it may be a necessity. In order to be able to give it when he comes to die, he may have labored many years, have been industrious, and frugal and self-denying, may have had on his heart through all his life the accumulation of wealth just for the purpose of leaving it for some charitable purpose. And now when he comes to die, and laying his hand on his wealth he says, this is my benediction which I leave to benefit my fellow-men, shall we say there is no charity in that simply because he had to part with his money? Such a view seems utterly preposterous!

Let Mr. Carnegie argue, with all the force he can bring to bear upon the argument, the higher wisdom of dispensing charity during life, rather than waiting to dispense it by will, but let no one lay ruthless hands upon the charities of thousands who have bestowed their wealth to good objects by will and testament! Even the argument as above explained has its exceptions. Suppose, for instance, a man has in view the establishment of some institution, or some endowment, which requires as much as he can acquire in a life-time. He gives liberally to different objects during life, but the main bulk of his wealth he keeps increasing, holds it together rather than dividing it during life for different objects, and now at the close of a life of faith and charity he provides by will that this wealth shall go in bulk to the establishment of some charity upon which his heart has been set through all the years of his life. It turns out to be a wise beneficence, and the good it accomplishes proves to be greater than any gifts he might have bestowed during his life-time, is there no charity in that? Nay, is there no wisdom in that?

Whilst, therefore, we are prepared to join in urging upon the wealthy to use their wealth wisely and well during their life-time, yet we are not prepared to discourage the goodly intent of those who, for reasons of their own, remember good objects in their will. True, there are temptations leading men to bestow wealth by will from unholy motives, but the same temptations beset the living giver. If the man who gives by will must of necessity part with his money, he at the same time gives up the receiving of praise while living, whereas those who bestow large benefices during life may be moved thereto by the praise and flattery they receive from the world.

A man lives after death. He may control his wealth to a certain extent after his death. The act of giving his money by will to do good after his death may be just as genuine an act of pure charity, though it may perhaps not be as wise or prudent, as the act of a man's giving during his lifetime. The proposition that denies this goes upon the fallacy that a man has no rights over his wealth after he is dead. But if that be so then the law is all wrong which gives the right of bequest. X.

WESTMORELAND CLASSIS.

Westmoreland Classis convened in the Fiftieth Annual Sessions in the Reformed church, Pleasant Unity, Pa., May 20, 1891. at 7 30 P.M. A most excellent sermon was preached by the retiring president, J. Nevin Bauman, from Luke 27 : 47, "Beginning at Jerusalem." Rev. C. M. Hartzell was elected president and Rev. C. R. Ferner was re-elected treasurer. Seventeen of the eighteen ministers of Classis were present. The tidings from the different charges as set forth in the parochial reports filled the hearts of God's servants with joy. Notwithstanding the ceaseless activity and the most strenuous opposition on the part of the great adversary, "the hand of the Lord has been with us," and many have believed and given themselves unto the Lord. There has been an advance all along the line, and in every department of God's work, and the "Lord has been adding daily to His Church such as shall be saved."

The three missions within the bounds of the Westmoreland Classis, under the management of General Synod's Board, have enjoyed the favor and the blessing of the Lord. The mission at Johnstown, which passed through the terrible ordeal which befell that city two years ago, is emerging again from the deluge more beautiful and glorious than when it was submerged beneath the mighty waves. A fine new church edifice ready for the roof has taken the place of the one swept away by the flood. Arrayed in her beautiful garments she "is coming up from the wilderness leaning on the arm of her Beloved." When the church is completed the mission will no doubt enter upon a new era of unparalleled prosperity.

Scottdale has been making steady and substantial progress. The Gospel Gideon at this post has achieved greater victories in some of the departments of the Lord's work with his handful, than some others have with their hosts. Judging from present indications this mission will become self-supporting in a few years.

Jeannette, the youngest babe in our household of faith, is a "goodly child," most vigorous in spirit and rapidly increasing in membership. Unless all signs are misleading this mission will make steady progress right along and become self-supporting at an early day.

The time has come for the Church to lay hold of our interest at Derry on the line of the P. C. R. R. in good earnest. Rev. C. M. Hartzell has held services there during the past year once a month. It will not be possible for him to continue this arrangement much longer. There are about thirty members living at this place and others will locate there in the near future. We believe that a mission ought now to be established there and therefore we respectfully request the Board of Missions of Pittsburgh Synod to prepare the way for the establishment of a mission at Derry. About seven hundred dollars have already been raised by the members towards the purchase of a lot on which to erect a church. The president and treasurer of Classis were authorized to borrow one thousand dollars in the name of Classis to aid the interest in this growing railroad point.

Another Hungarian minister has been secured by General Synod's Board of Missions to labor among and minister to those of the large foreign element, who in their native land have been allied to the Reformed faith, but at present are located within the bounds of this Classis. He will likely locate in the coke regions, and it becomes Classis to give this cause its earnest and hearty prayers, sympathy and support.

Classis heartily approves the Hymnal of the Reformed Church in the United States prepared by General Synod's Committee, and urges upon General Synod to authorize its use as an ordinance of the Reformed Church in the worship of the sanctuary.

The Society for the Relief of Disabled Ministers and the Widows of Deceased Ministers received due consideration at the hands of Classis. The State makes ample provision for those who have served it. Shall the Church neglect those who have ministered in holy things? "If we have sown unto you spiritual things is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things, etc.," (1 Cor. 9 : 4).

The pastors within the bounds of Classis were most earnestly enjoined to present this laudable cause to their people and take up collections in each of their congregations during the year for the relief society. Classis was divided into three districts, and a chairman was appointed for each, for the purpose of holding Church Work and Sunday-school conventions in each charge during the year. May God assist us to arouse our people that all "may come up to the help of the Lord, the help of the Lord against the mighty."

Rev. S. B. Mase, who, on account of ill-health was compelled to resign the Second Greensburg charge, almost one year ago, was not with us. We were glad to learn that his health has been greatly improved and that he is again able to engage in the active duties of the ministry. At his own request he was dismissed to the TuscarawasClassis, Synod of Ohio.

There is only one vacant charge at present within our bounds, viz. : Harrolds. The name of its former pastor, Rev. M. H. Mill, was ordered to be stricken from our ministerial roll.

Revs. D. N. Dittmar and D. A. Souders appeared for the first time at the annual sessions of Westmoreland Classis and took an active part in all its work and deliberations. We welcome them into our ecclesiastical ranks. "They are workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." The Lord is abundantly blessing the labor of these His servants in their respective fields, and His work is prospering in their hands.

The theological student, Henry E. Snyder, presented himself for examination and licensure. The examination was satisfactory. Signing the Constitutional Formula he received a certificate of licensure.

Rev. John McConnell, who, in the days of his youth marched with the army of General Scott from Vera Cruz to Cerro Gordo, and since has been marching in the ministerial ranks of King Emmanuel, was with us, but took seriously ill on the second day of the sessions. Classis deeply sympathized with the afflicted brother, and appointed members from its own body to wait upon him. The brother had so far recovered at the close of the sessions as to be conveyed to his home. We missed him very much in this council of the Church.

In order that the Missionary Guardian may be enabled to accomplish the good end for which it was established pastors and consistories were urged to put forth most earnest efforts to secure subscribers for it.

Classis tendered a vote of thanks to the members of the St. Luke's and St. Paul's congregations of Pleasant Unity charge and others for the kind entertainment given the members during the sessions in their midst. The Lord bless these good people for their hospitality, kindness and labors of love.

On Monday, May 25, Classis adjoined to meet in annual sessions in the Reformed church, Harrison City, Westmoreland Co, Pa., May 23d, 1892, at 7 30 o'clock, P.M.

Statistics—Ministers, 17 ; Congregations, 31 ; Members, 3752 ; Unconfirmed Members, 2575 ; Baptisms–Infants, 266 ; Adults, 35 ; Confirmed, 214 ; Certificate or Renewed, 181 ; Communed, 3293 ; Dismissed, 123 ; Erasure of Names, 116 ; Deaths, 80 ; Sunday-schools, 28 ; Sunday-school Scholars, 359 ; Benevolent Purposes, $3561.19 ; Congregational, $28,181.48 ; Church Papers, 359 ; Sunday-school Papers, 1505.

Half a century ago Westmoreland Classis, which then included almost all of western Pennsylvania, west of the Allegheny Mountains, by order of the Ohio Synod was organized and held its first session in the Kindighs or St. John's church near the place where the present sessions were held. At that first meeting there were present six ministers and seven elders, viz. Revs. N. P. Hacke, Wm. Conrad, H. G. Ibeken, Wm. Winel, H. E. F. Voight, H. Knepper, and Elders John Wentzel, Henry Smith, Michael Ruby, Benjamin Countryman, M. Zimmerman, Peter Whitehead and David Stemble. There were absent Revs. Koch, G. Leidy, P. Zeiser and J. Althouse. Then there were but ten Reformed ministers and fifty congregations in the territory which now constitutes the Pittsburgh Synod. Now we have five English and one German Clasiss. One Synod with about seventy ministers, one hundred and forty congregations, and about fifteen thousand communicant members. The ministers, elders and members of half a century ago have gone to their reward, but thank God the glorious work of building up God's kingdom and saving souls still goes forward. What they sowed in the severest toil, tears and prayers, we are reaping to-day with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Blessed be

God for permitting our eyes to see what we see and our ears to hear what we hear. "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad," and in view of all this we would thank God and take courage. F.

PORTLAND-OREGON CLASSIS.

The Portland-Oregon Classis met in annual session in the Reformed church at Seattle, Washington, May 21, 1891.

The retiring President, Rev. Jul. Lange, preached the opening sermon: text 1 Cor. 15: 9-10.

The Classis organized by the election of Rev. J. Muellhaupt, President, Rev. J. G. Schmid, Stated Clerk, Elder J. A. Fischer, Treasurer.

There were five pastors and three delegated elders present.

The pastoral reports were to a very great extent encouraging. Pastors and congregations have been diligently at work building the walls of Zion and extending her borders on this coast. Considering the many peculiar hinderances and the limited means at our command, there has been considerable progress made in the past year.

The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That pastors and congregations be earnestly admonished to work with new zeal for the cause of missions, both home and foreign, and to increase the gifts for benevolent purposes.

Resolved, That the cause of the orphans and the society for the Relief of Ministers and their Widows be heartily recommended.

Resolved, That it be the duty of each pastor to preach at least one sermon during the year on the observance of the Sabbath.

Resolved, That the German translation of our new Order of Worship be introduced in all our congregations.

WHEREAS, The new English Hymnal appears to possess extraordinary merits,

Resolved, That it be recommended to our English-speaking congregations.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to our worthy Bi-synodic Board of Missions for the renewed confidence it has shown and the very appreciative help it has extended during the past year.

A new congregation in Ballard, Washington, was received.

Rev, Dr. J. Gantenbein is requested, during his presence in the east to see that he may be able to get a new missionary for a charge that should be supplied now.

Delegates to the Synod are: Rev. Dr. J. Gantenbein and elder J. A. Fischer, primarii. Rev. J. Muellhaupt and elder C. Schaefer, secundi.

The next annual meeting of Classis will be held in the First Reformed church, Portland, Oregon, June 9, 1892.

Statistics—Congregations, 19; Ministers, 10; Members, 639; Unconfirmed Member, 576; Infant Baptisms, 95; Confirmed, 39; Otherwise received, 99; Communed, 549; Dismissed, 8; Erasures, 68; Deaths, 19; Sunday-schools, 12; Sunday-school Scholars, 542; Benevolent Purposes, $370; Congregational Purposes, $5807.

EVANGELISTIC REPORT.

The progress of mission work in general, and of evangelistic in particular, in Japan, has not been so marked during the last year as in former years.

The work of our mission is no exception in this respect. It, too, has felt the general apathy and stagnation in the work, of which so much is said now-a-days; and the increase of members to the several churches and stations, both in the Sendai and Tokio districts, is less than that of the previous year.

The last year of mission work in Japan records no great outpouring of the Holy Spirit; no great achievements attained; no large ingatherings of precious souls garnered into God's granary. Yet there has been progress. A progress, which, if compared, not with the great success of former years in Japan, but with that of most other countries, would leave little room for complaint or discouragement.

The statistics accompanying this report, show but a slight increase over the whole membership of last year. The number of baptized converts is also ninety-two less than the year 1890, while the contributions have fallen off over $800. By giving up Mombetsu Church to the Dutch mission, the number of churches reported is one less, but the preaching stations are five more than the previous year. Three new Sunday-schools were organized but without any apparent increase of the whole number of scholars.

If there has been no great advance, there has likewise been no retreat. The churches on the whole, have held their own; and we firmly believe that by the trials met, and the difficulties encountered, many of the congregations have been strengthened, and Christians have been established in their faith as they could not have been under other circumstances. So that if former years were years of large ingathering, and hence great rejoicing, the last and present years may be intended as years wherein the Church's stakes are to be strengthened, her foundations made firm—in a word, years of sifting, of nurture and training, and which, though not so inspiriting to the missions on the field, and the churches at home, will be of great consequence for the future of Christian work in Japan.

In the territory embraced by Miyagi Chukwai (Classis), besides our own, there are now two other missions engaged. The Dutch Reformed have a work at a place called Morieka, one hundred and twenty-five miles north of Sendai, where the Rev. Mr. Miller and his wife reside. The Dutch mission also supports the work (church) at Mombetsu, already referred to, which it was necessary for us to cede to them, because of the want of funds to support it, in connection with all the other places in our territory. The Presbyterian (American) mission opened work in Hokkaido (Yezo), where they have two lady missionaries and a church of some fifty members established the last year.

To make the union more effective, it has been found necessary, when the mission located in a certain district is not able to furnish the men and means required to carry on the work in that particular district, for other missions co-operating with it in the union, to come to its assistance. This is what has been done in our case, and is the reason why we have surrendered one point to another mission.

The decrease in the amount of the contributions during the year, is to be accounted for in part, by extra money contributed for the building of churches during 1890, whereas there were no such specific contributions during the year embraced in this report.

There are signs of better times ahead for mission work in Japan. The foreign and native workers are more hopeful. We are looking to and praying for a rich outpouring of God's blessing. The chariot of the Lord will move with its wonted former rapidity during the near future, and the Kingdom of God will continue to spread.

MISSIONS.

We next arrived at Stoystown. This is a little town "set on a hill," clean and neat as all towns should be. This, we are told, is among the oldest charges in the Somerset Classis. Because of its near proximity to Johnstown and other large cities, it has suffered a constant drain of members by removal. Yet the charge has held its own and likely will not only continue to do so, but will doubtless make forward strides. This field had been served until lately by Rev. W. D. Lefevre. The new pastor is Rev. D. O. Shoemaker, who came here from east of the mountains. He has entered upon the duties of the pastorate with every prospect of success. Several new churches are needed and we shall be disappointed if in a few years we do not hear of several new houses of worship going up. In Stoystown they need a new place of worship and we already heard of a project for the future looking to this end. These people gave us $36 in cash for the Cumberland enterprise and the good pastor offered to solicit others whom we could not see and get their contributions. For the many kind favors shown us we heartily thank the pastor and his good wife—as well as the several brethren who piloted us through the charge.

NEW CENTERVILLE CHARGE.

Here was our next field of operations. The pleasant home of C. A. Walters became our stopping place. This was the last charge served by the much lamented Brother Wagner. The members only speak of him to praise him. Brother Walters took us among the members, and on Sunday to the different appointments. Here we think is a model country charge, such a one as any pastor should be anxious to serve. The attendance at all the services was very good and the attention such as a well-trained and earnest people always give to the declarations of the Gospel. But what pleased us most was the willingness and heartiness with which these people made their contributions to the cause we represented. We knew before that the charge was somewhat weak and did not therefore expect any great sum, but even in that we were agreeably disappointed. We received the sum of $48.44 in this little charge, and what was remarkable was that nearly all gave their contributions without telling us that they were so poor and needed all their funds at home, etc., as is so often the case with people who only want an excuse for not doing anything. We can only say again that we were heartily pleased with the good people of New Centerville and only wish that we had many more such charges.

Our work was now finished in the Somerset Classis. By direction of the Board, we now set out on our visit to Scranton. On the way we stopped a few hours at Johnstown and made a visit to the new church now going up. Also met Pastor Bates and had a talk with him. The new church will be a fine affair when finished. That is all we can say now. Altoona, Tyrone, Bellefonte, Lock Haven, Williamsport, Milton and other cities lay along the way of travel. We stopped a short time at Watsontown and Milton to see members of the committee on the Scranton enterprise. Would have been pleased to stop and see Dr. Levan at Wilkesbarre, also a member of the committee, but found it impossible to do so. Scranton was reached finally. More than four days were spent there. We tramped over the hills of that city pretty thoroughly. At least we felt like it when we were done. Here is a city, we are told, now numbering nearly 90,000 people. Some of the wealthiest people in it to-day were formerly members of the Reformed Chnrch. They tell us they even insisted upon the Church sending a missionary to that city, but it was not done. But it is not too late yet. The time is now at hand for a decided work to be inaugurated. So Wyoming Classis thought. The committee appointed by Classis had canvassed the city prior to our coming. We took their list, and in company with Brother Ebbert made the rounds. We found in all thirty-five members. Held service twice on Sunday. The attendance at these services was very fair indeed. We found these people mostly very much in earnest to have a Church organized. Some of these thirty-five members are doubtless careless, and must be in a manner worked over again. It was decided upon that the mission shall be opened on August 1, 1891. Licentiate A. S. Bromer, a student lately from the Divinity School of Yale University, has been called to the mission and it is hoped he will accept. We had Brother Bromer come on to Scranton and had him preach the sermon on Sunday. The people were well pleased and we confidently expect the young brother to be at work in that stirring city by the first of August. The mission must be pushed with energy and we here call upon all the ministers in the surrounding charges to send in the names of any members from their charges who may have moved to Scranton. Send names for the present to Rev. D. W. Ebbert, Milton, Pa. Let this not be forgotten. What we need now is some energy and business tact and the mission at Scranton will be a success. D. S. F.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

"MORE THAN OUR SHARE."

Sometimes a congregation complains that its apportionment is too heavy, and that others have too light a burden. "We are doing more than our share," they say. No doubt of it in many cases, if mere numbers are considered; and many a Classis in dividing out the apportionment well knows that more than membership must be considered. A charge may have a large number of members, nearly all of them poor; or a small membership with considerable wealth; or the people may be many in number, with much wealth but with little liberality; or they may be many and not wealthy but of liberal spirit, with much intelligence and church love. All these things need to be considered when the apportionment is laid. There may be financial ability, but no moral ability to give; or there may be at hand an intelligent moral ability that shames the other.

"Why is it," said elder P., "that our charge with less members than the Blanktown charge is asked to raise more money for missions and other work than they?"

"Because you are more able than they."

"How so? They can buy us out any day. They have more wealth than we have. Why is our apportionment larger than their's? It seems unfair."

"Because you are more able, as I said before. You may have less money, but you have more knowledge of the Church, more church love, more interest in the spread of the Church, in other words, more moral ability. Little depends on wealth. Christian giving depends on these other things, and the Classis takes all these into account when laying the apportionment."

By this time the pastor had warmed up somewhat, and he continued:

"A Classis deals with its charges very much as a Consistory deals with its members. You know very well that the giving of the people toward the support of the congregation depends not so much on their wealth as on their piety, knowledge, liberality and zeal for the congregation. Not so?"

"Truly so, as I have long known."

"Another thing—of whom does the Consistory think more highly? Who are most respected by the congregation? Who are praised and loved, but the faithful ones who can always be depended on when work is to be done? Often they are widows or unmarried ladies with bigger hearts than purses, but you go to them with confidence, while to many others you go with a painful doubt."

The elder looked very thoughtful, but said nothing. He evidently saw a new light, and the pastor went on.

"Just so in a Classis. Some charges are precious. They have a name, and their praise is in every mouth. They are willing workers. They are highly respected because they love and serve the Church. And you will keep in mind also that the Classis pays them a real compliment when it lays upon them a larger apportionment than upon another charge of equal members and wealth. It is saying, 'you have brains and heart as well as money.'"

Perfect equality is impossible. You cannot make things equal by calling them equal. Moral ability is not the same as financial ability. Church love and self-love are very different. A large apportionment is therefore a compliment paid by the Classis. A. C. W.

THE YOUNG PROPHETESS:

A TALE OF THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

BY REV. R. LEIGHTON GERHART.

CHAPTER XXIX.

HABID BARBARA.

"He must be taken to the palace," said the steward, who had reached the spot a few minutes before Alhadan. "Hasten to the palace," he commanded, addressing one of the servants, "and give notice of our coming. See that a couch is made ready, and send also for a leech."

"Sir, how can we carry him?" inquired Alhadan, who was supporting the head of the wounded man.

"We will make a litter of ox-goads and cover it with our robes," answered the steward.

The procession was soon on its way. Habid Barbara, surrounded by a crowd of slaves and menials, who heaped execrations on him as he walked, was led on before. Then, following slowly, came the men bearing the litter, and after them the Kurdish cavalry. It was a tedious journey, and each step of the way, Alhadan looked to see the Emir breathe his last.

"I will ride forward and make sure that all is in readiness," he volunteered, after they had proceeded some distance on their way. "There is nothing I can do here."

"Do so, Alhadan. It would have been better if I had sent you before. You know well what should be done. But the leech! the leech! or our lord will die," answered the steward.

The young man spurred forward at once. The crowd about Habid Barbara was fully a half-mile in advance, but he soon overtook it. He was hastening by when the woe-begone aspect of the unhappy man arrested his attention, and sent the blood to his brain, hot with indignation. From the time the journey had begun, the man had been urged on his way with blows and curses, the three slaves, who had been his chief accusers, being most active in this exhibition of hatred. In the intensity of their indignation, all seemed to feel justified in abusing the poor wretch to the fullest extent of their power. They spit upon him, struck him with their fists, beat him with their staves, shoved him roughly on his way, at the same time bitterly assailing him with taunts and curses. Once he stumbled, and before he could recover himself, some one pushed him so violently that he fell forward on his face in the dust. Instantly the crowd attacked him with kicks and blows. Helpless as he was, his hands bound behind him, he struggled to his feet, and, turning on his enemies, cried in a voice of thunder:

"Cowards! to attack an unarmed and helpless man! Heathen dogs! base infidels! Back with you! or, bound as I am, I will trample you beneath my feet. If I were on my good war-horse, mace in hand, I would face a thousand of you!"

As he spoke, his weakness seemed to fall from him. His form dilated, his eyes flashed, and he looked, indeed, like a man to whom conflict and battle had no fears. His appearance was pitiful as well as terrible. His back and shoulders were streaked with welts; his face streamed with blood and disfigured with dust. His gray hair, tossed by the wind, in tangled masses blew about his eyes and mingled with the strands of his beard now clotted with blood. As he uttered this defiance, he struggled furiously to free his arms, and the crowd, overawed by the boldness of his bearing, shrank back to be out of reach, should he succeed in breaking his thongs. He was too well bound, however, and recognizing the futility of his efforts, after a brief halt, he turned and began to march forward. But from this time on the look and manner of the slave vanished, and a nobility and dignity of character shone forth which impressed all.

When Alhadan heard this furious defiance, a look of startled surprise overspread his face. "Habid Barbara a Christian!—a Christian knight!" he said to himself in wonder. "How was it possible not to have known this?"

But that was not the only cause for wonder. In the heat of his anger, Habid Barbara had spoken not in Arabic, but in the Swabian tongue—the language of Alhadan's native land. "Can this be—no, no, it is not possible. This unhappy man cannot be my father!" but with the suggestion of his own mind he was seized with a tremor of doubt and misgiving so great as almost to deprive him of the power of thought.

Had he known the truth; that the accused and persecuted wretch before him was, indeed, his own father; the one who had been in his thoughts through all his terrible marches since first he set out on the ill-fated Crusade; whom even in his slavery he still indulged the faint hope of meeting, Alhadan's scimetar would have flashed from its scabbard, and blind to all consequences, he would have plunged into the throng, with no other wish than to die by his father's side. It was well for him that the thought was too horrible to accept.

But as a Christian and a countryman, the unfortunate man claimed his help; so, spurring into the crowd, forgetting altogether the position he held, in a commanding voice he ordered the crowd to cease their brutality. But he only drew upon himself a torrent of jeers and execration. Seeing the futility of his efforts, he extricated himself from the crowd, and riding back to the commander of the Kurds, he cried:

"Sir, if you would have your prisoner reach the palace alive, you will have to guard him, or he will be beaten to death."

"What matters it?" said that officer, indifferently. "He deserves no less."

"Has he been proven guilty? Is it thus that the Emir would have even those who have wronged him dealt with? I beseech you, dispatch a number of men to shield him, and bring him in safety to his trial." In short, the young man argued so well that six or eight horsemen were sent forward to defend Habid Barbara, and bring him in safety to the palace.

Soon after the sorrowful procession reached the palace, the physician, accompanied by an attendant, arrived ; but all his efforts to rouse the Emir from the death-like lethargy in which he lay, proved unavailing. In the state of unconsciousness in which he was found, he continued, breathing faintly, so faintly, indeed, that those about his couch expected every moment to see him die.

Alhadan lingered by the side of his master until evening, busily engaged assisting the physician. At length he left the apartment. He wished to see Habid Barbara. Though he had rejected the thought that the unfortunate man might be his father, the face, the form and the manner of the accused, as he had last seen him, began to take to themselves a sense of strange familiarity. The possibility of the suspicion being correct caused his heart to sink within him, and filled him with a terrible anxiety. Again and again he refused to entertain the thought, and again and again it returned, always rising in his mind with increased force. He felt at length that he must end the uncertainty ; that he must free his mind from every shadow of a doubt about the matter. With this intention, he sought the steward.

"Sir," he said, addressing that worthy, "permit me, I pray you, to see Habid Barbara."

"What boots it?" answered the steward. "He dies to-morrow at sunset."

"Dies to-morrow!" cried Alhadan, in consternation ; "without trial ? without judgment ? surely even the most debased criminals should have such poor justice."

"He hath been tried," was the calm reply.

"I beseech you, tell me when?" his face growing pale.

"An hour since," said the steward, without changing a muscle.

"Then, sir, for the mercy of God, I pray you, let me have speech with him. Though a slave, he is mine own countryman."

The request was granted, though with unmistakable reluctance. Preceded by a servant carrying a lantern, Alhadan was conducted to a dungeon in the foundations of the palace, where the condemned man lay. Placing the lantern on the floor of the cell, the servant departed, closing the heavy door after him.

At first Alhadan could distinguish nothing in the semi-darkness, but the clank of a chain drew his attention to a remote corner of the cell, and there he caught sight of a dark object crouched on the hard, cold pavement.

"Sir," said he, approaching the figure, and overcoming, with a strong effort, the emotion that almost deprived him of speech, "I have come, thinking that perhaps I might be of some slight assistance to you. I, too, am a Christian."

There was a clanking of chains ; the figure assumed a more erect posture ; then a voice, faint from exhaustion, replied ; "Thou canst not give me what I need."

"Pardon me, sir, perhaps I can aid thee."

Again that ominous clanking, and then—"I would see a priest, that I might die as becomes a Christian."

"That is indeed beyond my power to give," answered Alhadan, mournfully. "But God is merciful. Surely His ear will be open to thee in confession, as it is open to us all in prayer."

"Then to His mercy I can but commend myself," was the solemn response.

There was a pause of unbroken silence. Then, in a low, trembling voice Alhadan asked ;

"Canst thou assure me thou art not guilty of this crime?"

The question greatly agitated the condemned man. He struggled to rise to his feet, and finally stood erect.

"As God is my judge, as I hope for salvation," he cried, hoarsely, "I am guiltless of this crime. Never save in battle, or in a righteous quarrel have I slain any. This by my oath as a Christian and a knight."

"I believe thee," answered Alhadan, breathing a sigh of relief.

"I was ploughing in the field," speaking more calmly, and with a sincerity that gave double force to every word he uttered, "the three Afghans, accursed sons of Satan ! working near by, when the Emir came toward us. He was alone. He addressed a few kind words to me, and then passed on. I at once resumed my ploughing. Presently, I heard the sound of strife, and looking, I saw two of those sons of Satan assaulting the Emir. Shouting for help, I rushed to his assistance, and with my goad drove back the two miscreants. That instant, the Emir fell, struck from behind by the third of the Afghans, who had come to the assistance of his friends in their murderous work. The three then turned furiously on me, crying ; 'Habid Barbara has slain the Emir.' I know little more, save, as I strove to protect myself, I was suddenly dealt a terrible blow, and fell senseless to the earth. As God is my judge, before whom I will shortly stand, this is the truth !"

"I doubt it not, sir, I doubt it not. Would to God it were possible—"

"It matters but little ; I have faced death a hundred times, why should I dread it now," interrupted Habid Barbara, speaking calmly. "Between a living death, and such is the life of a slave, and an actual death, what have I to regret?"

"Thou art a knight of Swabia?" inquired Alhadan, anxious, yet dreading to know the name of the man, whose manner and language showed him to be of noble birth.

"Ask me not my name and lineage !" cried the knight, his emotions choking his utterance. "Better, far better they should be unknown, than linked with one who dies, innocent though God knows him to be !—the death of a malefactor. Ask me not my name ! Woe the day that such dishonor should come upon me !" and in the dim light of the lantern, Alhadan saw him bow his head, and cover his face with his manacled hands.

"I too am from Swabia," spoke the young man, mournfully, "from Heilbrun."

"Heilbrun !" ejaculated the knight ; then recollecting himself, and fearing that his exclamation might give some clue to his birth, he added, feigning indifference ; "I have heard of the place."

"Ay," reiterated Alhadan, the suspicion that the man before him was indeed his father, becoming stronger, "from Heilbrun. Years ago, when I was a little boy, my father, Robert Baron von Heildrich, set out for Palestine, to do battle for the Holy Sepulcher. One year later, news reached us that he had been captured by the Saracens, but whether taken only to be slain, or to be carried off into slavery, we never learned."

While he was speaking these words, a death-like silence fell upon the knight. As one transformed to stone, he stared fixedly at the young man before him.

"No, no," he muttered at length, evidently repelling a thought that obtruded itself upon him, "it cannot be ! it cannot be !"

He trembled as he muttered these words. Then, as though bewildered, he struck his forehead with his manacled hands, crying :

"What delusion is this ! What horrid nightmare has descended upon me, to add to the torture I already feel !"

Pausing abruptly, he came as near to Alhadan as his chain would permit, and stooping forward peered fiercely into his face. The young man looked into the wild, haggard, blood-stained countenance before him, so close to his own that the breath of the knight fanned his cheek, till unable longer to endure the sight he closed his eyes. His head reeled, as the thought pressed more and more surely upon him, that the wretched being before him was his father.

"Who are you? In God's name, answer !" came fiercely from between the pale lips of the man.

Alhadan essayed to speak, but his tongue refused to do its office.

"Who are you?" again came the demand, more fiercely than before.

"Otho von Heildrich," spoke Alhadan, his voice so broken by emotion that he could scarce frame the words.

The knight drew back, confused by a paralyzing sense of unreality, of inability to understand. His fierceness melted away, and in mournful tones, he said :

"Come you here to mock a dying man?"

"Listen to me," answered Alhadan, now more composed, "and I will tell thee how it is that I am here," for he began to see the difficulty that his father—be doubted no longer—was laboring under. And begining with the arrival of the army of children at the castle, he gave a brief account of the Crusade, and how it happened that he was sold into slavery. As he thus step by step unfolded the sad facts, he felt that his father was beginning to understand. As he finished his story, the unfortunate man approached him again, and stooping, peered once more intently into his face.

Discerning his purpose, Otho instantly seized the lantern, and raised it so that the light fell full upon his own countenance. He had scarcely done this, before the knight cried in a loud voice :

"Otho ! Otho ! I am thy father ! My son, my son ! I am Robert Baron von Heildrich."

"My father !" cried Otho, "Thank God ! thank God !" and flinging his arms around his father's neck, he kissed the poor blood-stained face over and over again. In the intensity of their emotion, the two swayed backward and forward, sobbing and crying, at intervals uttering broken words of tenderest endearment.

GIVE A KIND WORD WHEN YOU CAN.

Do you know a heart that hungers
For a word of love and cheer ?
There are many such about us ;
It may be that one is near.
Look around you. If you find it
Speak the word that's needed so,
And your own heart may be strengthened
By the help that you bestow.

It may be that some one falters
On the brink of sin and wrong,
And a word from you might save him—
Help to make the tempted strong.
Look about you, O my brother !
What a sin is yours and mine
If we see that help is needed
And we give no friendly sign !

Never think kind words are wasted,
Bread on waters cast are they,
And it may be we shall find them
Coming back to us some day.
Coming back when sorely needed,
In a time of sharp distress ;
So, my friend, let's give them freely ;
Gift and giver God will bless.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

Harry and William were old enough to go to school, and their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, were discussing the question as to what school should be chosen for them.

"I don't want to send them to the public school," said Mrs. Jones ; "they'll hear so much

I would rather they should never hear. There are some very rough boys in the school, and I don't want my boys to be rough."

"They've got to come in contact with all sorts of people some time," said Mr. Jones, "and I think this contact would best begin while they are young, and while they've got us to tell them how to paddle their little canoes, and what they should think of all they see and hear, and what companions to choose and what to avoid. We may not live always to be able to do this. If they must be exposed to temptation and bad influences, let it be while we are with them to administer antidotes and correctives."

So it was decided that the two boys should go to the public school. Harry, the elder, was always picking up everything he heard and using it in his daily conversation, while Willie observed as closely as Harry, but didn't absorb so much. It wasn't long before Harry's vocabulary showed signs of great enlargement in several directions. Words not in any dictionary, sentences found only in grammars under "Exercises to be corrected," slang expressions, surprised the Jones household day by day, and gave both parents ample opportunity to administer antidotes and correctives to their hearts' content. Harry was good friend with all the boys, and so they were kindly and good-tempered, was disposed to take them at their own valuation of themselves. Willie was slower to make friendly alliances and more select in his range of comradeship, and the two boys had lively discussions as to the desirability of certain associations with their schoolfellows. This difference between the two boys gave Mrs. Jones an excellent opportunity to keep the run of their fellowships when they were away from her, and by engaging in their talk and skillfully drawing them out, she was able to arrive at the "true inwardness" of their lives when they were at school.

Harry was very fond of stories of adventure, and brought home books and papers lent him by his schoolmates. These Mrs. Jones looked over very carefully; for, wise woman that she was, she was even more solicitous as to the books her boys read than she was as to the mates they played with. She took care to provide such books as should gratify the normal love of her boys for marvels and adventures without stimulating morbid and mischievous impulses and tendencies, to form in them healthful tastes in literature, knowing that if she succeeded in doing this they would reject the unwholesome and choose the good. The mother whose children rise from a well-furnished table is not afraid that they will pick up and eat crusts from the sidewalk or the gutter.

The boys learned that though Sim Leakin and Ed Thompson said "By golly," and wore dirty hands and soiled clothes, and played truant, and didn't learn their lessons, and were disrespectful to the teacher, that these things were not according to the Jones standard, and so they became more and more independent of the influences of their associates at school, more select in their friendships, more and more settled in their apprehensions and convictions, and learned how when wrong was on one side of the way to pass by on the other side.—Christian Advocate.

GUESTS TO BE DREADED.

"The people whom I most dread as guests," remarked a woman noted for her generous hospitality, "are those who have no capacity for small pleasures." Any reader who is accustomed to entertain much will easily recognize the class to which the speaker referred. They are persons who are restless unless something is continually "going on," as they express it. They cannot seem to enter into the quiet enjoyments of the family in which they are visiting. A walk, with no special object in view, is to them the tamest sort of recreation. They cannot understand mother's delight in finding a new flower; they wonder why you go out on the veranda to view a fine sunset; the success of a new stitch in embroidery or a new recipe in cooking; the pleasurable excitement in tracing a quotation; the arrival of a new book—all these are trifles beneath their notice. If there are children in the household, they pay no attention to their little ambitions and accomplishments. Mary's amateur playing or John's crude attempts at painting have little interest to the visitor who has no gift for finding happiness in small pleasures, but to find it thus is a gift well worth cultivating.—Selected.

LITTLE COOKS AT THE SEA-SHORE.

BY ANNA M. PRATT.

All along the sea shore
You may see a mighty band
Of little folks a-making
Patty-cakes of sand,
Well seasoned with salt water,
And frosted at the top—
Such patty-cakes cannot be bought
At any baker's shop!

Up and down the country,
Everywhere you'll find
Mud-pies are a-mixing—
The very daintiest kind:
For another host of little folks
Are busy on the ground
Moulding fancy pie-crust
That's always nicely browned.

But when vacation's over
All these little cooks
Must leave their outdoor baking
And hasten to their books,
Because their mothers tell them
(And I think it very wise)
One cannot always live content
On pretty cakes and pies.

OUR FRED.

"All but Fred, as usual, I see," said Mr. Porter, as the small Porters trooped into the breakfast room early one morning. "Robbie, is your brother up yet?"

"No, sir; he's asleep."

"Well, go back and tell him to get up immediately, as I am in a great hurry to be off this morning. Of course, Fred has not fed the horse, and is not here to harness him for me. He is growing more and more unreliable every day, and I am sure I don't know what to do about it."

Just here the small messenger returned with, "Papa, I woke Fred and he says he is too sick to get up; and he says, mother, he'd like his breakfast took up to him."

"I don't believe he is one bit sick, but it is composition day at school and he hates to write them."

"There, don't be too uncharitable in your judgment of your brother, Mary; he may really be sick. I will take him up his breakfast and find out if I can."

"My advice is to wait a while, my dear, and perhaps he may feel well enough before long to come down in search of his breakfast. There I am off. As you do not wish to come with me, Frederick, you may entertain your sister and read the paper till I come back." This with a look at Uncle Fred, who had been a quiet listener to the conversation while he discussed the muffins. "Good-by all," and Mr. Porter was off this time.

"I don't know what to do about Fred, brother. If he really is sick it will not do to treat him badly, of course. Poor boy! I don't really know what to do. He is our great problem that it seems almost impossible to solve. I know he often has a way of crawling out of things that are disagreeable to do, and he may be doing that now."

"Just leave him to me, sister—that is, if you can trust me."

"Mother, Fred says he is hungry and wants his breakfast, and told me to ask you to let Mary bring it up right away; and I am going to get Rover to take up to him, 'cause he says he is lonesome and wants him," said messenger Robbie as he rushed through the room on his errands.

After Uncle Fred had read through his paper, he quietly folded it up, and asking his sister for a piece of dry toast and a cup of hot water with milk and sugar in it, he started up-stairs to see his namesake. Fred's face turned a little red when he saw his uncle, but he braved it out.

"I am real sorry you are sick, my boy, for I wanted you to go down to Long Pond with me this afternoon, after school; for I have a prime new rod, and I thought you could catch some of those big fellows with it that got away from us the last time. But, of course, there is an end to that now. Now, try and eat something, my boy. I know sick people do not have any appetite, but this little toast won't hurt you."

"That's right, my poor boy," as the invalid made away with the toast in one bite, and finished the weak drink in as short a time.

"Now we will smooth the bed;" and Uncle Fred grabbed the covers and shook them, thereby dislodging the family cat with her four little kittens, and they all ran down-stairs with their tails in the air. And then, taking up Fred's pillow to arrange it, he found "The Arabian Nights" and captured it, of course.

"Now, then, we will close the blinds and leave you to sleep, for sleep is the very best medicine when one is sick, my boy."

"I am not one bit sleepy, and it is awful slow lying here without anything to do but think. This farce is about played out. Guess I will get up, dress, and go about my business."

Having come to this wise conclusion, Fred acted upon it, and slipping quietly down the back stairs, he laid in a goodly supply of bread and meat in the kitchen pantry, and then hurried off to school.

Meanwhile, poor, hindered Mr. Porter, with his head full of business, had troubled thoughts about his eldest son at home.

"I don't know what to do with Fred," sighed he. "He may be sick. I'll send up the doctor and see," was his final conclusion.

The doctor went, and did not find any sick boy to treat. In fact, he found no boy at all.

"The next time Fred has one of these attacks, Mrs. Porter, I would prescribe a liberal dose of castor oil and molasses," laughed the doctor as he left.

The family were mortified over this visit. Uncle Fred suggested, as Mr. Porter was unable to find some one to pile up the wood in the wood-house, that he unite the two problems, Fred and the wood, and have the boy get up his strength by storing away the wood.

This was quite a punishment to Fred, as he had expected to spend the following Saturday with Uncle Fred and the new rod at Long Pond; but instead, the time was mostly spent in the wood-house.

I wonder, boys, if among all the Toms, Dicks and Harrys of your acquaintance there are any boys like "Our Fred." I hope not, for boys from the ages of nine to sixteen are surely old enough to take up some of the responsibilities of life, and they at least ought to be able to help lift some of the many burdens that are weighing down their kind fathers.—The Occident.

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1891.

EVOLUTION and development are terms that have come to stay in theology no less than in science. They involve the idea that wherever there is life, there is growth or a gradual unfolding of the idea that as a power underlies all true life. The difficulty is to get scholars to agree on the point from which the process takes its start. Some will have it that it begins from below, in the lower forms of animal and vegetable life; others having the fear of God in their hearts with reverence for the Bible, maintain that all development must come from above, and go down to the simpler forms of nature. It is true that plants and animals appeared first in nature and that man appeared subsequently, after the world had been prepared for him as a suitable, and most magnificent abode. But then it is also true that the idea of man was primary in the divine mind, and that nature in its profusion and diversity, became a necessity and must have grown out of the idea of humanity as consequences or results of the first germinating thought. For without man nature could have no meaning, no mission, or no use here in time and space, and would have been an absurdity, a body without a head.

STARTING with the idea of man we can have no difficulty in seeing that this world of ours is a living unity, an organism in which the several parts have what may be styled a vital connection. But the great problem is not solved until we can trace the connection beyond nature up to the throne of God, who must be acknowledged to be the beginning and source of all true development. In consequence of sin, heaven and earth flew asunder; but the divine purpose remained, and the living reunion of the two must be accomplished. The divine love was sufficient in this emergency. Men had fallen so low that they could not see God and live. But He gave up His only begotten Son, that He might unite Himself to our human nature, so that through His flesh, as a veil, men might see God and live. Now all that see the Son see the Father also, a wonderful sight, brought about by the Spirit who comes to us through Christ, the living bread, and brings men into living union and communion with the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit.

PROGRESS IN BRAZIL.

At the recent meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly at Detroit, Dr. Chamberlain, missionary present from Brazil, made a speech which must have been listened to with much attention. Among other things, he said that, in anticipation of the gathering of the Constituent Assembly in November last, the bishops of Brazil had publicly announced that unless the new constitution should be modified in its utterances respecting religious liberty or free toleration, the government would henceforth find itself opposed by the united Apostolate, twelve in number, and twelve millions of Catholics besides. This ecclesiastic thunder or brutem fulmen fell to the ground without producing any effect. The speaker above named remarked that the fact that the "assembly in the face of this protest should have quietly proceeded to ratify all these radical measures and to make them fundamental laws for all generations in Brazil, has surprised even the most hopeful among us." The Protestant missionaries can now carry on their work of diffusing the evangelical faith without let or hindrance.—If the bishops had styled themselves the Episcopate, the term would have been historically correct, but when they passed over the Episcopate and claimed to be the Apostolate they were guilty of an anachronism, placing themselves in the first instead of the nineteenth century. It is the same as if a set of architects should attempt to raise the foundation of a house to its top, instead of leaving it where it is to support the building from beneath.

THE HARVESTS.

As we sit writing and then look out of our window over the orchard with fruit hanging on the trees, getting ripe as fast as they can, the cherries already in red ripeness, we gaze upon a sight of unrivalled beauty, and we are compelled to lay aside our pen. We then walk out to a neighboring hill, and take a view of the country around, dressed in living green with golden wheat fields interspersed far out to the mountains. The prospects are that we will have good crops, which the harvesters are ready to gather in, as soon as the word is given to cast in the sickle, no, to set the reapers into motion. There are plenty of such to go to work. But how is it with our spiritual fields, ready for the harvest all over the land,—all over the world. The laborers here are few, indeed, and we are commanded to pray to the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers. But prayer without works is dead. Young men whose parents have the means to give them an education to prepare themselves for the work, do not present themselves in sufficient numbers. The Church, like the State, must therefore educate the sons of the poor to serve as officers in the grand army of harvesters. Let this be borne in mind as the harvests are taken down and gathered into barns. The individual, the congregation, or the pastor, who is successful in sending forth one additional faithful laborer into the field, is the means of initiating a grand movement, which will live, grow in magnitude, and never end until the harvests are all over.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

What is truth? That is the old question, which has been coming up ever since Pilate asked it and long before. In our day it continues still to be discussed by theologians and philosophers, who as Christians possessing it and carrying it about with them every day, ought to know something about it. The ancient Greeks, Romans and heathen philosophers generally regarded it as the opposite of error, as falsehood, and occupied much of their time in telling their disciples what it was not. The debaters wrangled with each other, became noisy sophists, and some of them with their skill in logic or mere words could pass from one side of the question to the other, with as much ease as a barrister adapts himself to suit his client.

Among the Hebrews, the Israelites indeed, who were diligent students of God's word, there was a quite different conception of truth. With them it was the sum, substance or life of things. They knew full well that their religious system was made up of types, ceremonies, shadows, promises, and prophecies, all of which pointed to something real that was to be revealed in the future, as the substance or reality on which they based their expectations. So Moses and all the prophets taught. They knew and felt, as St. Paul says, that they possessed only "a shadow of things to come;" "that the law was a shadow of good things, and not the very image of the things;" that "the body is of Christ," their sum, substance, ensamples or types. Col. 2 : 17, Heb. 10 : 1. When Christ therefore came, He in Himself was the fulfilment or realization of all that had gone before. Hence He calls Himself "the Truth." John 14 : 6. This passage is frequently understood to mean that Truth is simply something derivative from Christ; that Christ is presented to the mind and then the image of Him passing up through the brain into the mind becomes truth at length, after such a process of clarification. This is no doubt truth, subjective truth, as far as it has not been adulterated in its passage through what after all is not always a pure medium,—through what after all are only earthly vessels, not excepting the greatest theologians. But is that exactly the meaning of the truth spoken of in Scripture? We think not. There it is represented to us as something outside of us, as objective, as a living power just as it is a living way, existing eternally, unchangeably, whether it enters one individual mind or not. Christ is in this way the Truth, for if He is not we are no better off than the ancient Israelites. The only difference would be that they depended on external shadows, whilst we have only internal mental types or figures. Fortunately Christ as the God-man comes into communication with believers through a mysterious union with them, by which He communicates to them His divine-human life. As a consequence their eyes are opened; they see the truth; and rejoice in it with joy unspeakable. Many of them are unable and do not attempt to explain the process by which they get into the light. It is enough for them to know that they have the truth as an abiding possession. More advanced disciples speculate and form theories, all of which are helpful, provided they proceed from a Christian consciousness that is truly catholic and broad, and not narrow and sectarian. Otherwise they only make matters worse, confuse the minds of the brethren, and lead them away from Christ to themselves or their own narrow school.

THE HIGHER CRITICISM.

There is doubtless some call for a higher criticism of the Scriptures, higher than the one in vogue fifty or hundred years ago. There is, in fact, as urgent a necessity for it in our days, as there was for the assertion of the higher law before the outbreak of the war, thirty years ago. There is, however, here a certain amount of this so called criticism, which is not high, but very low, rationalistic, if not infidel, coming in upon us from Germany, directly or through England, which destroys the real character of the Bible, and reduces it to a mere story book, full of myths or fables. We could have wished that Dr. Briggs had referred to this left wing when he wrote about this kind of criticism, more decidedly, as full of mischief and venom to the cause of truth. Dr. Green of Princeton, an old acquaintance of ours, has done this kind of work in his writings very effectually and in a scholarly style; and with much learning and acuteness of mind has shown that Kuenen and his school have made palpable mistakes, blunders, oversights, and not the Bible. But we could have wished that he had gone further and shown in a positive way, that the higher criticism has a true vocation, at the present time, that it has come to stay, and that whilst the Bible is divine it is also human. He has all the necessary learning and ability for work of this kind, and if he will undertake to do this for us in a reverential way, we will all love the Bible so much the more.

Its divine side has been held up so high and in such imposing style, that it has almost made some people afraid of it. What is now most needed is that we should love it, and that will be the case more and more in proportion as we hear it speaking to us in a human voice. A true biblical theology is much needed.

KEEPING FAITH.

The success of an undertaking often depends upon the co-operation of a number of different parties. It may be a common work, in which all concerned are equally interested, the accomplishment of which will be a benefit to every one who has anything to do with it. Those concerned undertake the work, each one, according to the understanding, agreeing to do a certain portion of it, so that in due time the whole may be accomplished. There are many things to be done, which it would be folly for one person to undertake, but which are of comparatively easy accomplishment when the strength and power of many persons is combined to get them done. And it is by such combinations that the greatest things in the world and in the Church are performed. A single drop of rain is too small to effect anything, but many drops, working in harmony for the same object, can refresh the earth, cause vegetation to grow, and bring abundant harvests. One man may not be able to build a church, but a congregation, when all unite to this end, when each one does his share, can build a fine church, and no single person will be forced to make a very extraordinary effort. One State of the Union would be comparatively helpless in a trial of strength with a foreign nation, but altogether they constitute a strong body, are able to collect vast armies and would hardly fear to meet the most powerful people.

But in such great undertakings, those entering into them have a double responsibility. They no doubt when it was resolved upon, felt the importance and usefulness of the work. They felt that it had a claim upon them, that it was worth the cost of its accomplishment. They saw that good would result from it. Hence they were willing to undertake to do a reasonsonable share of it, and readily entered into the arrangement by which the whole was to be divided in just proportion between different parties, of which they became one. Since this combination has been formed, however, a new and stronger claim rests on them. It is now no longer only the importance of the work to be done, but also the just expectation on the part of the others in the combination that they do what they have engaged to do. The work may be of such a nature that the failure of one party to accomplish what they undertook may render the efforts of the other parties fruitless, or, not being of that nature, their failure to live up to the agreement may merely deprive themselves and their partners of that part of the benefit, which would have been derived from their fulfillment of their contract. In either case, or in any other case, there is a very strong obligation resting upon each party to such a common undertaking to perform its part of the work, arising from the relation into which the parties have entered with each other. Each one should keep faith with the others. It is not right not to do so. It is a violation of the contract. It is being false to one's engagements. And no one, in whom conscience rules or who has a sense of justice and right wishes to place himself in that position.

An illustration of this general truth, and, at the same time, the application desired to be made of it, is found in the matter of the new professorships in the Seminary at Lancaster. Three Synods in the fall of 1884 resolved each to endow a professorship in the Eastern Theological Seminary. The formal resolution to do this does not express the fact that the action of any one of the three depended in any way on what the other two should do. That feature was not made prominent or emphasized. Hence no allusion to it was made in the formal resolution on the subject. But who that was present at any of the Synods at the time will not remember that from beginning to end all went upon the assumption that three professorships were to be established, and that each of the three Synods was to undertake to endow one. The Pittsburgh Synod acted first. Probably if the other two Synods had not undertaken their share no one in the Pittsburgh Synod would have felt under obligations to make much effort to carry out the resolution. The Potomac Synod had the action of the Pittsburgh brethren before it, and the Eastern Synod had the resolution of the other two, before action was taken. It is not necessary to argue the point of an implied, and, as far as the speeches went, a clearly and strongly expressed understanding that what any one Synod did was not to stand alone but that two other Synods should do a like work, and that each Synod should reap the benefit of its own public spirited liberality and also that of the two other Synods. All will admit this.

Not to make the most earnest efforts to carry out the resolution to endow a Professorship in the Seminary, therefore, not only puts the Synod which does this in the most unpleasant position of not fulfilling promises made to itself, repudiating its own good resolutions, but it puts it in the position of not keeping faith with its associated Synods. One Synod has done the work—its share of the three-fold work. It has a right to say to us, now we demand that you fulfill your part of the contract. Looking at it in this light it must be a matter of gratification to every conscientious minister and layman in Pittsburgh Synod that the work has been begun and is being pushed among us. L.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The Board of Managers, the Ladies' Committee and the special committee appointed at the last anniversary to make arrangements for Bethany Day this year, all met at the Home on Friday, July 10th. It was an ideal Summer day and everybody seemed to enjoy the gathering. The thanks of the Church are due these committees, the members of which travel long distances, and freely spend their time and means to properly care for the dependent orphans of the Church.

The following were re-elected to serve as the officers of the Board during the coming year. Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., President, Rev. Thos. M. Yundt, Secretary, W. R. Lawfer, Assistant Secretary, C. G. Gross, Treasurer. All monies intended for the Home should be sent to our Treasurer, Mr. C. G. Gross, 3716 Haverford Ave., Philadelphia. Many contributions are sent to the Superintendent but it would simplify matters very much if all money was sent direct to the treasurer. Please write down the address for future use.

The following is an abstract of the Treasurer's Report. Received contributions, $5955.26, from

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."—Minutes of Synod, 1888.

legacies, $483.00, from all other sources, $993.69, total, $7431.95. Disbursements, Deficit July 1st, 1890, 474.77. Total amount of expenses, $6920.78. Transfered to New Building account, $805.00, Total $8200.55. Deficit July 10th, 1891, $768.60.

In the Superintendent's Annual Report we find the following: Number of children received during the year, 13, two died and 10 left the Home, leaving at present 82. Whole number cared for during the year 94. Whole number since founding the Home 463. The following crops were harvested in the summer of 1890: 298 bushels of wheat, 11½ bushels rye, 78 bushels oats, 615 bushels corn, 385 bushels potatoes, 22 bushels apples, 60 bushels turnips, 42 tons of hay, 60 bushels grapes, 1500 heads of cabbage.

Don't forget the date of the Anniversary and of Bethany Day, Thursday, August 27. The committee at its meeting held on July 10th took active steps to make the occasion pleasant, interesting and profitable. Members of the committee were here from Philadelphia, Easton, Allentown, Reading and Lebanon.

The goods for the new gray suits or uniforms ordered for the boys some time ago is now in the hands of tailors and the suits will be ready for use at Anniversary. The bill for the goods, which the Superintendent suggested might be paid by an individual or a congregation, was paid out of our treasury, but the making of the suits is not yet paid for. Perhaps some one would rather pay for the making than for the goods, if so an opportunity will be cheerfully given to any one.

SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE.

One word more about the Spiritual Conference. The first meeting will be held on Wednesday evening, July 29th, and the closing session on Tuesday, August 4th. It would be a great accommodation if the brethren who expect to come would notify the undersigned not later than Saturday, July 25th, in order that Mr. Glass who has charge of Harbaugh Hall may know how many to make provision for. Brethren, please write when you expect to come and how long you expect to remain. Very truly,

D. W. Gerhard.

If there is any one truth I would gladly impress on the mind of a young Christian, it is just this, that God notices the most trivial act, accepts the poorest, most threadbare little service, listens to the coldest, feeblest petition, and gathers up with parental fondness all our fragmentary desires and attempts at good works. —Author of "Stepping Heavenward."

IS IT WELL WITH YOUR SOUL?

BY SUSANNA CORRELL.

Have you turned from the darkness of sin and despair,
To the path that will lead to the "Home of the Soul?"
Have you taken the cross at the Saviour's command;
Are you bearing it on as you're nearing the goal?
And the sins that beset you so easily here,
And which year after year the bright angels enroll,
Are they all washed away in the Blood of the Lamb?
Is it well with your soul? Is it well with your soul?

Do you relish the food that the Saviour of men
Has provided for all who profess His dear name?
Is your faith growing stronger, and heav'n more bright,
And the love of your heart beyond censure or blame?
Are you struggling for freedom from every sin,
As the years in their transit so rapidly roll,
And eternity nearer and nearer appears?
Is it well with your soul? Is it well with your soul?

When the Judge of the world in His glory shall come,
And shall summon the living and dead to His bar,
Will you stand with the ransomed before Him to claim
The mansion of glory that nothing can mar?
Will a body so glorious like unto His own,
Be the treasure, in gladness, to you He shall dole?
Shall the "Well done" be uttered to welcome you home?
Is it well with your soul? Is it well with your soul?

Selections.

Silence is as deep as eternity; speech is as shallow as time.—Carlyle.

If we accustom ourselves to self-denial, we break the force of most temptations.—Bond.

The love of God is an endless circle from good to good, without error or inconstancy, moving in an everlasting round.—Farindon.

You will see the pools and standing waters frozen through the winter, when the little running streams are bounding along between fringes of icy gems. Why is this? The streams have something else to do than stand still to be frozen up. Be you like them. Keep your hearts warm by feeling for others, and your powers active by work done in earnest.—Dr. John Hall.

The Love of God.

As flows the river calm and deep
In silence toward the sea,
So floweth ever, and ceaseth never,
The love of God to me.

What peace He bringeth to my heart,
Deep as the soundless sea,
How sweetly singeth the soul that clingeth,
My loving Lord, to Thee.

How calm at even' sinks the sun
Beyond the clouded west,
So tempest driven, into the haven,
I reach the longed-for rest.

Science and Art.

The great photographic chart of the heavens to be made by a circle of international observers will be taken during this month. The Astronomical Congress in Paris have settled all the necessary arrangements, and the work promises to be carried out admirably except in two countries—Chili, disturbed by the war; and Brazil, where a new observatory is being built at Rio Janeiro.

WOOD FOR VIOLINS.—When the old Pierce building of Boston, Mass., which had stood for more than 200 years, was torn down, six or seven years ago, several violin makers got a lot of spruce joists out of it to make violin tops. Most people think violins are made from some queer and costly foreign wood. They are not. The top is made of spruce boards or timbers, and the strap, the back and the scroll from curly maple. The essential, however, is that the wood shall have been seasoned for generations. Cheap violins are made from wood that has been seasoned only four or five years. Good makers want wood 100 years old.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Items of Interest.

Mr. William Woodward, of Baltimore, now ninety years old, has been a Sunday-school teacher for 72 years.

In the past twelve years the number of students in Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) has increased from 40 to 167; and the Faculty from six to fourteen.

A vast banyan tree covering between six and seven acres has been discovered on the tiny Lord Howe Island, 300 miles from Port Macquarie, in Australia. It is surpassed in size only by the greatest of those in India.

The discovery of an enormous underground reservoir of water in the midst of the Sahara Desert will undoubtedly develop trade and travel throughout that region. Explorations have shown that there are large portions of the Sahara which are really capable of cultivation, and after a time it will doubtless be as completely effaced from the map as has the Great American Desert.

German newspapers express serious alarm at the spread of irreligion in the Fatherland. The number of Germans in the larger cities receiving neither baptism nor confirmation amounts to hundreds of thousands. In Prussia alone there are 30,000 irreligious persons who have never been baptized. This number does not include those who have been baptized but disclaimed adhesion to the church and all religious institutions.

Notwithstanding the determined efforts of the Orthodox Church to suppress all religious dissent in Russia the number of sects is constantly on the increase. Thus the Government of Novgorod numbered 1,029,405 Orthodox and 8,452 Raskolniks in 1880. In 1890, the figures were 1,167,367 Orthodox, but 30,958 Rasholniks, i. e. Sectarians. In 1880, the latter constituted only 0.8 per cent. of the population; one decade later they represented 2.6 per cent.

Near Norwich, Ct., is a most prolific lily pond. It is a mile in diameter, and so closely grown with lilies that, during the blossoming time, it is hard to get a glimpse of the water. When the wind is strong and the lilies are open the perfume of them is perceptible a quarter of a mile from the brink of the pond, it is said. So thick are the lilies and in such tangled masses that it is almost impossible to propel a boat in the pond, and the lily gatherers have to wade for them in hip rubber boots.

It is said that the army worm is destroying the wheat in Mason county, Iowa. As the wheat ripens the worms leave it and attack the corn. The aphis, or grain louse, has made its appearance in the growing wheat in Michigan. The rains of the past three weeks have started a new weed, known as pepper grass, in many North Dakota counties and in the Red River Valley, and it has already become so rank that many fields of wheat will not be worth cutting. It grows much more rapidly than the wheat.

Hints and Recipes.

FROSTING WITHOUT EGGS.—Take fine powdered sugar, add a little cold water, mix to a smooth paste, flavor with lemon extract, spread on a cake. Sweet milk can be used instead of water.

QUICK BISCUIT.—Two cupfuls of flour, one tablespoonful mixed lard and butter, one cupful of milk, one heaping teaspoonful baking powder, pinch salt. Handle little, roll out and cut quickly, and bake in a steady oven.

EGG PLANT.—Peel and cut in slices, sprinkle with salt, let it stand an hour to drain; then dip in a batter made with eggs, flour, and a little water, and fry in hot fat; or, peel the egg plant, boil in water till done, drain, mash fine, mix with pepper, butter, and salt, put in a baking dish, have a thick layer of cracker or bread-crumbs over the top, and bake half an hour in a moderate oven; or, when mashed as above, add eggs and cracker-crumbs, form in small cakes, and fry in butter or lard. Oyster plant may be cooked in this last way, making the cakes the size of a large oyster.

TO KEEP THE HOUSE COOL.—Much of the heat of our houses is supplied by the kitchen range, which Bridget keeps red-hot even in the dog-days, says The Ladies' Home Journal. Prevent this by using a gas stove or oil stove as far as possible. Then shut up tight all rooms not in use. Not only should the shutters and windows be closed, but the blinds must be lowered to exclude every ray of light, and the doors locked to prevent the running in and out of the children, who thus admit waves of heated air. Perhaps it would be neither wise nor practicable to hermetically seal all the rooms of a house, but one room, at least, can be so treated, the parlor, and also the dining-room between meals; the room selected should be closed early in the morning while the air has some freshness, and before the sun strikes the windows; then it should not be opened until late in the afternoon.

Every house should have an accessible trap door in its roof, and when this is lett open, a current of heated air must rise through it and make a general draught over all the house. Awnings should be light in color, and should be at all windows and doors except those to the north. They are great helps in keeping out glare, but they should be chosen of a kind which ls readily raised and lowered. After sundown a plentiful watering of your street and pavement, and of all the garden you possess, will cool the air wonderfully.

Farm and Garden.

Dry weather is bad for horses' feet. A good soaking in a tub of water occasionally is a good thing for them, rubbing them dry with a bag and then buttering them with vaseline. When too dry they are brittle, crack and often make the horse limp on striking some obstruction in the road.

Buckwheat is really a valuable crop, not only for the grain which it produces, which is worth more than oats for feeding, but for the convenient season in which it is grown. A poor pasture may be ploughed late in June, when it begins to fail, and sown with buckwheat, with grass and clover, and thus be renewed, while the buckwheat pays more than all expenses, and no time is lost.

DETERIORATION OF SHEEP.—Under neglect or unfavorable conditions sheep deteriorate as no other farm animals do. Good sheep are the product of the highest agriculture and thrive only with good care and suitable natural conditions. The finest sheep are developed on high, dry lands, in a dry atmosphere, on sweet, varied and nutritious grasses. On wet ground or on monotonous, dry and hard vegetation, sheep will exist, but they will not yield to the true farmer a fair profit. For proper conditions and care, sheep even now pay handsomely profitable figures.

Deaths.

Obituaries to be inserted must be no longer than two hundred and fifty words.

DIED.—Departed this life, on the 20th of June, 1891, at her home in Waynesboro, Franklin county, Pa., Mrs. Clarissa Coon, widow of the late Elder John W. Coon, aged 73 years, 5 months and 28 days.

Mother Coon was received into full communion with the Reformed church at Funkstown, Md., on the 17th of May, 1835, by the Rev. William A. Good. Her confirmation took place after she had passed through a thorough course of catechetical instruction, her attendance upon which was regular and unbroken, although it necessitated her to walk a number of miles every week to and from the church. During the fifty-six years since she made her first approach to the table of the Lord, she has seldom been known to be absent from the stated services of the sanctuary, or the celebration of the Holy Communion, unless providentially prevented from being present.

In her death Trinity congregation of Waynesboro has lost one of its most devoted members, and her children, one of whom is the Rev. Charles H. Coon, of Philadelphia, have been deprived of a kind and loving mother. Her home was formerly a place of resort for such ministers of our church as had become acquainted with her husband at Classis and Synod, and who had occasion to tarry here for a season. These will learn with regret of her departure, and will recall the happy hours spent under her hospitable roof. It was her delight to speak of the friendship she enjoyed in former years with many of our ministers and their families, and she never failed to make inquiry of her pastor concerning them. The beautiful Christian fortitude and patience displayed by her during her protracted and painful illness, and her unselfish solicitude for the welfare of those around her, even when she was herself suffering great bodily weakness and distress, impressed all who witnessed them with a deep sense of the reality of her faith and confidence in the Redeemer. She retained full consciousness to the last, and yielded up her spirit to its Maker as calmly and peacefully as an infant falls asleep in the arms of its mother.

"Sweet is the scene when Christians die,
When holy souls retire to rest;
How mildly beams the closing eye!
How gently heaves the expiring breath!

"So fades a summer cloud away;
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore."

On the occasion of her funeral, which was largely attended, the pastor of the family spoke of the priceless blessing which they enjoy who have a good and pious mother, and of the high and loving appreciation in which her memory ought ever to be held by her children, basing his remarks on the latter part of the 14th verse of the 35th Psalm: "I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother." B.

DIED.—On Sunday, May 31st, Mrs. Lidie A. McGuire peacefully "fell asleep in Jesus," after a lingering illness of tubular consumption.

During the nine months in which she was gradually wasting away, not a murmur was heard, not a word of complaint was uttered. She bore it only as a Christian could. Those at her bedside thought she was suffering acutely, but she had her "mind set upon things that are above," and didn't experience any pain. She was a faithful mother, a devoted member of church, and a noble, consecrated teacher in the Sunday-school. As of Paul it could have been said of her: "For me to live is Christ, to die is gain." Her remains were laid to rest in Edgewood Cemetery June 2. F. E. L.

DIED.—About 11.30 A.M., June 12th, Sasan S. Whitesell, wife of U. M. Learn, fell a victim to that dread disease, typhoid fever, which she contracted while kindly taking care of her sister, Mrs. Cunningham, who died May 20th, leaving "Little Willie" in her tender care.

Thus the sisters, mother and foster-mother, have gone to rest, and the Lord in some way will provide for all the children left motherless.

Mrs. Learn's departing hence, to be with Christ, is in one sense sad, because of the many vacancies, but in the higher and nobler sense we should rejoice on account of the victory in Christ.

The one who was the comfort, the hope, the inspiration, the life of that Christian home is gone—gone where? She has taken her flight to be with Jesus which is far better than living in this world of care and sickness and sorrow and pain.

Her beaming face, her cheerful countenance, her helping hand will be missed in the home, the Sunday-school, the church militant, that she may join the church triumphant, there to ascribe all honor and praise and glory in a world without end.

She was one of the faithful Bible readers amongst the many in the Salina charge who are under the direction of the pastor, reading it systematically.

It seems that before going to the bedside of her sick sister a significant ending mark was found at the last clause of the last verse of 2 Kings 3rd chapter: "And they departed from him and returned to their own land." How expressive. She departed from her husband to care for a sick sister, and they afterward "returned to their own land," to the land of the blest, the land of pure delight. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

After forty years of noble, Christian leadership we can say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

She was baptized in infancy, confirmed in youth, married April 28, 1870, to Mr. U. M. Learn, which union was blessed with three noblest, truest, purest, most pious daughters, one of whom had preceded her to the spiritual world.

Sleep on, Mrs. Learn, until thou dost awaken in the likeness of Christ on the resurrection morn.

Let us all remain faithful unto the end that we may inherit eternal life and enjoy a happy reunion. F. E. L.

DIED.—At Pavia, Bedford county, Pa., June 4th, 1891, Simon M. Feather, aged 45 years, 9 months and 20 days.

The subject of this notice had not been enjoying good health for many years, caused by a severe wound received while discharging his duties to his country in the late civil war. Yet death came quite unexpected.

He was a faithful and consistent member of Mt. Zion Reformed church. As a soldier of the Lord, he trusted in Jesus Christ, the Captain of his salvation, and was faithful in discharging the duties resting upon him.

Hence we laid him to rest in "God's acre," in the hope of the resurrection of the just and a glorious immortality. May the Comforter of all who mourn be with the widow and fatherless children in their sore bereavement. C. W. S.

DIED.—In Maytown, June 26th, 1891, Margaret Murry, aged 86 years, 4 months and 16 days.

Old Miss Murry was one of the oldest female members of the Reformed church in Maytown. She was a faithful and devoted Christian. Peacefully and calmly she sank into rest after an illness of three weeks. May God's blessing rest upon the bereaved household. PASTOR.

MERCERSBURG COLLEGE.

At the last annual meeting of the Synod of the Potomac steps were taken towards placing this institution on a better financial basis. A committee consisting of Rev. C. U. Heilman as chairman, and one or two persons from each Classis, was appointed to take the matter in hand. It was understood that this committee should hold educational conventions in behalf of the College in the pastoral charges within the bounds of the Synod. The object of these conventions is three-fold—to cancel the remaining indebtedness of the institution, to establish an endowment fund and to increase its patronage by awakening a greater interest throughout the Synod in its behalf.

This action of the Synod was heartily endorsed by the Mercersburg Classis at its late meeting, and a special committee was appointed to co-operate with the Synod's committee in carrying out the plan. The members of this committee are Rev. S. E. Stofflet and Elder Samuel Haeflich, both of Waynesboro.

It was considered proper that the work of the committee of Classis should begin in the Mercersburg charge within the bounds of which the College is located. Accordingly there was an educational meeting held in two of the congregations composing this charge, on the last Sunday of June. Several speakers, who are warm friends of the College, were invited to be present with the committee, but were prevented from attending. The second member of the committee took sick after arriving at Mercersburg, so that the burden of the meeting and of the canvass devolved upon the chairman, except such assistance as the pastor loci could give him in the work. However, Bro. Stofflet proved himself equal to the occasion. He earnestly presented the cause to the people both in the morning and in the afternoon, besides preaching acceptably to a third congregation in the evening. He demonstrated the fact that he possesses the requisite amount of courage and perseverance to make a successful collector. During the past year the people had been frequently called on for contributions for church building and repairs and for the general benevolent objects of the church, yet they again responded handsomely, and, by the grace of God, will survive it grandly. Including the subscriptions that had been quietly secured from a few persons previously by the chairman of Synod's committee, the result of the effort in behalf of the College, in the two congregations, is $443 secured. Of this amount $343 is for the debt, and $100 for the endowment fund of the College. This amount will be increased by a general canvass of the community which the committee contemplates making in the near future.

This important work so needful and so long unavoidably delayed by the Synod, having now started in the home of the College, should be vigorously pushed all along the line that it may be speedily shown that the Synod means business.

MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.

Trinity Reformed Missionary Society of Pottsville, Rev. A. R. Bartholomew, pastor, celebrated its fourth anniversary Sunday evening, June 28th.

A very entertaining and instructive programme was rendered, consisting of recitations, songs and addresses. A full house greeted them. Two very interesting features of the evening were an address on the "Relation of the Church and State," by Mr. George O. Sarvis, and the report of the secretary, Miss Emma E. Zerbey. We glean the following from the report:

"The society has raised since its organization $510, which has been devoted to home and foreign missions. Since our last anniversary two of our faithful members have been called from our midst to their final home beyond. In looking over our roll book, we see opposite their names 'died.' Their names have been dropped from this roll book, but to be added to the great roll book in heaven; and while dead to us, they have left an influence in their families, which could they but witness this evening, their hearts would be filled with gladness, for their children are continuing the work begun by them.

"The congregation at present is not worshipping in their own church, that being in the hands of workmen to be rebuilt. The great difference between our anniversary this evening and the ones held previously is due to the fact that we are in a strange place. It is not our home; and to feel at home in a perfectly strange place is next to impossible. Now if we who are removed from our own dear church but a short space, and which is to be but for a little while, when we hope to return again and enjoy it in its enlarged proportions and more beautiful style of architecture, I say, if we, under such circumstances feel so deeply our loss of home, how much more should we be able and willing not only to sympathize with, but also to aid those who have settled far to the North and West, out among strangers, where everything they behold is strange, altogether strange. From such persons comes the call to us for aid. To aid such is one of the objects of this society. Can we or dare we in God's sight turn a deaf ear to such appeals? One of the sweetest words in the English language is 'Home, Sweet Home.' Whether this home is for the indwelling of the body or for the spiritual home of the soul, it has the same significance. In closing, let me urge each one during the coming year to resolve to use all his or her talents, whether they be one or ten, for the cause of the Master, so that at His coming you may be able to say, 'Here, Lord, Thy five talents have gained five others.'"

EAST PENNSYLVANIA CLASSIS.

The Classis of East Pennsylvania convened in St. John's Reformed church, East Mauch Chunk, Carbon county, Pa., on Thursday, May 21st, 1891, at 10 o'clock, A.M., and remained in session until the following Monday afternoon.

Rev. George B. Smith, the retiring President, preached the opening sermon, based on St. Matt. 6: 10, "Thy Kingdom Come." It was a thoughtful, timely and suggestive discourse.

Rev. S. P. Mauger was elected president. Rev. T. O. Stem is stated clerk, and was also re-elected treasurer.

Favorable action was taken on all the recommendations by General Synod and the Eastern Synod.

The new Hymnal was unanimously adopted.

The Missionary Guardian was commended to the members of the churches under the care of Classis, and the pastors requested to use all proper means to increase the circulation thereof.

Rev. R. C. Weaver was received from Tohickon Classis, and a call to him from the Forks charge confirmed, and provision made for his installation.

The license of Mr. Chas. B. Stover, of New York city, was, at his own request, revoked.

In accordance with the report of the committee to which had been referred the request of Rev. R. N. Koplin to be relieved from the offices of the Gospel ministry, his name was erased from the roll of Classis. The report is as follows:

"We the committee appointed to inquire into the request of Rev. R. N. Koplin to resign from the offices of the Christian ministry, he having given himself to preparation for another profession, viz., the law, beg leave to report that we have failed to secure a conference with him, he refusing to meet with us, and, further, that in regard to his request itself, we do not consider that Classis has any power under the constitution to revoke the ordination vows of Rev. Mr. Koplin, which we cannot but consider as of binding force for life; and that we can only recommend, with sincere regret, that his name be stricken from the roll of Classis.

"And, further, that the Stated Clerk be instructed to furnish the Rev. Mr. Koplin with a copy of this report."

Beneficiary Students. Messrs. James Stofflet and G. W. Reyer were taken under the care of Classis as students for the Gospel ministry, the former pursuing his studies at F. and M. college, and the latter at Ursinus.

The death of Revs. J. J. Crist, Martin A. Smith and Ernest W. Reinecke, D.D., was noted, and the following paper adopted by a rising vote:

WHEREAS, God in His all-wise providence has during the past year removed from our body three of our brethren, viz., the Rev. J. J. Crist, Rev. Martin A. Smith and Rev. Dr. E.W. Reinecke, calling them home to Himself and to their eternal and blessed reward, therefore be it by us, the Classis of East Pennsylvania,

Resolved, That it is with a sense of bereavement and loss that we hereby make a record upon the minutes of the fact of their departure from amongst us. These brethren one and all were endeared to us by many ties. They were our brethren in the ministry, bound up with us in the sacred bonds of the holy office of the Word. They were furthermore endeared to us by long acquaintance and fellowship, and by long service with us in "the care of the churches." We respected and loved them. One of the three, the Rev. J. J. Crist, deserved well of the church of our fathers by his earnest, self-sacrificing labors in the interest of one of our congregations, whereby his health was shattered and finally broken. We cannot but record with pleasure the meekness and patience with which he endured the long trial sent upon him, as well as our joy that having suffered the measure of great affliction he abode faithful to the end.

Concerning the other two brethren, Martin A. Smith and E. W. Reinecke, we would express our sorrow in their death in that they were so long and honorably and usefully connected with East Pennsylvania Classis, their period of service having in either case covered many years. To us they were indeed "Fathers of Israel." We shall miss their kindly faces, the sound of their familiar voices, their valued counsels, and above all their calm, loving and most lovable Christian spirit.

Yet, while we mourn their departure, we rejoice that they have at length, after having for so many years witnessed a good confession before men, been called home to their blessed reward; we rejoice that they fell like true soldiers of the cross, at their posts, with their armor on; that they were from the ranks of the church militant within a short space of time taken to the restful seats of the church triumphant; that being delivered from the burden of the flesh they are now in heavenly joy and Christian felicity.

Resolved, That we hereby express to the bereaved families of these our brethren, our sincere sympathy in their affliction, and that copies of these resolutions be sent them by the clerk.

The following were elected delegates to the Eastern Synod to convene in Salem Reformed church, Harrisburg, Pa., the third Wednesday of October, 1891:

Primarii, Revs. Thos. C. Porter, D.D., T. O. Stem, W. F. More, H. M. Kieffer, Appeal.

Rev. J. W. Mabry disciplined four of the officers of St. Paul's Reformed congregation, near Cherryville, Pa., of which he is pastor, deposing them from office and excluding one from the privileges of the church. An appeal was taken from this sentence and the matter brought before Classis.

The appeal was heard, but Classis, by a unanimous vote sustained the lower court.

Action was taken looking towards securing conformity of the congregational constitutions to the general constitution of the Reformed church.

Classis will hold its next annual session in Salem Reformed church, Catasauqua, Pa., to convene on Friday after Ascension Day, 1892, at 7.30 P.M.

COLLEGE OF NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held in the college building, Thursday, June 25th, 1891. The attendance upon the part of the Trustees was good; the best since the writer has been a member of the Board. The devotional services were conducted by the President of the Board.

After the opening services the report of the treasurer was read by Rev. F. Wetzel. The report showed that the finances were well managed during the year, but that there was still quite a debt resting on the college.

On motion, the plan that was referred by the Classis to the Board, in regard to the paying off the indebtedness within five years by annual instalments, was adopted, and a committee appointed to co-operate with the pastors of Illinois Classis, to carry out effectually the plan that was adopted by the Classis and the Board.

Rev. H. L. Beam, President of the College, reported that thirty students had been in attendance during the year; that their conduct was good, and that they had made commendable progress in their studies.

The current expenses have been met and the prospects are better for the ensuing year. The aim of the Board is not only to meet the current expenses, but also to pay off indebtedness as soon as means can be secured. Those who have given their obligation to the college, either by note or otherwise, will confer a great favor by sending their money to the treasurer, Mr. Wm. Glasser, or Rev. F. Wetzel, Dakota, Illinois.

The standing committee on library and cabinet reported that the library was in a good condition and that a few valuable specimens of mineral were added to the cabinet during the year. The Board would respectfully request the friends of the college to remember the library and cabinet with gifts, so as to increase the library and cabinet.

The college year closed with appropriate exercises Thursday, June 25th, 1891, at 8 o'clock, P.M. The closing exercises were held in the college building, before a large and appreciative audience. The exercises consisted of essays, orations and debate by the students, and interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. The exercises evinced careful preparation upon the part of the students, and faithful instruction by the professors. Prof. H. L. Beam has been engaged for the ensuing year, and the Board feels quite hopeful.

President of the Board of Trustees.

CLASSIS OF ILLINOIS.

Classis met in Mt. Zion charge, May 20, 1891.

The sessions of the regular classical work were preceded by the Sunday-school Convention of the Classis.

Practical subjects were discussed with unusual interest, and we trust with encouraging results in the future.

The opening sermon was preached by the President of Classis, Rev. George P. Hartzell, on James 1: 18. The brother presented the subject matter suggested by the text with much force. The same may be said in reference to all the other sermons, as well as the discussions on the practical topics taken up in place of evening sermons.

Friday afternoon, from 2.30 to 3.30, was devoted to memorial services in memory of our departed brother, Rev. Daniel Lantz, D.D. The sermon on this occasion was preached by Rev. Joseph Sechler.

Friday evening was devoted to missions in charge of the Woman's Missionary Society of Classis. This service, while interesting in its general bearing, savored somewhat strongly of business and entertainment.

Rev. J. W. Alspach was received from Juniata Classis, Potomac Synod.

The pastoral relation between Rev. J. Wolbach and the Altamont charge was dissolved. The call from the Anna charge to the Rev. J. Wolbach was confirmed.

The call to Rev. J. W. Alspach from the Altamont charge was confirmed.

All the charges of Classis except the Astoria are again supplied.

We rejoice to note that on the whole Illinois Classis is a stronger body than any time before in its history.

The officers of Classis are—President, Rev. George P. Hartzell; treasurer, Rev. J. Sechler; corresponding secretary, Rev. D. N. Lantz, and Rev. Joshua Wolbach, stated clerk.

In addition to the usual routine business, the following special actions were taken:

For the election of delegates to District and General Synod, all officers of Classis and members of the several boards of Classis, the rule shall be the "plurality vote."

Pastors are instructed to send in their statistical reports to the President of Classis at least fifteen days before the annual meeting.

The pastor of the charge, where Classis meets, shall arrange for all the religious services during the meeting of Classis; give notice to parties expected to participate; and make the announcements to the congregation in advance of the meeting.

The pastors of the different charges are urged to secure a subscriber for the Missionary Guardian in every Reformed family.

The following was adopted in reference to the College of Northern Illinois:

Resolved, That we learn with much joy of the signs of improvement in this institution of the Classis of Illinois. It has grown in favor throughout the Classis and the church in general, both in its educational workings as also in its economical management of the institution.

Resolved, That we recognize in Rev. H. L. Beam, the president of the college, an able, devoted and popular educator.

We therefore regard the choice as wise and fortunate.

Resolved, That we the members of Classis of Illinois here place on record our high appreciation of the services rendered the college by Rev. Frank Wetzel as a teacher during the year without compensation.

Resolved, That Rev. O. G. Brocket, pastor of the U. P. church of Dakota, Illinois, has our sincere thanks for his kind co-operation with the Board of Trustees in helping to prepare the way for a better state of things in the institution at the opening of the year; and his continued interest, sympathy and encouragement.

The following recommendations in reference to Sabbath observance were adopted by Classis:

WHEREAS, There is a growing tendency among the worldly, and even among professed Christians, to disregard the command which teaches that the Sabbath day shall be kept holy; many using the day as a day of pleasure, others engaged in business plying their trade as a means of profit.

WHEREAS, There is an organized effort on the part of certain ones who do not regard the Christian Sunday as the proper day out of seven, on which to cease from labor, and to devote the time to rest and the worship of God, and the use of the means of grace, these, in union with others who spend every day in sinful pleasure, and who have no sense of obligation to God their Creator to keep His holy day, and,

WHEREAS, As we look forward to the year 1892 and 1893, when the great Columbian Exposition will be held in the city of Chicago, where the nations of the world will be represented, we may see a dark cloud looming up, which threatens to cast a shadow upon that season of international and joyous festivities, which is the cloud of unbelief in and irreverence for God and His holy day; since there are thousands of persons of the classes named, who are doing all in their power to influence the Commissioners of the Exposition to throw the doors of the Exposition open on Sunday, thus desecrating it, and inviting other nations to aid in the sin. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Classis of Illinois hereby protests against all Sunday visiting for pleasure and frolicking, buying and selling, and all other secular diversions.

Resolved, That we as earnestly oppose the anti-Sunday movement, whether engaged in or connived at by professing Christians or worldly and profane persons.

And we hereby warn our Reformed membership against this grievous sin.

Resolved, That we the ministers and elders of this Classis will use our influence in securing the signatures of all members in our charges to petition against an open Exposition on Sunday in Chicago in 1892 and 1893.

A new congregation was organized at Stonington, Ill. Classis confirmed the organization and made it a part of Mt. Zion charge.

Classis has 744 communicant members. For the usual benevolent objects 85 cents per member was apportioned. In addition 50 cents per member is to be raised for the College of Northern Illinois.

Classis will meet in its next annual session on the Wednesday before full moon in May, 1892, in the Reformed and Lutheran church in Dakota, Ill.

SEMINARY CONVENTION IN PITTSBURGH SYNOD.

The Seminary Conventions announced in the MESSENGER for the last week in June came off according to arrangements made beforehand. The first was held in the Plum Creek charge, in Armstrong Co., Pastor Rev. W. D. Lefever, and was participated in by the pastor and Revs. Wagoner, Hassler and Lady. Good audiences greeted the speakers both at Mt. Union and Salem, and the interest was presented to the people in a number of addresses. This was followed by a thorough canvas from house to house for subscriptions to the Seminary Fund. The people received the committee very kindly and supported the cause with their contributions. A moderately handsome sum was realized.

The other effort was made in the Emanuel's congregation, of which Rev. J. F. Sayder is pastor, an account of which was given last week.

Alumni of Franklin and Marshall College.

At the annual meeting of the Alumni Association of Franklin and Marshall College, held at Lancaster, Pa., June 17th, 1891, a committee was appointed to devise means to secure funds for the placing of a memorial of Rev. John W. Nevin, D.D., LL.D. (late President of F. and M. College), in the college building at Lancaster. At the evening session of the Association the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, "That the memorial be in the form of a portrait, an oil painting, and that the several district associations be urged to co-operate in raising funds in order to bring this memorial to a speedy completion."

The committee most earnestly request the hearty co-operation of every alumnus, in order that this memorial may be secured and, if possible, be unveiled during commencement week of the year 1892.

A first-class portrait, substantially framed, will cost about $400. An artist whose reputation will guarantee satisfactory results, will be secured.

The active assistance of the proper officers of the District Associations is requested.

CARLISLE CLASSIS.

The Classis of Carlisle met on Thursday evening, May 28th, 1891, in Christ Reformed church of Duncannon, Pa. Rev. Wm. R. H. Deatrick, of Newport, preached the opening sermon from John xx. 5: "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing."

The following were elected officers for the current classical year, viz., Rev. Silas L. Messinger, of Blain, president; Rev. Wm. I. Stewart, of Mechanicsburg, vice-president; Rev. A. B. Stoner, of Landisburg, corresponding secretary. Rev. J. David Miller is stated clerk and treasurer.

The parochial reports bear testimony of labor for the cause of the Master, the faithful preaching of the Word, the administration of the sacraments, the catechization of the young, the visitation of the sick, and the burial of the dead. They show that all have been faithful in the discharge of the high commission given by our Lord.

Rev. Dr. S. N. Callender was received from the Virginia Classis.

All the benevolent objects and institutions of the church received proper attention at the hands of Classis, and the interests of the Orphan Homes, the Society for the Relief Disabled Ministers and their Widows, and the publications of the church were specially commended to the prayers and support of the pastors and people.

The matter of the formation of a Women's Classical Missionary Society was committed into the hands of a special committee, of which Rev. Dr. A. H. Kremer is chairman, to report at the annual meeting in 1892.

The new Hymnal was placed into the hands of a committee, of which Rev. Wm. I. Stewart was chairman, who reported as follows: "Your committee, to whom was referred the consideration of the Reformed Church Hymnal, beg leave to report, that they have examined the work, and have found that from a churchly, devotional, literary, musical and mechanical standpoint, it is admirably adapted to the purpose for which it was designed, and that they heartily recommend its adoption by this Classis.

The following are the delegates elected to the Synod of the Potomac, meeting in Zion's Reformed church, Chambersburg, October 13th, 1891, viz.; Ministers—Primarii, Revs. Wm. R. H. Deatrick, Amos H. Kremer, D.D., Wm. I. Stewart, and Silas L. Messinger; secundi, Revs. Joseph W. Bell, Wm. H. Groh, Abraham B. Stoner, and J. David Miller. Elders—Primarii, George Hoobaugh, Peter D. Smith, Dr. E. A. Shulenberger, Moses Hess; secundi, Sylvester Bergstresser, G. Washington Hench, Wm. Rice, Joseph Diehl.

Rev. Dr. E. V. Gerhart preached in the German language and Rev. D. W. Gerhard followed with a short discourse in English. Dr. J. S. Stahr, chairman of the committee, conducted the installation service.

In the afternoon Rev. Dr. Stahr preached in the English language at Denver, Rev. D. W. Gerhard assisting in the services. This charge is ripe for earnest work. The large attendance and manifest interest on the part of the people at these special services give evidence of confidence in their new pastor, while the pastor on his side comes with considerable experience of successful work and with zeal for the cause. With God's blessing much good work can be accomplished in the Reamstown charge.

Martinsburg Charge.—Rev. J. W. Pontius. Children's Day was observed on the 5th inst., in the Martinsburg church. The weather was pleasant and the attendance good; the decorations simple and tasteful. An interesting address was delivered in a very pleasing manner by Homer S. May, a student in the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, Pa. In the evening the congregation observed the 115th anniversary of our Nation's natal day.

Berlin.—Rev. A. R. Kremer, D.D. At the communion services held on the 5th inst. at this place sixteen were confirmed and one was received by certificate. Deducting deaths and removals the congregation has gained twenty-one members during the five years of the present pastorate. The large debt upon the church is nearly wiped out.

Waynesboro.—Rev. Sefellen E. Stofflet. Sunday, July 5th, was the day set apart for the consecration of the new burying-ground, given to Harbaugh's congregation by Father George Harbaugh of G. (now deceased), and Nancy, his wife. A large audience had assembled to witness the ceremony. Father Harbaugh has given in all over an acre for burying purposes, as well as $500 towards rebuilding Harbaugh's church. His works do follow him.

Lancaster.—St. Paul's. Rev. J. W. Meminger preached the fourth anniversary sermon of his pastorate on Sunday morning. St. Paul's is now the largest congregation in Lancaster Classis. In the four years it has grown from 270 to 480 members, a gain of 210 over all losses by death and dismissal. The pastor's salary has been increased from one thousand to one thousand four hundred dollars per annum, with a handsome parsonage. The benevolent contributions for the present year have been nearly two thousand dollars, about $1200 contributed to the erection of Bomberger Memorial Hall. This congregation has two young men studying for the ministry and six young men students in Franklin and Marshall College, with a number to enter in the fall. The Sunday-school has nearly 500 scholars and the entire work of the church is in a healthy condition.

Shenandoah.—Rev. R. O'Boyle has accepted a call to this place and will remove to his new field of labor in a few weeks.

Glencoe.—Rev. A. C. Snyder has become pastor of the Wills Creek charge, Somerset county, Pa.

Myerstown.—Prof. E. L. Kemp, President-elect of Palatinate College, has removed to his new field of labor. His address is therefore Myerstown, Pa., instead of Wichita, Kans.

OHIO.

Akron.—Rev. E. R. Williard, late of Heidelberg University, Tiffin, O., entered upon his pastorate of Grace church, Akron, Ohio, on Sunday, the 5th inst. His introductory sermon was from the text 2 Cor. xii. 14, "I seek not yours, but you." Rev. Williard enters upon his work with unusual encouragements and bright prospects of success.

VIRGINIA.

Lovettsville.—Ordination and Installation Service. On Sunday, July 5th, 1891, Licentiate Thomas K. Cromer was ordained into the Gospel ministry, and installed as pastor of the Reformed church at Lovettsville, Loudon county, Va. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. J. A. Hoffheins, of Martinsburg. The office of installation was performed by Rev. George G. Everhart, of Shepherdstown, W. Va. The church was filled to its full capacity by an interested and attentive audience. After the services were concluded the audience was presented with several short addresses in the interest of the indebtedness of Mercersburg College. G. G. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Aug. W. Bomberger, Esq., son of the late Dr. Bomberger, has become editor of the Daily Times of Norristown, Pa. He is a graduate of Ursinus College, a practising attorney of the Philadelphia bar, and has had some experience as a writer for the press. A career of promise is before him and there is every reason to believe that he will fill his new position with signal ability and success.

The Mercer Memorial House for Invalid Women, Atlantic City, is doing a larger and more efficient work than ever before in helping invalid women by its beneficent ministrations to better health and strength. It is a house that becomes to each inmate a happy, restful, helpful home. Each room and ward is now full, and there are daily new applicants for admission, who will be accommodated as fast as rooms are vacated. Four thousand dollars more is required for this season's work. Will you not help by your contribution the many needy, suffering women who can be helped? Thursday, July 16, has been set apart as Donation Day. Contributions will be gratefully received at any time, and can be sent to the house, Pacific and Ohio avenues, Atlantic City, or to the Treasurer, Mr. Frank K. Hipple, 1340 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, or to any of the Managers. Visitors welcome from 11 to 12 A.M. and 3 to 6 P.M., every day except Sunday.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were passed at the last meeting of the Trustees of Clarion Collegiate Institute.

In accepting the resignation of Rev. W. W. Deatrick as Principal of Clarion Collegiate Institute, we record the following statement of facts.

1. That Professor Deatrick has won our highest esteem by his untiring and unselfish devotion to the educational work of the Church in our midst.

2. That under the able management of Brother Deatrick Clarion Collegiate Institute has enjoyed a prosperity unexcelled in its history, and was deserving of a more general recognition by the Church.

3. That we recognize in Professor Deatrick a man of sterling qualities and scholarly attainments, earnest and devoted to the cause of Christ in the Reformed Church.

4. That we sever a relation that has been uniformly pleasant and productive of great good to this school of the Church.

5. That we follow our brother to his new field of labor with our prayers for his continued success.

WILLIAMSON CHURCH FUND.

Williamson is a small town located on the South Pennsylvania branch of the Cumberland Valley R. R. A few years ago a Reformed congregation was organized which now numbers twenty-two members, with fair prospects of growth, since there is no other church in the place, except one of the Dunkard persuasion. The congregation has ventured the project of erecting a house of worship. The membership, interested and zealous in the cause, is financially too weak for the undertaking. Of the twenty-two members there are only five males who are heads of families. All these are mechanics and laborers who must depend upon their occupations for the support of their families, and have little to spare. They are willing to do all they can towards the building of a church, but must, to some extent, depend upon the good will and liberality of their brethren and friends.

Of those to whom a personal appeal has been made for help in the work of the Lord, the following have kindly responded: Revs. J. Hassler, J. M. Motter, S. E. Stofflet, F. F. Bahner, J. B. Shontz, A. R. Bartholomew, S. R. Bridenbaugh, W. W. Clowser, J. F. DeLong. D. S. Dieffenbacher, D. N. Dittmar, C. S. Gerhard, D.D., A. J. Heller, T. F. Hoffmeier, A. Houtz, W. F. Lichliter, A. M. Masonheimer, A. Noll, Lewis Robb, N. C. Schaffer, Ph.D., W. C. Schaffer, Ph.D., D. E. Schoedler, J. H. Sechler, N. Z. Snyder, L. D. Steckle, T. O. Stem, S. C. Stover, A. C. Whitmer, D. M. Wolf, D.D., and Dr. J. F. Alexander, Col. D. S. Keller, Noah Corman and A. R. Bumiller, each contributing 50 cents, except two, who gave 25 cents; Revs. W. C. Cremer and H. K. Binkley, W. B. Mingle, Esq., A. R. Schnebly and the E. E. Reformed Missionary Society, Hazleton, Pa., each $1; Mr. Samuel Haeflich, $2; Rev. G. B. Russell, D.D., $3; Mrs. Jennie Omer, $5, and Rev. J. G. Dengler pledges $20.

We are sincerely thankful for these contributions and hope soon to be able to acknowledge many more. Forward them to

HOW A TOURIST MAKES MONEY.

DEAR READERS:—While visiting places of interest, I spend my leisure time plating table-ware and jewelry and selling platers. I make from $5 to $15 per day. The work is done so nicely that every person wants it. I paid $5 for my plater to H. C. Delano & Co., Columbus, O. Why not have a good time and money in your pocket, when for $5 you can start a business of your own. Write above firm for circulars.

Should be provided with Ayer's Pills. No other aperient is in such general demand or so highly recommended by the profession. Mild but thorough in operation, these pills are the best of all remedies for constipation, biliousness, heartburn, indigestion, flatulency, loss of appetite, liver complaint, and sick headache. They break up colds, fevers, and malaria, relieve rheumatism and neuralgia, and are indispensable to travelers, either by land or sea. Sugar-coated and compounded of the purest vegetable cathartics, they may be taken with impunity by old and young. Physicians recommend these pills in preference to any other. H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark., says: "In 1853, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."

We are very thankful for the above contributions, and assure all the givers that their gifts are well invested for the Lord.

We shall (D. V.) get into our Sunday school room in a few weeks. The furnishing of the auditorium must necessarily be deferred. Had we received the amount needed and asked for in our appeal of July 7th, 1890, we would likely be able to dedicate now without much debt, but we received less than one-third of that amount. But we do not complain. If God had intended that we should have more, He would have given it to us. We are truly thankful for what He has sent us. To Him be glory forever and ever.

Very gratefully,
AARON NOLL, Pastor.

Editorial Notes.

—We call attention to the letter from Missionary Hoy to be found in this issue. It treats of a matter that challenges the interest of all Christians and should lead them to lay upon the altar of God offerings, even to great personal sacrifice, in order that the Gospel may be sent to people that are guilty of such acts as he makes known.

—Rev. Love informs us elsewhere that Wichita University will be regularly opened this Fall and he also makes a strong appeal in its behalf. Who can gainsay what he says of the needs of the Church in the West? It is to be hoped that it and all like efforts to advance the interests of our Church will receive the attention of the wealthy and liberal.

—Reforms, social and political, are at present earnestly advocated and vigorously prosecuted. They may be urged upon and effected among the men and women of the land. The intelligent and the far-seeing may be made to see their necessity would our country and its citizens be what they should be, pure and godly. Strong appeals to their intelligence and vivid pictures of the future should vice and crime go on unchecked, presented to them will lead them to take a hand in the work of putting down all that is of sin and will lead to death. But there is a field for operation farther back than this. It is with the children of the land. With them much more may be accomplished. It is in the home that it is to be done. Here indeed the foundation must be laid, and by example and precept the young be led to walk in right paths, and thus be fortified against temptation and made proof against sin and its allurements. Rarely do the feet of those reared in Christian homes go astray, and such are more likely to become good citizens, godly men, and be of those who will exert themselves to put down sin and check vice and immorality.

—Of late there has been quite a desire on the part of a number of persons to gather complete setts of the Review, and there is a consequent search and a demand for the early volumes, which are scarce. Our Publication House is able at times to secure odd volumes and has lately received some which it will dispose of at reasonable rates. If those wishing odd volumes with which to complete their setts will inform us what particular ones they need yet, we will gladly let them know what we can do for them.

—This revival of interest in the time-honored Review is pleasing. A full sett is a valuable addition to the library shelves, and every pastor would have good reason to consider himself well off if he had one in his library. If there are still any who would like to possess full setts already bound, our House is aware where several can be had of ministers who have retired from active work and would be glad if they were in the hands of others to whom they would be of value and benefit. Any information in regard to them will be cheerfully given.

—With this revival of interest in the Review of old, it would be gratifying to its present editors and publisher if there were an increased interest in it and its circulation increased even to finding its way into the hands of every pastor and intelligent layman within the bounds of the Church. And why should it not be? What can be said against it? Every quarter its pages are filled with able and interesting articles from the pen of the leading writers of our own Church and some of those of sister Churches. In ability and variety its articles compare well with those to be found in any other Review. But for some reason or other the issue each quarter is small, reflecting indeed no credit upon us as a denomination, if our interest in the discussion of subjects that claim the thought of men of to-day, is to be judged by its circulation. Does this lack of seeming appreciation in the Review arise from a want of confidence in the ability of our leading men as writers and that those of others not of us are so much better than ours? If so, surely great injustice is done them, and those who think so do a great wrong to their Church, to which they should be loyal in all things, and at the same time manifest a wrong spirit when they thus attempt to disparage the abilities of those who are their brethren. No, the reverse should be the case. The Review should be well supported and regarded as a credit to the Church and the reading of it prove of untold value to its subscribers. This will indeed encourage its editors and publisher to make it even better than it is. Can there not be a rallying all over the Church in its behalf? If further improvements can be made in it, we are sure the editors and publisher will be glad to receive any suggestions in that direction.

—Last week we spoke of the lack of support on the part of the Church to the Missionary Guardian and the fears that if the list of subscribers is not soon greatly increased it would be necessary to double its subscription price or discontinue its publication. Above we speak of the want of a proper support to the Review. If neither of these publications were issued there would be a cry all over the Church for just such and it would be insisted that there was a universal demand for them. Such was the intimation when it was resolved to begin the publication of a magazine to be devoted entirely to the cause of Missions. The promise was that the subscribers would, in a short time, number far up in the thousands. Where are they? And it was the want of support to the Guardian, which, for forty-one years had been published as a magazine for the youth of the Church, that led to its discontinuance and its name given the new missionary magazine. Some have since deplored its discontinuance and wondered why it was so determined. In the Church there were thousands of young people, but not two thousand of them were its readers, and the publisher could not be expected to publish it at a loss to him, and in consequence the Board of Publication. with him, regarded its mission at an end. The Publishing Company at Dayton, O., some years ago, began the publication of a literary magazine for circulation amongst the people of the Church. A year or more of experiment in that line, was sufficient to prove to them that such a periodical was not wanted, and its publication was, perhaps, after a loss to them, discontinued. These failures have satisfied the publishers of the Church that periodicals of such a character are not wanted, and if the venture is made to test it, those making it have a loss to bear for their trouble and pains.

—We are led to note the above upon our being informed that there is contemplated the publication of a journal to be devoted to the interests of the women of the Reformed Church. In the light of the above there is but little to encourage such an undertaking. Besides this, we are candid enough to say, we doubt the expediency of it, and this for reasons other than the above The plea that such publications will help the others, or the causes they represent, is a fallacy; the contrary is the case. Their effect verily is to detract, because of their cheapness and sympathy excited in their behalf, from those already established and lessen their usefulness. Rather, let there be a less number of periodicals and they receive a patronage worthy of them, and the different causes before the Church be presented in them and thus they will reach the largest number possible. We would not wish to put any impediment in the way of the progress of the women in the Church; rather, we would do all within our power to help them forward in the work they have undertaken for the Church. In proof of this the columns of the MESSENGER and the pages of the Missionary Guardian have always been open to them and they still will be.

—Dr. Lewis H. Steiner, Librarian of Enoch Pratt Free Library, Baltimore city, in a letter to Enoch Pratt, Esq., the generous founder of the same, gave a report of the number of volumes contained in the Central Library and its five branches. The Central now contains 64,293 volumes; Branch No 1, 7,922; Branch No. 2, 7,338; Branch No. 3, 6,510; Branch No. 4, 6,503; Branch No. 5, 7,698. Total; 100,364 volumes. In the six and a half years since the Library was opened 2,400,000 volumes have been loaned and $140,000 expended upon it. Dr. Steiner congratulated Mr. Pratt upon the success of the library and that he is able to look upon the result of his great gift whilst he is in possession of sturdy health. Every one who may enjoy the benefits of the library will also unite with Dr. Steiner in wishing its founder many more years of life and that he may witness the gradual increase of books upon its shelves. And it must be admitted that much credit is due Dr. Steiner and his assistants for the success of the library and its splendid condition, and the admirable manner in which the purposes of the founder are carried out.

Poetry.

"OTHER SHEEP I HAVE."

(John 10: 16.)

Hark! 'Tis the Lord who calls;
Saved one, He speaks to thee:
I shed My precious blood
That thou might'st rescued be;
And now rejoicing in My love,
Thou'rt journeying to the home above.

But "other sheep I have,"
Who're wandering from the fold;
And how to enter in
They never have been told;
Oh, canst thou leave them still to roam?
Wilt thou not seek to lead them home?

Thonsands of precious souls,
In regions far away,
For want of what thou hast
Are dying day by day.
Wilt thou not take the Living Bread,
And let these starving ones be fed?

'Neath Satan's galling yoke
They struggle all in vain;
Oh! must they still in sin
And ignorance remain?
Canst thou their silent plea withstand
And not stretch out thy helping hand?

Think, think what it would be
If thou wert in their place,
With none at hand to care
Or undertake thy case.
What if without one pitying eye
Thy soul had thus been left to die!

What if thou ne'er hadst known
Of My redeeming love,
And so no peace were thine.
Nor hope of joys above!
Oh, think of what thou owest Me;
Then surely thou "constrained" wilt be.

My Saviour and my Lord,
Before Thy feet I fall;
Unworthy is the gift,
But oh, accept my all.
Send me wherever Thou dost choose,
And deign Thyself my life to use.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

SOME OF OUR WANTS.

The Reformed Church needs more ministers. That is, it needs an increase of ministers above all losses by retirement and death. The best evidence of the correctness of this statement appears in the fact that all the candidates who leave as graduates our various theological seminaries every spring almost immediately find fields of labor ready to hand for them. It is to be borne in mind also that nearly all these young men become at once pastors of regular charges, which are vacant and waiting; few of them are left for mission work in the full sense of the term. We do not say this in the way of blame. It is simply the result of a condition in the Church. Existing charges must be supplied first, and nearly as many of them become vacant annually as we have students leaving our seminaries to supply them.

We need a ministry that is thoroughly Reformed. It is idle to talk of having a denominational spirit and interest in the membership of a congregation if its pastor is theologically at loose ends. Sooner or later the one or the other must give way. Either the pastor must leave or the congregation becomes gradually diluted after the manner of its pastor. In seeking to increase the number of our ministers, it is important, therefore, that the addition be of the right kind. Let us have in large numbers the sons of our own old families. Let them feel a special call upon themselves in this matter. Whose duty soever else it may be to fill the ranks of our ministry, it is their duty paramount. An Episcopal ministry, it seems, can be recruited from anywhere, the only essential point of coherence being the historic episcopate; but the Reformed ministry must be substantially recruited from Reformed stock, or from elements that have become in life and spirit one with that stock. This unity in the ministry is essential on its own account; it is also essential, no less, on account of the general membership. For the membership of a denomination to be harmonious and efficient there must be unity in its faith and life. No dead uniformity, but none the less a felt oneness, not only in name, but also in substantial character.

Let our young men bear in mind that they are wanted in large numbers—in numbers far larger than ever before—in the ministry of the Reformed Church. However, let them also bear in mind that they are wanted for the purpose of being Reformed ministers in the honest sense of that word, and that the call has that, simply that and all that in view. The man who thinks he can fill a bigger bill than that is apt to be mistaken, both as respects himself and his call.

Our mission work is hindered by our lack of men to send as missionaries. Too few are left after the vacant charges clamoring for pastors are provided for. Our missions seek men rather than our men seek missions. As it now is we can only take up a few new missions each year, and these in leading towns and cities. For the country proper we can do very little. In consequence, too, our missions are relatively very expensive. We have next to none of the cheaper sort. As we have but few men to spare for the the work, our Boards must put them where their work will count for the most, and that is in growing towns and cities. The kind of missions on which the Reformed Church in this country was originally founded and built up to fair proportions, is in danger of disappearing. It should not. What we do we ought to do, and not leave the other undone. We must go to the towns and cities, for our people go there, but we should by all means also take care of the country sections In that line there is much land to be possessed. Our people, too, are largely an agricultural people. They are sure to be well represented in the country and in the country village. The possibilities for the Reformed Church in that direction are great as we know, and how much greater would they appear, if we explored them once properly? We are inclined to think that these possibilities are just as great relatively today, as they ever have been in our history. This work is not expensive, and it never was, when rightly managed. A pastor can for a time extend his service over a whole country, in those sections where his people live. That is the way the fathers did. It is to be hoped that our generation has not lost the sense nor the devotion for that kind of work. But to do it we must have more ministers.

PROF. J. C. BOWMAN'S INAUGURAL.

BY C. S. GERHARD, D. D.

We have seldom read an address with such pleasure and satisfaction as Prof. Bowman's Inaugural on The Interpretation of Scripture Progressive. It is a well digested, compact and suggestive paper. There are no digressions or episodes, but a continuous and beautiful elaboration of a most fascinating subject. The address is thoroughly progressive and yet at the same time properly conservative. The author fully understands and appreciates the importance of the problem which he discusses, and is well aware of the relation which it sustains to the great questions: What is the Bible? How was it produced? What does it claim for itself? Is it inerrant? In what sense is it inspired, and in what sense is it not inspired? How can we get the most good out of it?

All these questions are touched upon in a perfectly honest and fearless manner, without any display of learning, but with that profound sense of the correctness of the positions assumed which grows out of a thorough mastery of the subject. The author knows whereof he affirms, and is strong in the conviction that he is in full sympathy with the gradually unfolding truth as it is in Jesus. He believes in historical development, and clearly sees that "evolution" has an important lesson to teach in reference to God's method of creation, and His presence in the world, including human life, with all its varied intellectual and spiritual activities.

We take exception to but one statement in the entire address. If we understand the Professor correctly, he believes that "the course of divine teaching reaches its highest stage" in the Epistles of the New Testament. From this view we dissent and maintain that the Gospels are fundamental and originative to a greater degree than the Epistles. Jesus spake as man never spake. The sweep of His spiritual vision was wider, and His spiritual intuitions were more profound than those of any prophet or apostle. His words and deeds are, therefore, in a unique sense, world-wide in their significance, and epoch-making in their character. It is this fact which gives the Gospels their priority.

In taking up the excellencies of the address we desire to call attention first of all to what is said of revelation as this comes to view in the Old and New Testaments. The author shows that it means nothing less than "the self-impartation and self-disclosure of God. Man, being created in the image of God and for God, is capable of receiving God's self communications. But they cannot be abstractly conveyed. Revelation involves a concrete process. It must have a history, and is real only as it is inwrought into the mind and heart—into the very life of man. "God's truth," he tells us, "can become man's truth only as the contents of revelation become the contents of human consciousness. And to the fundamental laws of human consciousness belongs the necessity for growth and a long educative process, such as is exhibited in the history of revelation. Neither the individual, nor the race could receive all the truth at once, nor any one truth in all its relations."

Consistently applying this admirable conception of what revelation itself is to the interpretation of the Scriptures he shows why our apprehension of the truths of divine revelation must necessarily also be gradual and progressive. The first Christians found in the Bible what they needed for the advancement of their spiritual life. Since that time the Church and the world have made immense progress. New questions have constantly arisen and have pressed for solution. Have the Scriptures been able to meet and answer these questions as they are related to the kingdom of heaven? Yes. But only in the degree in which it has been remembered that whilst the Bible itself is living, abiding and unchangeable, the interpretations put upon its teachings must be from time to time corrected and enlarged.

This fact is clearly recognized and stated as follows: "Interpretations which are fitting for one age are not in all instances suited to the requirements of a later age. Not that they are false, but that they are inadequate to the increased aptitude and enlarged vision to which the Church has attained. . . . 'Even the tenth century, with all its darkness, must be considered in advance of the third.' . . . . As to the Reformation itself, it was not a goal, but a movement, as generally and properly designated. . . . Any method of interpretation which is bound by the letter, or by a doctrinal system of a given age, does violence to the nature of truth. Limitation is involved in all interpretation. . . . . Hermeneutics must follow along the course of truth as historically unfolded, the solutions of one age serving as the bases for the more comprehensive solutions of a later period, keeping pace with the Christian Church as she advances, not into new truths, but into larger truth, as disclosed by the Holy Spirit."

Of the much discussed, much misunderstood, and much abused subject of Biblical Criticism, he says among other good things: "Higher Criticism has come to exercise such a wide influence over the thought of the age, that many are led to entertain misgivings and fears as to what they regard as novel theories and unwonted conclusions. It is well to be jealously watchful of the Old Faith while it is being tested by the critical methods which are now so generally employed in the study of Sacred Scripture. At the same time, however, we need to assume such an attitude toward the newer order of thought as to kindly welcome whatever of truth it may bring to us, even though it should compel modification and reconstruction, if not abandonment, of some long cherished opinions. . . . Destructive Criticism may sweep away some of the traditional beliefs concerning the Bible, and disprove claims which the spiritually enlightened reason rejects, but the promise of the Lord will remain unimpaired; not a jot or tittle of the Word of God shall ever pass unfulfilled."

We regard this address as an important and timely contribution to the literature of the Reformed Church. It well deserves to be read and studied, not only by the ministry, but also by our intelligent laity. It will answer many of the questions which are rising in men's minds everywhere, and will do much to inspire full confidence in the brother, who, in the providence of God, has been called upon to occupy the chair of the new professorship. Of a man who enters upon his work, with the ideas and convictions of this inaugural, of the dangers, the importance and the privileges of his position, one need have no fears that he will fill the minds of our students with the seeds of a subtle and destructive rationalism on the one hand, or that he will harass them with the shackles of a dead orthodoxy on the other. Combining as he does, in a high degree, the enthusiasm of youth with profound and advanced scholarship, we bespeak for Professor Bowman a useful and happy career as Professor of New Testament Exegesis in the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, Pa.

DOES GOD PERMIT PUNISHMENT?

This is the age of progression in theological thought. Dr. Briggs is not the only man who is making a stir in the world. Trials for heresy are of frequent occurrence. But there is little harm done for truth is ever the same and will assert itself.

It seems that many ministers of the present day think it necessary to advance something new in order to be regarded as "scholarly" and "leaders of advanced thought." To such ministers the subjects of Eternal Punishment, Intermediate State, Literal Interpretation of the Bible, and the efficacy of prayer furnish fascinating fields for the display of their biblical, philosophical, and linguistical talents. Now it must be admitted that full and free discussion can do no harm so long as the object is the discovery of truth. But, we all agree that no opinions should be promulgated which tend to lower the estimation in which the Christian laity hold God and His attributes. Such an effect we believe is produced by some of the teachings of modern theology.

For instance, there is the theory held and taught by many, that God limits His knowledge in some directions and even to the extent that He does nor know who will be saved and who will be lost. If this be true then of necessity some things will turn out eventually in the nature of a surprise to Him who is the Creator of all things. Then there is the doctrine so popular with some that God permits punishment to fall upon men, implying that He does not inflict it. In fact a minister remarked a few days ago that God permits good things to come to the obedient, whereas the whole tenor of the Bible is that "his divine power hath given unto us all things." All such conceptions of deity are apt to convey the idea of a being that is inactive and passive. We are told that these and similar ideas are the results of the "higher criticism." Maybe so; the writer is a layman, and as such must confess that he knows little about the established rules of biblical criticism—he simply reserves the right of every Protestant to read and to think about the Bible, he believes in progression, he believes in Biblical Science as such; but he and thousands of other laymen are forced to the conclusion that there is something about this "higher criticism"—something weird and shadowy like transcendental philosophy—that forms a specious contrivance to cover bad theology.

Some theologians would have us believe that God is passive and negative, like Baal or Buddha, but the Bible does not so represent him. On this subject of permitting, biblical language is rather emphatic. Ezek. xx: 33 says, "With fury poured out, will I rule over you." This [illegible] mere permission. Isaiah xiii: 11 says, "I will punish the world for their evil and the wicked for their iniquity." This sounds very much like executive authority. A hundred similar texts might be collated from the Bible. My theological friend says that these texts must be interpreted in the light of the New Testament. Yes, we agree with St. Ambrose when he says: "Vetus Testamentum in novo patet." Here, however, the language is more decided. 2 Thess. i. 7-8, says: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God." Matt. xvi. 27, reads thus: "The Son of man shall reward every man according to his works." But strongest of all is Rom. ii. 5, ". . . treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render unto every man according to his deeds: to them that do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath."

It is argued by some that we cannot love a Being who will thus avenge Himself upon the wicked. Why not? we like that form of government best, not which only permits its evil doers to get into trouble, but which positively punishes them. We love the law none the less because of the sure penalties which the executive thereof inflicts. We love God none the less because He is a consuming fire, for back of all is the supreme principle of love. We admire nature and poets delight to sing about it, but the Storm King rules sometimes.

FOR SUMMER READING.

In his address, "The Interpretation of Scripture Progressive," Professor Bowman says: "When we come to study the records of revelation, we find that all earthly and merely human helps are of but secondary value. Hebrew and Greek scholarship, the knowledge of civil and social conditions, of geography and history,—these are of service only as held in subserviency to a mind which is in loving sympathy with the personal truth, a mind illuminated by the Spirit of Christ. . . . The Holy Ghost was sent to be the constant Guide and Inspirer of believers, that thus He might ever take the things of Christ and show them unto men." These truths are of wide application and may be seen operative in different directions from that of the subject of the lecture. The Holy Spirit takes of the things of Christ and applies them with saving power to the heart of man at times, in a way which to the superficial observer might seem to be at utter variance with all reason and knowledge. The Scriptures are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, and are given to elevate and make man wise unto salvation.

The ignorant man may get a blessing from them which the scholar loses, simply because the spiritual faculties of the first may be quick while those of the second may be asleep or dead.

A man once came to Mr. Beecher to thank him for being the instrument under God of leading him to Christ. He then reminded Mr. Beecher of a sermon which he had preached at a certain service, and quoted from it a truth which the preacher had uttered and which had laid hold of his conscience and had driven him to the Lord.

Mr. Beecher remembered the sermon well, but the particular truth he had not uttered, nor did he use the expression which had so fastened itself upon the man's mind. Here was one whose spiritual faculties were alive, and who had received in a certain sense more than the preacher had given him. It was doubtless the truth in the discourse which had reached him, so that while he had lost the order and thought of the sermon, and would be a poor witness as to what the preacher said, he had partaken of its power and was a living witness of the fact that the Gospel can turn men from darkness to light.

A Dunkard preacher, who may have been proud of his lack of scholarship, and rejoiced that he had not been taught in the "cemeteries," thought that Christ was born in Bethlehem, Pa., and that His father Joseph had been sold by His brothers and carried to Egypt. What idea of the location of Egypt he had we know not, nor do we know if he ever made a pilgrimage to Bethlehem to inquire as to where Jesus was born, as did the wise men from the East. But, after all, this man in his ignorance was like a child, and children can love the Lord. Deep down in his heart was an ardent love for the personal Christ, and he had grasped the truth of Scripture as to the living Lord far better than do those lights among the learned who will know nothing of an Historic Christ, nor believe that the Son of God has come in the flesh. The Spirit took of the righteousness, the atonement, the grace of Christ and showed them unto him to the salvation of his soul, and to the begetting of a lively hope.

Another simple minded preacher, a Dunkard also, describing the birth of Christ in a stable with the beasts of the stall standing near, with tears in his eyes burst out in the pathetic exclamation, "Oh my brethering what would have become of us if those cattle had eaten Jesus!" When I first heard this story I laughed. But many and many a time since have I pondered over it, as the utterance of simplicity, and asked myself whether, after all, the humble man had not made one feel more deeply than before the awful calamity which would have befallen this world and our race, had the powers of darkness overcome the Lord's anointed. The lowly preacher stood "in loving sympathy with the Personal Truth," and his "mind was illumined by the Spirit of Christ" who taught him, not the difference between an herbivorous and a carnivorous animal, but the utter destruction to the race, had any worldly power stopped by fell force the onmoving development of that glorious life until the moment when its possessor was ready to lay it down of Himself, that He might take it again.

More than once have I blushed to myself as I remembered some of my blunders, when forced into the office of Sunday-school teacher, I endeavored to unfold to youthful minds the truth of God's word. But standing recently by the coffin of one of these former pupils, it was pleasant to remember that in more than one instance that word, feebly and ignorantly spoken, had touched in a helpful way the life of the man now cold in death, and when I left the chamber of death I was forced to ask myself whether some of that youthful love for a Personal Saviour which led me to pray for my pupils and to guard my actions and words in their presence, had not been absorbed by the desire to be wise in sacred things as the world calls wisdom.

No man can limit—nor can man understand—the power of God's word when held in "love for the Personal Truth." Like Christ Himself that Word is a mystery. Never against, it goes beyond reason. Welcome as we may all the helps of scholarly criticism and research, we know there is something here beyond the reach of criticism. While we dare not put a premium upon ignorance and close our eyes to truths which criticism proclaims, yet we feel as we do towards the sun. Old Sol! our fathers never knew that there were spots upon thy gleaming surface. It took the age of the telescope and the knowledge of later years to reveal them. But thou hast ever been the sun, and thou art the sun to-day spots or no [illegible] for us may lie within those spots! And thou my Bible art the same old Bible that my fathers loved and revived! With Professor Bowman we say after all the work of the critics, and notwithstanding the marked variations in doctrinal belief, and the changing methods of interpretation, the Bible remains essentially the same through the ages—"the great, sublime, enduring work of the Eternal, who loves righteousness and hates iniquity." The Bible is thus a living power. Of this we hope to give an example in our next. E. N. K.

KANSAS CLASSIS.

Kansas Classis met in annual session in Bethany Reformed church, Hiawatha, Kansas, on Thursday, May 21, 1891.

The opening sermon, by request of the retiring President, Rev. A. G. Lohman, pastor loci, was preached by Rev. C. A. Santee, from 1 Peter, 3 : 15.

The following officers were elected : Rev. A. Bolliger, President ; Rev. A. S. Dechant, Corresponding Secretary ; Rev. C. A. Santee, Stated Clerk and Treasurer.

The pastoral relation between Rev. A. L. Lohman and the Hiawatha charge was dissolved. —Rev. Lohman was dismissed to Nebraska Classis, Synod of the Northwest.

Rev. G. W. Remagen was received from East Pennsylvania Classis. A call from Fairview charge was confirmed and a committee appointed to install him.

The new Hymnal was unanimously adopted.

Pastors and delegates were requested to make earnest efforts to increase the circulation of the Missionary Guardian.

The subject of missions received careful attention. This is a question of deep interest, as the Classis is a missionary Classis.

The new congregation at Scotia, Kansas, organized during the year by D. A. Shuey, Supt. of Missions, was received and enrolled.

A new feature of the session was the "Church Work Convention" on Friday evening. The following questions were discussed :

1) "The Reformed Church—her Political Doctrine and Her Worship." Rev. A. S. Dechant.

2) "The Officers of the Reformed Church. What they Do and What they Ought to Do." Rev. A. Bolliger.

3) "The Place and Use of Religious Literature." Rev. G. W. Remagen.

4) "The Work of Laymen in the West." Elder Fred Zimmerman.

The Classical Sunday-school Convention was opened on Wednesday evening with a sermon by Rev. A. S. Dechant. Rain interfered with the exercises on Thursday morning. In the afternoon the following subjects were discussed :

"The Pastor in the Sunday-school." Rev. A. G. Lohman.

"How to Keep the Boys and Girls in the Sunday-school." Mrs. M. Holbein.

Classis adjourned to meet in next annual session at Enterprise, Kansas, on a date to be selected by the officers of Classis.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The principal part of the musical program for Bethany Day, (Aug. 27) will be under the direction of Rev. Stanley L. Krebs of Reading and C. H. Coan of Philadelphia. To simply mention the names of these two well-known brethren in this connection will be sufficient to assure our friends of a rich treat on that day.

Contributions to the collection of fancy work, to be sold on Anniversary day, Aug. 27th, are steadily coming in from various parts. We have no doubt when all the different articles are properly arranged, the bazaar will present a very attractive appearance. It will be remembered that this work is under the direction of the matron and our larger girls. If there are any persons who wish to send articles to be sold on that day, please send them in time. As stated before, this society already has over $100 in its treasury, and it is confidently expected that the amount will be largely increased this year. The money is to be used towards furnishing the new building.

Blackberries and huckleberries are now in season. Every day a number of the boys go out on the mountain and return with cans full of berries. These are either used with milk for supper or prepared for winter use. This year the apple crop will be abundant. Being on the north side of the mountain we are always a little later with our garden vegetables than our neighbors in the valley but we generally make up for that in quality later in the season.

We still hope to have the new building under roof and the first floor laid by the time of the Anniversary. We would like to use the new kitchen and dining-room on that occasion. The boys are busy at present picking and hauling stones for the cement floors in the basement.

Our chickens seem to have become possessed with the idea that vacation means vacation all around. Eggs are very scarce.

An item which appeared in this column some time ago apparently misled some of our good friends. The statement was made that we did not propose to make a general appeal to the Church for contributions for the new building. A friend wrote, "I have a check for $250, for the new building, do you want it or don't you need it?" Why, bless your heart, yes, that is just what we do want. On account of the many pressing appeals before the Church and on account of our own needs for support we refrain from making a general appeal but we want, yes we need, just such assistance as that indicated above. In a quiet way we hope the friends of the Home will send checks for the building fund, a list of which will be published when the building is finished. What a glorious thing it would be if we could eat our Christmas dinner in the new dining-room with the house entirely paid for. Address our Treasurer, Mr. C. G. Gross, 3716 Haverford Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

A writer in the Kirchenzeitung explains the envelope system and urges its adoption throughout the Church as a means of enlarging the giving of our people ; and the writer gives in detail the experience of Rev. J. B. Thompson, of the Reformed Church in America, showing how successfully the plan works, largely because it is by divine direction. (1 Cor. 16 : 2).

There can be no doubt that such systematic getting could readily be introduced into very many of our congregations, if the Consistory would make the effort. Our people, as a rule, are reasonable, and will follow any good plan wisely proposed.

Let us see what could be done by a congregation of 200 communicant members, on the plan of weekly offerings for benevolence :

100 giving 2 cents a week,		1.56	$104
50 " 5 " " "		2.60	130
50 " 10 " " "		10.40	260
200 persons in a year give			$494

This averages less than 5 cents a week and is within the financial reach of the average congregation throughout the Church. If only our officers could be brought to the effort! If only our pastors would aim at it! What a change would follow! Just this kind of weekly giving is the secret of financial success in all the many orders and associations of the land. It is business-like.

MISSIONS.

The Executive Committee of the Board met at Pittsburgh, Pa., on Tuesday evening, July 7th, all the members being present. Reports were considered from all the missionaries excepting four. These were reminded of their neglect and as soon as their reports are received, orders will be granted for their quarterage. There are some who seem to think very hard of the Board from the fact that it has made it a rule not to issue orders for pay until the reports are received. But why should this Executive Committee meet at all if it is not to inquire whether the men in its employ have done their duty—and pray, how can it tell unless these men send in their reports? There is no reason for such meetings unless the reports are at hand—and it is certainly as little as these men can expect that they should make out quarterly, a faithful report of their work. This requirement of the Board is simply a matter of business and should be insisted upon. The missions generally were found to be in good condition. Every mission is now supplied with a pastor, and a good corps of workers they seem to be. Every thing is encouraging in the mission field. That was the general sentiment of the members present. A number of the missions are engaged during the summer in the purchasing of lots and the erection of chapels. At the last meeting of the Board there was lacking quite a sum of money to pay the missionaries. It was found at this meeting that this deficiency had been reduced something like $500. But there is a deficiency at this time of something like $600. Some may ask, why this deficiency? Has the Board not gone beyond the safe line in taking up missions? Not at all. This deficiency has occurred solely from the fact that the Church failed to send in funds sufficient to pay the Hungarian and harbor missions up to the time when the new appropriations will come in. The Board took funds that rightfully belonged to its own missions in order to sustain these two missions that belong to and should be supported by the whole Church. Hence the deficiency. Now, then, this deficiency must be made up. No matter, now, how much we may say that the whole Church should have come to the support of these two missions. The fact is she did not, hence the following

"APPEAL."

We will, about the time this appears in print [illegible] day-schools and missionary societies—to send in a contribution in order to wipe out this deficiency within the next three months. If each charge sends in $5 the matter will be settled. We call upon the pastors in the Synods of Pittsburgh and Ohio and the Classis of Philadelphia to heed this call. When you get the Card with the statement, do not throw it aside, but read it to your Sunday-school missionary society and congregation and from one or all of these get $5 or $10 and let us wipe this out. Then let the Church at large remember that this deficiency has occurred because there has been no liberal response to the Hungarian and Harbor Missions. This being so, have we not a right to call upon the Church at large to help make up this deficiency? We believe that there are many outside of the bodies whose missions are under the General Board who will help us. As this is a special effort, let all the monies be sent to our address at Lisbon, Linn Co., Iowa. D. S. F.

THE YOUNG PROPHETESS:

A TALE OF THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

BY REV. R. LEIGHTON GERHART.

CHAPTER XXX.

EUNICE DE TEELO.

No sooner could Otho leave his father than he hastened to the steward, buoyed up by the hope that his relationship to Habid Barbara, once known, would lead the steward to suspend the execution of the sentence, until the guilt or innocence of the three Afghans could be lifted above all doubt. As in many a terrible hour during the long march of the children extreme peril had made him cool, so now the desperate straits in which he found himself brought a calmness that was almost unnatural. It was the calmness of one who knew that there was no time for grief; that despair, if yielded to for an instant, would only tend to disqualify him from putting forth his best efforts to save his father from a felon's death.

It was only after he had exhausted every effort of argument and entreaty, first with the steward, then with the Commander of the Kurds, and finally with the subordinate officers, and was met only by failure, that his energy broke, his calmness departed, and he entered into a darkness of despair beyond the reach of measurement. As the sense of failure forced itself upon him, as he recognized his inability to do what he had determined with all the energy of his strong will should be done, every faculty and power of his nature rose in conflict with every other. It was as though the subtile bond that held reason, imagination, feeling in order was unloosed, and in a kind of demonlike chaos each was struggling for the mastery. The struggle descended upon him like a hideous spasm in which, while clearly conscious of all that transpired within him, he was unable to say, "peace." He was no longer one man, but many. Such capacity for evil, such capacity for good, such strength, such weakness did he see in himself as only those who enter into the most awful struggles of life are ever permitted to see, and once permitted to see, can never forget. From such sorrows we emerge never to be what we have been, transformed for all time.

The hideous spasm passed at length; the darkness was dispelled; they left him weak and nerveless as one who had been prostrated by bodily illness, but they left him conqueror. As he had calmly resolved to endure the shame and ignominy of slavery, and still be true to his own manhood and to his God, so now he resolved to meet this last awful calamity. As he rose from the ground on which in his agony he had flung himself, a sad peace of resignation upon him, he saw, like a taper burning in the midst of night, faint and far off, a dim ray of hope. Should the Emir regain consciousness before the fatal hour came, his father might yet be saved. He hastened to the sick-chamber, but he had no sooner entered it than the white face, with its fringe of black beard, told him consciousness had not returned. The Emir lay stretched out upon his couch, the very image of death, breathing so faintly that the heaving of his bosom could scarcely be detected.

"Sir," he whispered, approaching the physician, who was bending over the couch intently watching the countenance of his patient, "hath he given no sign of reviving life?"

"As he now lies, so he hath lain ever since he was brought in," was the whispered answer.

"But, sir, this trance must break, or death will surely come," affirmed Otho, dreading yet eager to know the worst.

"He might lie thus for days, and then revive, or softly sleep his life away. I have nearly exhausted all the skill of my craft. I have one resource left; but we must wait."

"God spare him!" and Otho sank on his knees at the foot of the couch.

"Amen," responded the physician.

Hour by hour as the night crept wearily on, the Emir lay in this deathlike trance, and the dreadful day drew rapidly on. Otho saw the stars sparkle with increased brilliancy as the night deepened, marked the intense quiet of the midnight hour, and shivering with horror, caught the first flush of dawn upon the hills, yet the Emir lay motionless and lifeless upon his couch. The hours sped by incredibly swift Was there no power in all this world to stop them in their fatal course? At length, the sounds of life began to be heard stirring in the palace, and accompanied by the clatter and clash of labor, anxiety and toil, the day came, and the last few hours of hope began to number themselves.

At times, in his anguish, which at intervals returned as with intention to overwhelm him, he sought the garden. But he could not remain there, and back he would come to seek the sick-chamber, or to wander, pale and dejected, from room to room of the palace. All pitied him, for it soon became known that Alhadan had discovered his father in the unfortunate Habid Barbara.

It was noon, at length; then the sun began to decline. A few brief hours and all would be over. Otho would have gone again to his father. He could at least weep with him; he could bathe his wounds and cleanse the blood and dust from his face, but when he sought the dungeon, he found his entrance forbidden.

Turning away, he wandered into the great saloon. It was deserted. The steady gush of the fountain, the gurgle of the waters as they ran off through the channels cut for them in the floor, and the uninterrupted chirping, screaming and singing of the birds in the aviary were the only sounds he heard. But as he walked toward the fountain, he suddenly saw Eunice approaching him. She was clothed in a robe of delicate blue and yellow; a rimless cap, from which hung a golden tassel, sat jauntily on her head. She looked as fresh and beautiful as if such a thing as sorrow had never been known in the world. Seeing that Otho recognized her, she raised her finger to her lips, to caution silence, and running gracefully to his side, said in suppressed tones:

"I must be brief, Otho. I have watched for thee, and watched for thee, till I thought thou wouldst never come. Behind the lattice in the aviary"—she explained in response to his dull look of inquiry.

"What wilt thou, Eunice," turning his haggard face fully upon her.

"Tell me; is Habid Barbara in very truth thy father?"

"He is indeed. Oh, my father! my father!" he cried in heart-rending accents, altogether forgetting the caution to silence.

"Hush—hush—for thy life no noise!" and Eunice knit her delicate brows and shook her finger at him. "Tell me," she demanded giving a quick look around,—"and think it not hard that I ask the question. This charge brought against him—tell me, Otho, it is false?"

"False as hell is deep! It was the Afghans, wretched miscreants! My father heard the sound of strife and flew to the help of the Emir—"

But there was a sound of approaching steps, and glancing apprehensively around, Eunice again raised her finger to her lip, and began cautiously to retreat. As the footsteps passed off in a different direction, she paused and whispered:

"I can help thee, Otho. Thank God for thine own sake that Eunice is the wife of Prince Joussef. I can at least delay the hour. Despair not!"

Otho sank upon his knees crying: "For the mercy of God, aid me then, Eunice!"

Even while he spoke, the woman ran lightly toward the aviary. At the entrance she turned, paused, thrust forward a slippered foot, gave her short skirts a graceful brush with her hand, poked out her rounded chin coquettishly, and vanished. Under the very shadow of death, Eunice could not restrain her love of play. But her sportive manner was like vinegar upon nitre to the heart of Otho, and filled with bitterness he turned away. Ill-timed the sportive manner was, but it was to that never ending display of graceful action and coquettish manner that poor Eunice owed her power over the heart of old Joussef, and by the same light influence she was to help her unfortunate friend.

Copyrighted by Chas. G. Fisher, 1890.

Otho waited, expecting to receive definite word that her promise had been made good. He waited in vain. Eunice did not come again. But toward evening, it was noised abroad that the execution of Habid Barbara had been postponed until the testimony of the Emir could be given, or until all hope of being able to get it had passed away. Upon inquiry, Otho learned that Prince Joussef had requested the respite. He never saw Eunice again. During the hours of excitement that followed, she left the palace with her husband, but from that time on the name of Eunice was like a jewel set with jewels in the heart of Otho.

He had scarcely assured himself of the truth of the report, when, accompanying the sense of relief, a dull, lethargy of sleep began to weigh upon him. He strove to shake it off, but leaden-like it descended upon his exhausted faculties. Powerless to hold his eyes open longer, he sank down upon the marble floor of the saloon, and reclining his head on one of the costly brocade cushions, dropped off into the utter oblivion of profound sleep. A hand shaking him was the first intimation he received of returning consciousness. When he opened his eyes it was night. The soft light from the waxen tapers illumined the saloon.

"What is it?" he asked, looking up at the servant who bent in compassionate kindness over him. "Has the Emir revived?"

"No."

"What then?"

"Delay not, but come. There is no time to talk!"

Rising at once, a throb of hope stirring his heart, he followed the servant to the chamber of his master. All the prominent officers and servants of the household were present. They were grouped about the couch in dead silence listening to the physician.

"The time has come," he said, solemnly, "when I must use the last remedy known to me, to revive the Emir. He is sinking, and if left in this condition will soon die. I call you all to witness that I have delayed unto this hour before using this cordial. It is most potent; and if he revives not after taking it—then comes the end."

In his hand he held a small crystal cup containing a colorless fluid.

"Now, raise him gently." The command was addressed to the attendant, who stood near the head of the couch. The attendant immediately slipped his arm under the body of the Emir and slowly lifted him into a half-sitting position. Through inexperience or from excitement this was done so awkwardly that the Emir's head fell back and his jaw dropped, displaying his teeth in a ghastly manner.

"Support his head," said the physician, quietly, "and you had better lower him a little."

The command was obeyed.

"There must be quiet," again he spoke, noting an uneasy movement behind him. "If the cordial acts as I believe it will, let no one speak."

After a few more general directions spoken in a low voice, the physician put the cup to the lips of the Emir, and gently forced a few drops of the liquid into his mouth.

A few moments of intense suspense and a change was noted—the Emir ceased breathing.

"He is dead!" cried the steward. "Woe to thee, physician, if thy skill is at fault!"

"Peace, fool! the change is not unfavorable. See!"

All looked. The breathing had begun, irregular, but getting stronger; a delicate flush mantled the pale face; a convulsive twitching of the muscles of the face; the eyes opened and closed.

"Crowd not upon him!" for there was an instant movement to the couch. "He must have air!" and again the physician put the cup to the pale lips.

There was a deep, long-drawn sigh, the eyes again opened and the Emir gazed vacantly at the crowd around him. An hour or more passed, during which it was evident he was gaining strength. At length he asked feebly:

"Where am I?"

"In your own palace, sir."

Then as he moved his eyes about as though trying to understand why he was in his bed and the physician by his side, the latter said:

"You have been wounded, sir, but rest and care will restore you. All praise to God!"

The Emir gazed steadily at him, as he strove to comprehend the explanation. Gradually the light of intelligence came into his eyes, and breathing wearily, he whispered:

"God be merciful! I understand. Accursed dogs! I dreamt not of treachery. Where are they?"

"Who, my lord?" inquired the physician, noting that he spoke not of one, but of several.

"The assassins! the Afghan slaves! dogs of infamy as they are!"

"The Afghans, my lord!" exclaimed the steward, breaking in. "It was Habid Barbara; and even now he awaits his death."

"God be merciful!" ejaculated the Emir, and would have said more, but the physician interfered:

"Sir," he said, "if you are to recover strength, you must not exert yourself. Great as my skill is, should you relapse again into unconsciousness, I fear I could do nothing. I must insist, sir, that you disturb not yourself any further about this matter. The slave will be dealt with as he deserves."

"If there is peril of thought and speech again leaving me," came the reply, spoken with increased strength, "the more needful is it that I should know now what is being done. Where is Habid Barbara?"

"He is in the dungeon," cried Otho, no longer able to restrain himself, "under sentence of death."

"Oh, most wretched blunderers are you all!" and for a few moments the sufferer was so agitated that he could say no more.

"My lord," interposed the physician again; but the Emir waived him aside:

"Wretched blunderers are you! God be merciful! what cruelty! Bring him to me without delay—instantly. The Afghans are the accursed miscreants. Habid Barbara ventured his life to save his master—to be dealt with so! Bring him to me."

It is impossible to describe the effect of these words. Consternation sat on many faces, but joy and relief on many more. For Otho had won numerous friends in the palace, and his statement, made with positive conviction, had made a deep impression,

When Habid Barbara entered the room—and there was not an instant delay in obeying the imperative command—the sight that confronted all was pitiful, indeed. Half-naked, his body covered with bruises, his pale, gaunt face begrimed with dust and blood—for he had been utterly neglected—and so broken by suffering and exhaustion that he could no longer hold himself erect, he walked feebly into the room, leaning heavily upon the arm of Otho.

"God be merciful!" cried the Emir, strongly agitated and speaking in a loud voice. "Behold him! He ventured his life in defence of his master! This is his reward! Habid Barbara," he continued, addressing the unfortunate man, "nobly have you acted and infamous has been your requital. But your master, to the extent of his power, will return with good, the good thou hast done. Habid Barbara—"

But the effort had been too much. Suddenly, the flush which had mantled his cheeks while he was speaking, faded; he became deadly pale and his voice sank to a whisper.

"My lord," expostulated the physician, "I warn you—"

But the Emir raised his hand with an imperative gesture, commanding silence, and making an extreme effort, again spoke, though in a whisper and with even failing strength.

"Habid Barbara, thou art no longer a slave; from henceforth thou art a free man." Then overcome by the effort, the noble Arab sank back into the arms of his attendants, and the perspiration broke out in beads on his pale face. Yet in his exhaustion, evidently recognizing that consciousness was fast leaving him, he fixed his eyes steadfastly on those of the steward and gasped:

"See that my command is obeyed—he is to go free—with money to take him—to his own land. Swear that you will obey!"

"By the beard of the Prophet, I swear it!" said the steward, solemnly, sinking to his knees.

"As a friend," whispered the Emir, "whom—whom—whom your master loves—tend him. Supply—his—every—want."

He tried to say more, but speech failed him, his eyes closed, and he sank into a deadly swoon; yet even as darkness came into his eyes he kept them steadfastly fixed on the steward, as if warning him not to disobey his command.

LIFE'S RIVER.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," Eccles. xii: 1.

If we could linger here awhile!
But we are floating down the stream;
Though nature wears her brightest smile,
And sparkling waters dance and gleam,
Here could we stay forever.
Life's river answereth—Never!

Straight on, O Lord! guide Thou our way,
Against the stream or with the tide,
By flow'rets crowned this summer day,
Safe in Thy care whate'er betide.
Though life is passing ever,
The river waiteth—Never!

Oh, gather blossoms as ye glide,
And gently scatter as ye go;
They may be carried by the tide
To soothe another's bitter woe.
We may not stay here ever,
Time passing, crieth—Never?

So, fan in hand, still bright and gay,
In pensive thought fair childhood dreams;
'Neath cloudless skies ye pass away,
While through the trees the warm sun gleams,
Till rest ye find forever
Where Time's voice crieth—Never!

MOODS IGNORED.

It was a very warm day. Long before nine o'clock in the morning the locusts began to sing vehemently in the grass, and Milly knew by that how oppressive it would be for hours before the sun should decline. The flies were so persistent and so hard to catch. Milly was quite expert in "popping them over" with a folded newspaper, and she kept her bedroom free of them by this means, but this morning they were so alert and evasive that she couldn't catch them, and she knew by that that it was not only a warm day, but an irritating, exasperating day. She knew that last item in other ways. She felt cross. The sun wakened her long before she got her sleep out, and when she dozed off for a precious morning nap, her mother called her and told her it was time to get up and dress the children, and help set the table for breakfast.

The children were not in the best humor. Johnnie had nettle-rash broken out all over him from the effects of heat, and patient little fellow that he was, he was fretful and cried at every little thing. Mary had had the ear-ache the night before, and was far from being her usual playful self. Paul was fortunately all right.

Milly was quite a philosopher. She had thought more deeply than some girls of fourteen, and to good purpose. She reasoned with herself on this particular morning in this wise:

"It is true that I feel cross inside, but why should I inflict my moods on these innocent children? Mamma was up in the night seeing to poor little Mary, and I'm sure she can't feel very well this morning, though it is just as sweet as can be. Johnnie has reason to feel badly, and I don't wonder he is fretful. I won't make matters worse by giving way to my bad feelings. I'll seem just as pleasant as I can, and perhaps no one will guess that I am cross inside."

Milly got the starch-bag, and applied it to the stinging blotches on little Johnnie's transparent skin. She told Mary a queer fog story while she was dressing her; she gave her some of the things that couldn't be broken to put on the table; she anticipated her mother's wants, and was at hand to help whenever and wherever she could be of service; and in this self-forgetful devotion to others she forgot that the day was warm, that the locusts were singing ever louder, that the flies were troublesome, and that she felt cross. She didn't feel cross any more, but really very happy and content.

Why should we inflict our moods upon those around us? Why should we take advantage of the privacy and sanctity of family life to make those nearest us and really dearest suffer because we happen to feel out of sorts? "In society" we restrain ourselves and wear a garment of courtesy, knowing full well that if we do not society will brand us; but how many at home think nothing of acting out the irritability they happen to feel, and inflict undeserved and needless pain on innocent victims!—Christian Advocate.

KNOWING HOW TO DO THINGS.

Even though labor for pay is not necessary, there is a feeling of pleasure in being able to criticise or to order intelligently what one wants done. Beside this, there is strength and satisfaction in knowing that one knows things, and can do them if need be. Some years since, while a party of ladies were visiting at a country house, it so chanced that none of the "men folks" were at home, with the exception of a farm-hand, a young man lately imported from the Fatherland. In attempting to cut some grass upon the lawn, this man tripped and fell across his scythe, severing the arteries of his wrist and cutting his hand seriously.

One of the ladies fainted; another went into hysterics; the third caught up a towel from a nail in the kitchen and ran to him. The fourth hastened to the laundress for some strips of cloth, and the fifth, catching up a hat and wrap, made the best of her way to the stables, tucking up her dress and ruffled skirts as she ran, and, regardless of slippers or silken hose, harnessed the fastest horse, and in a twinkling was on the way to the nearest physician. The young lady who had first reached the injured man had tied the arm with the towel, passed a stick through it, and twisting with all her strength, had stopped the flow of blood. The other examined the wound, removed some bits of grass from it, closed the edges and bandaged it firmly, and with a fair degree of skill.

When the physician arrived, the trio of intelligent young women had the satisfaction of knowing that their presence of mind and promptness had saved a life.

It was to be able to meet just such emergencies as this that two of them had given a little attention to medicine and surgery, and the other to the best and safest way of managing and harnessing a horse. "Some one might die while I stood wringing my hands," one of them said, when asked why she studied the physician's art. "I spend my summer in the country. Suppose some accident happened, and it were necessary to send a messenger, how would I feel if I were the only one to go, and couldn't go near a horse without trembling?" said the other to a like inquiry.

THE LITTLE LAD'S ANSWER.

Our little lad came in one day
With dusty shoes and tired feet;
His playtime had been hard and long
Out in the summer s noontide heat,
"I'm glad I'm home," he cried, and hung
His torn straw hat up in the hall,
While in the corner by the door
He put away his bat and ball.

"I wonder why," his aunty said,
"This little lad always comes here
When there are many other homes,
As nice as this and quite as near?"
He stood a moment deep in thought,
Then with the love light in his eye,
He pointed where his mother sat,
And said, "She lives here; that is why!"

With beaming face the mother heard;
Her mother-heart was very glad.
A true, sweet answer he had given—
That thoughtful, loving little lad.
And well I know that hosts of lads
Are just as loving, true and dear;
That they would answer as he did;
"'Tis home, for mother's living here."

MAKING ROOM.

Jack and Charley sat on the kitchen doorstep, in the shade of the big willow tree, eating their morning lunch of crisp soda crackers. Jack's pet bantams, forgetting for the time their important little strut, scrambled so eagerly after the crumbs that every now and then the boy's bare toes got a vigorous peck from their greedy little bills.

Little four-year-old Matty, hearing the boys laugh, wanted her share of the fun. She ran to the door, cracker in hand, and said, eagerly:

"Let me sit there, too."

But Charley's blue flannel knees were so wide apart that one of them touched Jack's gray jeans and the other lay against the door casing. Against the opposite casing leaned Jack's head and shoulders, so it happened that Charley said hastily,

"There is not any room."

And in the same breath Jack said crossly:

"Oh, go 'way, Matty, and find some other place. It is too crowded with you."

Matty put her little blue gingham sleeve up to her eyes and left a trail of cracker crumbs across the kitchen floor, as she ran to lay her curly head on mamma's lap and sob out that the boys had not any room for her to help feed the chickies. But in a minute Charley's voice rang out in the kindest of tones: "Come on, Matty; here's room for you."

And Jack called also: "Yes, plenty of room, right between us."

Matty brushed away her tears and ran back to the kitchen door. Sure enough between the blue flannel and the gray jeans there was room enough for two such little mites of girls as she was.

"How did you happen to find room so quickly?" asked mamma, smiling.

"We made it," said Charley, putting his arm lovingly about Matty's shoulders, and throwing a big crumb for Mr. and Mrs. Bantam to scramble after.

"Remember, dearies," said grandma from her corner, "there is plenty of room in the world for every kindly deed, if we only choose to make it."

TEMPERANCE BOYS AND GIRLS.

I wish to give three reasons why all these boys and girls ought to be on the side of temperance. First, because they know enough about the evils of rum and the meaning of the pledge. Some one who thought boys and girls ought not to sign the pledge, asked a little boy: "What does the word 'drunk' mean?" He answered: "Getting crazy on purpose." Then he asked: "What does 'pledge' mean?" He answered; "To promise something, and then stick to it." The man saw the boy understood it, and so he let him sign the pledge and work for temperance. The second reason that I want the boys and girls on the side of temperance is because men by-and by will be in character what we get the boys to be now. Bad boys will most likely be bad men, and good boys, good men. In France, when wicked tyrants were kings, some of the boys had a band of hope, and when they marched they had on their flags the words: "Tremble, tyrants, we shall grow up." They intended to drive the wicked rulers out of the country when they were men. So temperance boys can say, "Tremble, intemperance and rumselling, we shall grow up and put a stop to it." The third reason is because everybody can do something to help the cause of temperance, even the boys and girls. If there were only two temperance people in the world to-day, and each of them should get one more every year to be for temperance and each of these new temperance people one more every year, it would be but thirty years before all the people in the world would be on the side of temperance. Let us all sign the pledge and keep it, and get everybody else we can to let rum entirely alone.—W. F. Crafts.

"An old colored preacher was asked how his church was getting on, and his answer was: 'Mighty poor, mighty poor, brudder.' 'What is the trouble?' and he replied: 'De 'cieties' 'cieties. Dey is jist drawin' all de fatness and marrow out'en de body an' bones ob de blessed Lord's body. We can't do nuffin,' widout de 'ciety. Den dare is de Dorcases, de Marthas, de Daughters of Ham, and de Liberian Ladies. 'Well, you have the brethren to help in the church,' we suggested. 'No, sah, der am de Masons, de Odd Fellers, de Sons of Ham, and de Oklahoma Promised Land Pilgrims. Why, bruder, by de time de brudders and sisters pays all de dues, an' tends all de meetins', dere is nuffin' left for Mount Pisgah Church but jist de cob; de corn has all been shelled off, an' frowed to dese speckled chickens."

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1891.

As a member of a Committee of Classis we were once urging a party of foreign Germans to organize themselves into a congregation and build for themselves and their families a new church. They asked us how that could be done by a few people, none of them well off in worldly means. We told them to do it by prayer, faith and charity. They undertook the work and in the course of time built for themselves a fine church and paid for it. Their faith was, of course, not without works. The more earnestly they prayed, the greater was their faith, and the stronger their faith, the more active and industrious they were in the good works which they had undertaken. There is no form of activity so energetic as that which springs from charity. So it was with the Apostle Paul.

As the harvests are gathered into our barns, our congregations will now begin to assemble together into their churches to thank the Lord for having crowned the year with His blessing upon the labors of the husbandman. It is quite natural that he should rejoice and be thankful, but why should not every body else be equally thankful? All alike share in the results of his labors, in the wheat, the corn and the various kinds of fruit that grow out of the earth, in response to his industry. It is then a befitting time for us to begin to think of what kind of return we ought to make to the Lord for His kindness shown to us all when the harvest festivals of thanksgivings come round, and we get an opportunity to throw something into the treasury of the Lord for the promotion of the cause of Christ in the world.

PROGRESS AN ETERNAL LAW.

By progressive sanctification after death we understand the normal growth or expansion of the saints in the other world. It is quite natural to suppose, as it seems to us, that after they have gained the victory over death and left this carnal, sinful nature behind them in the grave, they will go on advancing in holiness forever, from one step to another, increasing in knowledge, in power and in conformity to Christ, their living head, the vanishing point of their entire spiritual life. Such a view of the case would seem to be required by reason; and the chastened spirit of modern science would lead to the same conclusion. It would be very difficult for any one moderately familiar with the true science of the day to be satisfied with the supposition that the righteous, when they die, by one vast leap—per saltum—become at once perfectly sanctified or glorified. That savors of magic, a something which the broom of science has swept out of the door long ago. It is a libel against the truth, and an obstruction in the way of all spiritual or intellectual progress.

The tenor and spirit of the Scriptures undoubtedly favor the idea of a normal evolution in eternity as well as in time. In the one there is a universe as well as in the other. Moses and Elias appeared on the holy mount to converse with Christ about His decease which He was about to accomplish at Jerusalem. They were in need of further knowledge on this subject, so that their faith might be strengthened; and when they had themselves gained it, they no doubt strengthened their brethren in the other world. When they returned, therefore, we may believe that they had eager listeners, on the heavenly hills, or along the flowing streams of the heavenly Paradise. According to the Scripture "these saints above" are standing in an objective order of things, or a universe, more real than our own; and if so, it must, like ours, be intended for their sustenance, their further progress and their final glorification. Unlike our own, however, it cannot be described by the pen of science, and we must depend on the figures employed by the sacred penman, which at best are only a human language, although best adapted to our present limited capacities.

But such progress beyond the grave savors of an intermediate state, it is said, and it may land us, it is alleged, before we are aware of it, into the horrors of purgatory. That there is such a state between death and the judgment, whatever our opinion in regard to it may be, it would be absurd to deny; but to suppose that purgatory can ever be revived in the Protestant Church is to deny all history, which never goes backwards. We used to be told by Puritan ministers that the observance of Christmas or Easter involved a Romanizing tendency. But we German Christians have been keeping these days for the last three hundred years and they have not as yet led us backwards to Rome; and so we predict that progressive sanctification after death is not likely to lead any persons of good common sense to embrace purgatory, certainly not as a logical sequence.

KEEPING FAITH.

The importance of keeping faith with one another in the matter of endowing additional chairs in the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, on which the writer had an article in the MESSENGER, a week or two ago, as regards the three Synods which promised themselves and each other to do this work, is capable of a still more extended application. It will hold as between charges, or congregations and individuals, as well as between Synods.

At the meeting of the Synod of Pittsburgh, for example, every charge was represented by the pastor and a delegate elder; or, if not, it was by no fault of the Synod itself or any other charge. At that meeting the pastors and delegate elders, mutually pledged themselves, and the charges, and congregations which they represented, to raise $30,000 for a new professorship in the Seminary. This pledge was of a mutual character. That should be emphasized. It was a virtual engagement by each charge, through its representatives, to do its share in contributing to make up the proposed sum of money. One charge did not propose to raise this amount, nor did two, or a dozen, but all the charges of the Synod proposed to do it, and that certainly meant, if it meant anything at all, of a practical character, that each charge in the Synod proposed, resolved, promised, engaged itself to all the other charges of the Synod, to do its share in raising the whole sum.

It was upon this assumption that the work was begun. It was with this understanding that certain charges welcomed the committee into their midst, and that they contributed, as they did, their full share to the object presented to them and commended to their liberality. They did it with the understanding that it was to be a general movement, that every charge and congregation, large or small, rich or poor, would be visited, that the subject would be laid before them and that all would come up to the work, according to the degree of strength given them, nobly and manfully. A number of charges having contributed liberally, on this understanding, it is evident that the remainder are under a double obligation to do so also. To fail in this would be to break faith with those who have honestly carried out the resolution of Synod; and this would be most unbecoming, not to characterize it by any stronger term, in a congregation or charge of Christian people.

It is not to be inferred for a moment, that the writer apprehends any difficulty in this matter, or that he fears there may be charges or congregations in which the committee or their representatives may not be welcomed. No such charge, in this Synod, is known to the writer. What is said here is said to strengthen the purpose of the people not yet visited to say to the committee: come and see us on your special mission, and not to counteract a contrary purpose. There is no contrary purpose, at least none has yet made itself known, in any of our charges.

The same thought—that of keeping faith—may be applied to the individual members or families in the Synod. This is something in which we are all interested—in which we all have an interest. Some one recently wrote the writer: "the establishment of this professorship will be of as great benefit to the Synod, as the building of a new church is to a congregation." He might have said, to the Synod and to every individual church member in the Synod. The Synod, that is all the members of the Church in the Synod, undertook to do this. The body that meets in Synodical sessions—a minister and delegate elder from each charge—represents and acts for and in the name of all the people whom it represents. Hence all who are represented there are bound by the action of the representative body. The charge virtually says in sending an elder to Synod, you legislate for us, who are your constituency, and we will stand by what you do. Now quite a number of the people represented in the Synod, when it was resolved to endow a professorship, have contributed their portion of the amount. They have assumed that the other people who go to make up the Synod would do so too. On that understanding they gave what they did. Will any one now "lie down on that contract?" Can there be found one who will not keep faith with those who have done their duty? There will certainly not be many.

Nor is this a mere matter of sentiment. Rights, representing values in money, are involved. Suppose you give $100, or $50, or $10, to the endowing of a professorship, which professorship is to contribute one-sixth of the instruction given to the future theological students, some of whom will in the course of time be your pastors, on the understanding that others will also contribute and that the full sum needed will be raised, and that after you have done that, the others refuse to do anything, you will then be deprived of the just fruits of your giving. $100 will go but a little ways in endowing a professorship. It was given on the assumption that many hundred dollars would be given and that each contributor would enjoy the good secured by the whole sum. If some do not give, they deprive those who do of what they have a right to look for.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

WHAT IS DONE IN JAPAN.

The following letter from our missionary, Rev. W. E. Hoy, we publish in the Church papers, as well as in the Guardian, that it may reach a wider circle of readers. It will be found to be intensely interesting, and ought to incite our Church to redoubled effort to spread among that interesting people, the Gospel of the Son of God.

Dear Reformed Friends:—There is a sad cry ringing in my ears. It seems like the voice of a despairing soul calling for help where there is no one to save. A broken-hearted maiden, in the beauty and purity, in the tenderness and holiness of unsullied chastity, is fighting against the powers of hell and the lusts of hell's hounds.

The story is a simple one. But in its simplicity is involved a pain of heart that is unto death. A father and mother wish to remove to a distant part of Japan. Where and how to get the money for the journey, becomes daily more and more serious. The personal beauty of their daughter, who is now seventeen years of age, suggests the means of obtaining money. But the laws of the land no longer permit base-minded parents to sell their daughters to houses of pleasure. In Japan, as elsewhere, laws may be evaded in various ways. Under the pretext of having their daughter adopted into another family, these parents make arrangements, the daughter in her ignorance innocently consenting to marry the son of the supposed family into which she is to be adopted, and obtain from two men and two women, agents of the house of hell, the desired sum of one hundred yen, or, as silver now exchanges, about eighty dollars United States gold. And the maiden unwittingly is become the property of a harlot house. The four agents make merry over their cups while waiting in a hotel for the cars. The maiden, meanwhile, is a little bewildered, but does not yet discern the evil in store for her. Train time arrives. The girl accompanies the family into which she believes she has been adopted. As the entrance into the station is made, one of the men, in drunken glee, tells the poor maiden where they are going. The strength of a chaste soul! The appeal for help! She cannot, will not, go! The base mother stands out on the street at a short distance from the railroad station. Unto her the girl flees. Unto her who bore her and nursed her she clings in an agonizing appeal. The hounds of hell, like dogs after a hare escaping from their mouths for the last attempt for life, follow her and tear her away and bring her back into the station. The outraged maiden will not of her own accord enter the cars that are to take her ten miles to Sendai, to the new life of her degradation. One strong man tugs away at her arms and another pushes with drunken force and rudeness from behind. And thus she is driven, like dumb, driven cattle, along her way to the house that can never be the home of an innocent soul. The cars start. Above the noise and bustle of starting, above the rolling and rumbling of car-wheels in rapid motion, are carried forth the wailing and weeping, the shrieks and lamentations of the miserable girl. Is there no help? Will no one save her? A band of Christians, and with them Brother Oshikawa, whose loving heart goes out to this girl in sympathy, and to God in prayer, do what they can to learn the circumstances of the case and hope to help the girl when they arrive in Sendai. But the agents of evil are too sharp to be caught napping, and before proper measures can be taken to rescue the maiden, she is hurried off by previous and secret arrangements to the place where her spirit is to be broken for accursed trade in lust that feeds on body and soul. Some one has made an offer to pay the redemption money of this particular girl, but it is very doubtful whether she can be found by those who care for her soul.

Some one has recently said that such traffic of girls in Japan is a thing of the past. Would to God it were so, indeed. The new law of the land against this crime is one thing; the continued practice, under evasive arrangements, as obtaining among base-minded people, is quite a different affair. I have personal knowledge of three of these abominable sales during the last three months. As Brother Oshikawa said in a powerful sermon on this subject, this morning, nothing but the life of Christ in the hearts of the people will save them from this social evil. The upper classes do not sell their daughters, it is true; but some of the upper classes are willing to use and degrade the daughters that are sold by the poor and low-born classes to the houses of pleasure. In Japan, as in other countries, east or west, I can find, after careful study and inquiry, very little distinction between the upper and lower classes of society in these questions that concern the bodies and souls of thousands of girls. Even the Bible points out, in unmistakable language that a man of the birth, the rank, the glory, the wisdom of a Solomon, may not in his own strength be above this hell-inspired traffic in lust. He that buys in any shape or form the person of a girl, be he ever so high in the upper classes, is not a whit better than the low-born parents who sell their daughter for a trifling sum. It is mere nonsense to aim at the lower classes only in this trade in sin. And oh! Europe and America have done much to teach and encourage these abominations.

In the name of Christ and for Japan, I ask that the present apathy to Foreign Missions in the Reformed Church be speedily overcome. We have enlisted in this work of bringing this people to a saving knowledge of Christ; and the Lord will not hold us guiltless if we neglect our part of the labor. For the sake of women, in gratitude for what our wives, our mothers, our daughters, may become in Christ, let us, brethren, help the women to help us in saving the girls of Japan from bondage worse than death. Don't keep on theorizing about the work and position of our sisters in the Church; but help the women of our Church, who are practically putting to shame many of you, my brethren, in the cause of Christ. The New Testament has a striking instance of [illegible] loving ministry to Christ—and Christ commended the woman. No theory there, but life.

Let Mother, Wife, Daughter, be thoughts to inspire all for greater deeds in the cause of Christ for the homes of Japan. The homes of Japan, high and low, need Christ.

Yours in faith, W. E. HOY.

DR. GERHART'S INSTITUTES.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From the Herald and Presbyter, Cincinnati:

"We welcome the volume as a contribution to general knowledge. It is constructed on the Christocentric theory, which starts from the historical Christ. This method does not require that a system of dogmatics should begin with the doctrine of the person of Christ. The center is not the beginning, but it throws light on the beginning and on the end. Christology, therefore, furnishes the key for theology and anthropology, the doctrine of God and the doctrine of man. It is certainly an able presentation of that system of theology which is constructed on the divine-human personality of Christ as its fundamental principle."

From the National Baptist, Philadelphia:

"The author's spirit is, throughout, most admirable. If in any sentence or word, from first to last, there is a shade of unfairness or a drop of odium theologicum, it has escaped the somewhat careful scrutiny of the writer of this notice. There is no lack of positive and emphatic rejection of the theories antagonistic to his own. Indeed, a large part of the volume is occupied in exposing the defects and positive errors of other forms of doctrine, but it is always done with not less of kindness and candor than of clearness and force.

"The method of discussion is noteworthy. It may, perhaps, be fitly called the authoritative method. The self-evidence and self-consistency of the doctrines of faith, as held and stated by him, are his main reliance for securing their acceptance.

"His expositions are natural, progressive and comprehensive. They are also eminently constructive and synthetic. Even when he antagonizes other forms of doctrine, it is rather to eliminate error in order to show the residuum of truth, and then to make clear the place of this truth in his own system and to show how, from the false and defective, to pass into the true and complete.

"That for substance of doctrine he is thoroughly and profoundly evangelical becomes clear throughout this volume, and will, doubtless, be more abundantly evident in the next, when the doctrines of grace will be more immediately his theme.

"Gerhart's 'Institutes' is in its first volume a significant and valuable contribution to theological literature, and all thoughtful men will welcome it as such and await with interest the second volume."

From the Presbyterian Observer, Baltimore:

"The work is able, scholarly, and comprehensive, evincing research and care in its preparation; and contains valuable material."

From the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate:

"It is clear that from which he takes all the views or which he writes —is the Christological. Christ is to him all and in all in the system of doctrines, in the faith and in the experiences of God's people. From Him all truth proceeds, and to Him all doctrine must lead. For these reasons we admire this author and his book. It is evangelical, scholarly, reverent and able. It will help both the faith and the experience of the reader."

From the Pacific Volks Bote, Astoria, Oregon:

"Der Verfasser desselben, Prof. Dr. Emanuel V. Gerhart, bietel hiemet der reformirten Kirche dieses Landes einen werthvollen Schatz in Gestalt dieser christlichen Glaubenslehre. Die gauze Kirche is ihm hierfuer zu Dauk verpflichtet. Esführt keine schwerfaellige, dem Laien unverstaendliche Theologensprache, wie die meisten Werke dieser Art."

From the Examiner, (Baptist), New York:—

"Dr. Emmanuel V. Gerhart's Institutes of the Christian Religion is the most important of the recent publications in this department."

From the Standard, (Presbyterian,) Chicago:

"We are led to regard this as one of the epoch-making books in theological science. It is not a work to be easily or lightly perused. The present reading has absorbed the better part of a week, a week full on that account of new and stimulating reflection in divine things. The Christ idea is regarded as the true principle of Christian doctrine, and this is demonstrated by a careful examination of both Old and New Testament proof texts, the Gospel of John and the Epistle to the Colossians being especially appealed to. The conception formed of the Christ is a lofty one, and yet simple and beautiful."

"Dr. Gerhart's treatment is profound and in some respects abstruse, but he is dealing with the deepest truths of life, and if his speech be sometimes difficult to follow it must be remembered that he is uttering new and unaccustomed verities. The pages are full of strong and original declarations regarding the truth as it is in Jesus. We look to see much accomplished as this volume falls into the hands of the leaders of Christian thought. It is published in excellent form."

Poetry.

HAVE YOU EVER NOTICED THAT?

Have you ever noticed when you're buying berries by the peck
That those on top are large and ripe, without a spot or speck,
While those beneath are small and green, not worth the looking at,
And altogether worthless—have you ever noticed that?

Have you ever noticed in the summer when the days are cold,
The iceman leaves a larger chunk than your ice box will hold;
But when the days are scorching hot and nearly fry your fat,
He leaves the merest trifle—have you ever noticed that?

Have you ever noticed that the man who's always telling you
About the wondrous things he's done and what he's going to do,
Is loafing at the present time—his purse is busted flat,
And "won't you loan a fiver?"—have you ever noticed that?

Have you ever noticed fishermen all have such awful luck,
The mammoth fish they nearly get fall back into the brook;
And while of great fresh water whales they ever widely chat,
They bring home tiny minnows—have you ever noticed that?

Have you ever noticed office-seekers, ere election day,
Grasp everybody's hand and something kind and fetching say,
But who when safe in office, with a salary big and fat,
Forget the humble voter—have you ever noticed that?

Science and Art.

Shavings from the oiled wood used in the manufacture of planes at an eastern factory were recently put into a barrel, and twenty-four hours later were found to be almost on fire, their temperature being over 300 degrees Fah. Before night the shavings were found charred and smoking a few inches beneath the surface. This is a practical demonstration of spontaneous combustion, and illustrates how many mysterious and destructive fires may have originated. Oiled rags and waste operate in the same way.

It is stated that in various military districts of North and South Germany, as well as in Holland, trials have been made of wire soles covered with a substance resembling India rubber. These soles are said to be more durable than those made of leather. These soles have hitherto been made at Nuremburg, where they were invented by a retired glove manufacturer named Linder. It is asserted that some important capitalists have associated themselves with the commercial development of this invention.

Hints and Recipes.

Galvanized articles may be cleansed by a solution of one part of borax in sixteen parts of water, which is rubbed on with a brush or sponge. Afterward wash with clear water and dry with a linen cloth.

To make fruit salad take one box strawberries, one pineapple (cut fine), four oranges (small pieces), three bananas (sliced). In a deep glass dish alternate layers, well sugared. Just before serving, cover with whipped cream. Grated cocoanut can be used when strawberries are used.

To preserve pears, pare, cut in halves, core and weigh; allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit. Make syrup and drop fruit in it. Cook slowly; when done, take up and place in glass jars. Boil the syrup low, pour over and seal.—Ladies' Home Journal.

MATTRESSES.—These hot summer days give fine opportunity for making over mattresses. For hours the hair can be sunned and made lively and good as new. Rip open the mattress, put the hair through two or three waters to remove the dust, and after draining it pick it over before it becomes dry. Conduct the operation out-of-doors as much as possible to lessen its tedium. Have the tick washed and boiled till it is perfectly clean, and when hair and tick are sunned to dryness, return the hair, and tack it in place. An extension table makes a good mattress rack, and needles may be bought of any upholsterer at about 3 cents an inch.

Farm and Garden.

It ruins farm tools about as quickly to be left exposed to the hot sun of midsummer as to be left out in rain and snow. Heat dries and shrinks the wood work, so that tools and machines become shaky, and it makes openings for the moisture to get in and complete the work of destruction. If you must leave the tools out, at least keep them well painted. The paint fills the pores, and to some extent will prevent spreading and cracking. Paint is a good preservative, and a coat applied every spring or fall will double the life of a tool.

Whether it will pay to grind grain for feeding purposes, says an exchange, can best be told by the pocket book and long experience, as the experiments on that point are so conflicting as not to settle it. By long experience we have found that to grind grain as fine as possible would save one-third; that is to say, that 300 bushels of whole grain will last no longer than 200 bushels ground. This applies to all animals except poultry. Meal should be fed in shallow, broad troughs so that the animals cannot gulp it down. The best way to give it to horses is moistened on cut feed.

It is estimated that an acre of good clover will produce, by pasturing, 600 pound of pork. On this basis clover is a more profitable crop than corn, as the labor of one bears no comparison with that required for the other. To allow animals to harvest the crop and to carry it to market for you on their own feet means a very great saving of labor and expense. The clover, from an acre, if cut and fed, would doubtless make much more than the foregoing weight of pork; but while we have so much land, and while labor costs so much in proportion to the rental value of the land, there would probably be no profit in doing it. Under ordinary circumstances, as yet, the best profit in stock feeding will be found where the largest results are attained with the least labor. If the acre of clover will produce the 600 pounds of pork—we need more exact experiments to determine this—it is as much as 60 bushels of corn will do. It does not need very close calculation to show the wide margin of difference in cost of the two crops. Again, the 600 pounds of pork are worth vastly more than any possible hay crop that the acre of clover could yield, with no expense for cutting and hauling. Hogs and clover are a profitable combination.

THE ANDOVER REVIEW, July, 1891. The present number contains several excellent aricles. Professor Le Conte writes on the relation of the Church to modern scientific thought. He maintains that it is the mission of sclence to elevate the plane of religious thought and test the validity of religious beliefs. With much that is true he combines much that, in our opinion, is fundamentally false. Rev. Charles Carter has a sensible paper on the opposition that is often set up between the preaching of "the simple Gospel" and the preaching of what by distinction is known as "Christian Ethics." Miss Scudder discusses Socialism in its bearing on spiritual progress. She wishes to know its ethical value, and does, not whether it is practicable, but whether it is desirable. The article which will have most attraction for readers in our Church is that on John Williamson Nevin by Rev. William F. Faber. It is an admirable sketch of Dr. Nevin by one, who, though never a pupil of his, has yet been a close student of his writings. We are glad to see it in a Review having so wide a circulation. It will help to make the Doctor better known than he is.

LITERARY NOTES.

A very valuable Supplement will accompany the next number of HARPER'S WEEKLY. It will be devoted to some special features of the eleventh census.

"Girls on Horseback" is the title of a series of papers to be begun in the next number of HARPER'S BAZAR.

"Lydia Heresy, of Bridgewater," a new story by Mary E. Wilkins, will be published in the next number of HARPER'S BAZAR. The same number will contain the first instalment of a series of papers entitled "The House Comfortable," by Agnes Bailey Ormsbee.

The first instalment of a three-part story called "Dick of Diamond Rock," by J. Macdonald Oxley, appears in HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE for July 14th.

"The Chautauquans" is the name of a serial which will be begun in the NEW YORK LEDGER of July 25. It was written for the Ledger by John Habberton, the popular author of "Helen's Babies." Mr. Habberton is an enthusiastic supporter of the famous Chautauqua educational enterprise, and the characters in his "Chautauquans" are all interested in that movement.

Deaths.

Obituaries to be inserted must be no longer than two hundred and fifty words.

DIED.—June 26th, 1891, at Laurelton, Elder Solomon S. Miller, aged 71 years, 2 months and 29 days.

The Consistory of Laurelton Reformed church adopted the following resolutions:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst, Elder Solomon S. Miller, our benevolent friend and brother, who for many years has been a faithful member and officer of this congregation, therefore,

Resolved, That we submit to the will of Almighty God in this dispensation, knowing that He doeth all things well.

Resolved, That because of his constant willingness to labor in the cause of Christ, and because of his wise counsel in all the affairs of the church, we deeply and sincerely feel his loss to us.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in this affliction, and tenderly commend them unto Him who healeth all our sorrows.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in our church papers and recorded on the minutes of the consistory, and a copy be sent to the bereaved family.

L. D. STECKEL,
MINOR BROWN,
J. E. HARTMAN,
Committee.

DIED.—Departed this life, June 10th, 1891, in her home, at Jonestown, Pa., Mary Alice, wife of Dr. J. A. Capp, aged 37 years, 10 months and 17 days.

This young mother was baptized in her infancy by the late Rev. Dr. Kremer of Lebanon, Pa., and at the age of 16 years became a member of St. John's Reformed church, Jonestown, Pa., where she actively spent her short period of life.

In "falling asleep," she gave hopeful evidence that she departed in death "to be forever with the Lord." To the question of her pastor, "Do you feel that you can depart safely and leave all in faith with the Lord," her answer was, "In Him I can safely go."

She was reconciled to God's will. To her, as mother of a young family, the trial was a severe one, but she was able to respond submissively out from the sunny days of her youthful womanhood and the anxiety of a mother's solicitude for her beloved children, the companionship of a devoted husband, brother and sisters.

She was an active member in the bosom of her church. Under depressing effects of bodily weakness, she yet found time and energy to take an active part in church work. For years past she conducted the Infant Sabbath-school, and to the time of her sickness she taught in the school, was a member of the choir, and of the Missionary and Ladies' Benevolent Societies.

The congregation, with the sorrowing family, mourns her early loss, but also rejoices that she has endured in faith her "night of weeping," and left the hope that "an entrance abundantly has been ministered unto her into the kingdom of the Lord."

A large concourse of relatives and frlends attended her obsequies. The sermon was preached by the pastor from the text Psalm 30: 5. W.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society of St. John's Reformed congregation, Jonestown, Pa., the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father, in His wise providence, to call from our midst our beloved sister, Mrs. Dr. J. A. Capp, therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That we bow in humble submission to God's holy will, striving to work more diligently for the Master "while it is day," and "the night cometh when no man can work."

Resolved, 2. That we will cherish the memory of our departed sister and friend, while we miss her gentle spirit, and feel her loss in the home, the church and in the bosom of our society.

Resolved, 3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathies to her sorrowing husband and dear children, and in faith commend them to the God of all comfort and consolation.

Resolved, 4. That these proceedings be placed upon the minutes of our society and a copy be presented to the family of the deceased, and also that they be published in the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER.

MRS. ADAM YAEGLEY,
MRS. ELIZABETH WICKERT,
MISS ANNIE SORG,
MISS ANNIE BROWN,
Committee.

DIED.—Entered into the rest of God, Saturday, June 20th, 1891, at Gettysburg, Pa., Mrs. Hannah Winebrenner, aged 75 years and 2 months.

For forty-five years she was an active member of the congregation and a teacher in the Sunday-school. Her life was full of deeds of kindness and love to the poor and the distressed. Her sweet Christian character shone as a bright light in the entire community. We bless God for her life of devoted, uninterrupted service, and for the manifestation of the Lord's presence and living favor in her death. Surely, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Comfort one another with these words.

PASTOR.

DIED.—At his residence, near Middleway, West Virginia, April 9, 1891, Hiram C. Senseny, aged 77 years and 2 months.

He was formerly of Chambersburg, Pa., brother of the late Dr. Senseny, and his father before him was the able physician, Dr. Jeremiah Senseny.

He was a Christian, strong in faith and hope and love; earnest and cheerful, and at his hospitable home the minister always found a hearty welcome.

He was for many years a member of the Reformed church, belonging, at the time of his death, to the little congregation of Reformed people at the village near which he lived. He was always hopeful for the prosperity of that little band of Christian people. We buried him there in the cemetery near the church beside his beloved wife, who preceded him to the heavenly world some years since.

A large family of children and grandchildren mourn his loss, but they weep not as those who have no hope.

"Call not back our dear departed brother,
Anchored safe where storms are o'er,
On the border land we left him,
Soon to meet to part no more."

Miscellaneous.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

A BRIEF SUMMER OUTING.

A short ride of about five hours brought us to the growing mountain city of Altoona, under the shades of the Alleghenies. After a day's rest among friends we were refreshed for the Sunday service in Trinity Reformed church, morning and evening, with a baptismal service in the afternoon. This mission was started by its present pastor, Rev. Lloyd E. Coblentz, about three years ago, with 65 members mostly, if not entirely, from the First Reformed church of Altoona. For several years they worshipped in a public hall, but they now worship in the basement of their own new church building. The upper audience hall is not yet finished, but the room in which they worship is very pleasant and will seat over 350 persons. The membership now number 214, and if the church was finished the congregation would, no doubt, be self-supporting. The Sunday-school, including officers and teachers, numbers 277. It required much hard work for a young man just from the Seminary to carry this mission to its present stage of prosperity, but Rev. Coblentz was the right man for the place, and he now has the pleasure of seeing his mission congregation an assured success, and looks forward to the time within a few years when the church will be completed and paid for, and the congregation able to support itself without aid from the Mission Board. Altoona is a stirring city, its population is imbued with a spirit of activity and energy, and the churches there appear to perform their full part for the religious wants of the people. The First church deserves great credit for starting this mission at the right time, and the members of the mission deserve great credit for the spirited, energetic manner in which they have presented the interest for-

We preached twice for the mission on Sunday, both times to large and attentive audiences. To show the spirit of this young mission we may mention the fact that, whilst struggling to establish their own congregation, they have already secured a lot in a new and growing portion of the city for a third church in the near future. The spirit of missions is always the spirit of activity and progress in behalf of others. Trinity mission is just embarking in the building of a parsonage also, by which they will save in part the high rent now required for the pastor. It is business policy to build a parsonage, and the Altoona people always have an eye to business, in religious as well as in secular affairs. Aid given to this growing mission, so industrious, active, and self-sacrificing in helping themselves, will be wisely bestowed and thankfully received.

But all this is merely introductory to our "brief summer outing." The interesting situation of Altoona in a general way is known to all travellers who pass through it, up by the Horse-Shoe-Bend, and on over the summit of the Alleghenies, to Pittsburgh and the West. As such we were well acquainted with it before, but we had never stopped long enough to explore the many features of interest in the city and the beauties of its surroundings. So on Monday we started out with a small party to visit first the beautiful and grand elevation on the mountains called Wopsononock, sometimes called for short, Wopsy. The city electric street cars, complemented a portion of the distance by the horse cars, carried us to the foot of the mountain, and from thence the locomotive moved the car up to the summit, an elevation, we were told, of about 2600 feet. The view from this summit is truly grand. A large new hotel stands on the summit, and a short walk of a half mile leads to a look-out, from whence one can see the mountains spread out in all their grandeur. So strong (symbols of strength) and yet so quiet and peaceful these mountains are, that it is a rest for the spirit, and at the same time an inspiration, to sit and rest the eyes upon them. The ocean is a symbol of power also, but it is of power in a state of constant unrest, whilst the mountains give one the feeling of reserved force, even to the degree of sublimity. For the weary, jaded spirit, give us the mountains above the ocean, above it, of course, in a double sense. Had we space we might fill our article with the laughable and comic incidents of this trip, going and coming, to the Wapsononock. The place needs only to be known in order to attract many visitors to see and enjoy its scenery. We had with us the pastor of Trinity Mission, and Rev. J. W. Pontius, a member of the Classical committee of supply for the First church, now vacant, who had preached for that congregation the day before, besides several ladies closely related to several of us. We all voted that it was a rich treat on preachers' blue-monday to visit Wapsononock, even with all the delays of the electric, horse and steam railways in getting there.

On the day following we spent several hours of the morning in visiting some of the workshops of the Pennsylvania R. R. Company in Altoona. This also was a sight we had never witnessed before. As the towering mountains reveal the workmanship of the great Creator, here we beheld the wonderful works of man. This also is truly inspiring. It reveals the greatness of the human intellect in bringing the powers of nature under man's control. Some five thousand workmen are engaged in these workshops and their surroundings, and it is an interesting spectacle to look in upon this centre of industry, and see how human heads and human hands control the machinery which equips the great Pennsylvania railroad with its locomotives, cars, etc. One might spent a week in these workshops and yet not see all that is to be seen.

We did not overlook the fact, however, that Trinity Mission is so largely represented in these company shops, some occupying higher, some lower, positions, and all making good wages. The mission pastor knew just where to find his members, and he did not fail to exchange a word or two with each one. Those laboring men have given the greater portion of the money already raised for the new church. They are liberal in heart and in purse. They left a comfortable home in the First church in order to build up a new congregation for the Reformed denomination, knowing that this step committed them to years of hard work and sacrifice. Ought not such noble spirits receive help from other sections which have not such a burden resting upon them? Let the pastor, Rev. Lloyd E. gation to collect money for the flourishing mission in Altoona.

On the afternoon of the same day our little company started at 2 o'clock for Cresson, on the summit of the mountains, about which it is not necessary to write, as it is so well known among our first-class American resorts. Here the President of the United States and his family took a part of their summer outing last year. For pure air, pure water, and beautiful mountain scenery, it is not surpassed on the Atlantic seaboard. The beautiful, cultivated, forest-grounds are dotted over, besides the grand hotel, with numerous fine cottages, and the walks and drives are all the summer tourist could desire. Seated in one of the shady spots we read from a daily paper a racy description of the Quintet Club's journey up the Rhine and through Heidelberg and Strasbourg, and as we read of those scenes which we had twice travelled over in former years we felt up there on the summit of the Alleghenies that one need not go abroad to find something interesting in the way of natural scenery.

We should like to write something more of this stirring, active, mountain-city, but our space does not allow it in this article. When once the streets, avenues, and sidewalks, are properly paved, as some of them are now, Altoona will take its place among the most beautiful of our inland cities. The city has the freshness of youth literally about it, for besides being of so recent a growth, its population is made up, more than other cities and towns in Pennsylvania, of young and growing families. This gives it its peculiar air of activity and push. It is inspiring to be among such a busy population, where labor receives its true respect and honor. Labor is ennobling because it always carries with it a service done for others, a service for the general good of society. It has been left for America to teach the gospel of labor, and to honor the laboring man as the peer of those in any other class. If Mr. Arnold had looked properly upon the position of the laboring men in this country, and properly appreciated it, he would not have made the criticism that "one sees nothing interesting in America."

Surely it is an interesting fact that in this land of the future the greatest good to the greatest number should be the object of legislation, and not the elevation of the few by the sacrifice of the well-being of the many. All that old-time feudalism and class distinction is losing ground even in Europe. The Emperor of Germany, that military despotism, feels the necessity now of looking after the interests of the laboring people, and in England the distinction of class by birth is losing its power every year. Mr. Arnold, no doubt, was engrossed with a certain class of our population only, otherwise he could not have overlooked the comfortable living and the independent bearing of the laboring population in America.

But we cannot enlarge upon this now, and close, even though somewhat abruptly, this short description of our brief summer outing. X.

SPECIAL MEETING OF GOSHENHOPPEN CLASSIS.

Goshenhoppen Classis held a special meeting on Tuesday at Pennsburg, Pa.

Licentiate H. A. I. Benner, from Lehigh Classis, was received and his call to the Hill charge confirmed. A committee to arrange for his installation was appointed.

Rev. John Leinbach, of Reading, has been supplying the Amityville congregation for some time. A committee that had been appointed to look after the supply of the charge, reports that Rev. Leinbach does not recognize the committee, and he, a member of the Lehigh Classis, continues to supply a church under the control of Goshenhoppen Classis. This is irregular under the rules of the church. Rev. C. S. Wieand, of Pottstown, the stated clerk, was instructed to request Rev. Leinbach to withdraw from the charge immediately.

Revs. S. M. K. Huber, L. K. Evans and C. H. Herbst, the committee on organization of a new congregation at Royersford, reported that a Reformed church had been formally started there on June 11th. The membership is 27. Licentiate Ernest Clapp, a graduate of Ursinus College, has been called to the new charge and Classis confirmed the call. The sum of $150 was voted by Classis toward the support of the Royersford church for this year. The committee on organization of the congregation was continued to arrange for Rev. Clapp's ordination and installation.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

The sessions of Classis each day were begun with singing of a hymn, reading of Scripture, and prayer. On Friday afternoon Classis attended in a body the public meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. In an address of welcome the pastor loci, Rev. J. H. Hendricks, gave much valuable information relating to the local church and its history. Rev. S. R. Bridenbaugh delivered a stirring address on Woman's Work. Friday evening was devoted to the discussion of agencies in church work. Services preparatory to the Holy Communion were held on Saturday evening, Classis uniting in the celebration on Sunday morning. Sunday evening was given up to the discussion of Sunday-school topics.

Classis received Rev. Dr. G. W. Williard from Tiffin Classis, Ohio Synod; Revs. H. Hilbish, J. B. May, and Lic. I. C. Fisher, from Lebanon Classis; Lic. J. L. Fluck from Tohickon Classis; Lic. C. U. Derr from German Philadelphia Classis, German Synod of the East.

Classis licensed Messrs. Henry Tesnow, Wm. H. Stubblebine, Ernest Clapp, and O. H. E. Rauch.

Lic. Clapp was dismissed to Goshenhoppen Classis.

Calls were confirmed as follows—To Rev. Hilbish from Brownback's charge; Lic. Fluck from St. Matthew's charge; Lic. Fisher from East Vincent and Pikeland charge; Lic. Derr from Spring City charge.

In response to an overture Lebanon Classis ceded St. Paul's Reformed church, Birdsboro, to this Classis, which church was received and joined to Shenkel's Reformed church, to constitute a pastoral charge.

A memorial on the deceased brethren, Revs. Feete, Bomberger and Kremer, was adopted with a rising vote, followed with prayer by Rev. Dr. Williard.

Following report on Church Hymnal was unanimously adopted:

"Hymnal Committee of the Reformed Church Hymnal," as prepared by order of General Synod, to be a collection of 795 church hymns and tunes of the highest order; and,

WHEREAS, This collection has been most carefully and judiciously selected and arranged, not only according to the "seasons of the church-year," but also according to "subjects," and to add to its convenient use, is condensed under six different indices; and,

WHEREAS, It is neatly bound in becoming and pleasing style, is printed in clear type, on good paper, and is to be sold at a reasonable price; and,

WHEREAS, It would be well for all congregations of our denomination to sing the praise of God from the same collection; therefore,

Resolved, That this Classis approve of the Hymnal, and recommend to her several charges its adoption by them.

Resolved, That we express our appreciation of the work of General Synod's Committee in compiling the Hymnal, and that we forward this action to the chairman of said committee.

The Classis "commends the project of holding a reunion of Reformed people of Eastern Pennsylvania in connection with the anniversary of Bethany Orphans' Home this summer, and urges it upon the attention of the people."

The third Tuesday in May, 1892, 8 o'clock, P.M., St. Luke's Reformed church, Trappe, Montgomery county, Pa., were selected as time and place of next annual meeting.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Classis is requested to hold its annual meeting in connection with the annual meeting of Classis on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

It was resolved, that in connection with the opening sermon at the next annual meeting, the Classis observe the communion; that Wednesday evening be devoted to the discussion of Church Work topics, and Thursday evening to Home and Foreign Missions.

LAYING OF CORNER-STONE.

The corner-stone of the new Hampton Union church, composed of the Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, and Reformed denominations, was laid on Sunday, July 12. Being a delightful day, a large and devoted audience was in attendance.

The main service was held on the foundation-site of the church grounds, and the sermon was preached by Rev. Prof. W. E. Krebs of Littlestown, in his usual earnest, practical and impressive manner, selecting for his text, Eph. 2: 20. The East Berlin choir of the Reformed church rendered excellent and appropriate music, and received as well as merited the thanks of the congregation.

In the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, a Sunday-school service was held, when appropriate addresses were made to children by Rev. Krebs, and Rev. Schreiver of the Presbyterian church of Hummelstown. The music was furnished by a female quartette.

The service in the evening was held in the U. B. church. It was filled to its utmost. Rev. J. W. Forrest of the M. E. church, preached an appropriate sermon, taking for his text, 1 Cor. 15; 34.

The offerings during the day amounted to seventy dollars. Long may we cherish the memory of the event.

WICHITA UNIVERSITY.

From Wichita Eagle, July 17th:

"Prof. E. L. Mathes, of Heidelberg College, arrived in Wichita yesterday. He comes here to take charge of the Wichita University, having recently been elected to the presidency of the same. Rev. S. A. Alt of Fulton, Mich., another of the newly elected professors, will arrive in a few weeks, and others before the opening on September 2. Prof. Mathes, the new president, comes most highly recommended. The prospects for the university were never so bright as now."

From the above notice it will be seen that Wichita University is still alive, and in a promising state of literary existence, notwithstanding rumors in the East to the contrary. We admit that it is somewhat difficult to maintain a healthy life on western breezes, even with a good attendance of live western young men and women, but we are doing it. Whatever our eastern friends may think about it, we believe there is a Divine call for an institution of learning in the West—in fact, that it is the main hope of our missionary work. What we now need above all else are educated men and women—especially ministers—"to the manor born." Those reared and educated in the West are, as a rule, the best adapted for western work, and no great progress will be made until we have a "native" ministry, as they have in most other well established denominations. In order to meet this want it is all important to maintain this school. It ought to have a fair endowment, both for the literary and for a theological department. We are discussing and planning how to establish a training school for ministers. Will not some wealthy member give us $25,000 or $30,000 to endow a theological professorship for the Synod of the Interior, in connection with Wichita University? This with $10,000 or $20,000 for the literary department would set us up comfortably, and put us in a position to do great things for the Reformed church in the West. The writer believes there are scores of eastern friends who could do this thing, and get to themselves a name and a fame worthy of their Christian enterprise, inspired by love of the Master's cause, as represented by the Reformed church in the great West.

Come, brethren and sisters, open your hearts and your purses to bless the generations now living, and to succeed us, in the West.

Though a little late permit me yet to add, that our late commencement exercises were quite a success. The writer preached a baccalaureate sermon the last Sunday of the session to a large and appreciative audience; one of the literary societies gave an excellent entertainment, including an able address by W. H. Rauch, Esq., of this city; Mrs. M. E. Nuss and daughter, Miss Laura, gave a delightful musicale; the business department graduated ten young men and ladies, and the music department one young lady.

The institution has already done much good in fitting young people for useful lives, and it is hoped may go on uninterrupted in its career of usefulness. In order to do this, we need greater endowment. Will it be forthcoming?

Yours in the faith,

J. W. LOVE.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia.—Bethel, 21st and Tasker, Rev. Wilson Delaney. This church was well filled Sunday evening, July 5th, to witness the ordination and installation of elders and deacons, when the following named persons were inducted into office: As elders, James Arbuckle, William McHenry, Joseph Martin, Wm. B. Jackson and George Barnett; as deacons, Jos. Hoffner, Edward Tully, Samuel C. Wisegarver, John V. Armstrong and Lewis of the consistory.

East South Bethlehem.—The cornerstone of the Shiloh Reformed church in the eastern part of South Bethlehem was laid with appropriate services on Sunday afternoon, July 12th. The main part of the service was held in the adjoining grove. It was an occasion of much joy to the small but active congregation under the pastorate of Rev. A. B. Koplin, D.D. They have chosen a good location and the work promises well for the future. The Reformed are the first on the ground. The church is on a corner lot with a convenient slope. The building is 28 by 47 feet, with a recess on the east, an entrance from Fifth street on the north into the basement, and a tower entrance into the main auditorium at the south-west corner. The whole is so arranged that the church can be extended in such a way that what is now the length can be made the width of the prospective edifice.

Rev. N. Z. Snyder, pastor of the First church, preached the sermon from 1 Peter 2: 6, "Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded." The pastor conducted the opening services and performed the official act. The choir from Christ church, Hellertown, with Hon. J. S. Hess at the organ, sang three beautiful and appropriate anthems. May the work so auspiciously begun continue to prosper under the benign influence of a smiling Providence.

Note the difference.

The Cleveland cake is fine grained, keeps its natural flavor and moisture; "the other" is coarse grained, as if the sugar was too coarse, soon dries out and becomes husky.

Cleveland's leavens best because its strength is produced by cream of tartar and soda only, not by ammonia or alum.

brated in this place on the 12th inst. Rev. D. N. Dittmar, of Greensburg, Pa., preached the preparatory sermon on Saturday previous. The communion was the smallest under the present pastor. This is owing greatly to the demoralization caused by the recent strikes in that region.

Everett.—Rev. F. M. Line. The present pastor entered upon his duties here the first Sunday in June. The Holy Communion was celebrated on Sunday, July 12th, and the attendance upon the service was very good. The offerings amounted to $14, and were for classical apportionment.

Allentown.—Salem's, Revs. A. J. G. Dubbs, D.D., and G. W. Richards, assistant. Communion was celebrated on Sunday, July 12th. The number of communicants was 340. The collection for benevolent purposes amounted to 46.13 The congregation is gradually increasing and hopes in the near future to extend its labors.

Millbach.—Rev. A. J. Bachman held at Millbach, on the 12th inst., a reunion of those whom he confirmed during his pastorate of thirteen years. There were 106 confirmed—five of these died, and five were dismissed to other churches. Of the 96 still members 68 were present at the reunion.

Littlestown.—Licentiate George P. Stem was on Sunday, 5th inst., ordained to the holy ministry and installed as pastor at this place by a committee of Gettysburg Classis, consisting of Revs. Professor J. C. Bowman, Professor W. E. Krebs and F. S. Lindaman. The first-named preached the sermon.

Pittsburgh.—Rev. John Koracs and bride arrived recently in this city as missionaries among the Hungarians in Western Pennsylvania. He is the second missionary among these people. It is expected that his presence and labors among them here will do much towards preventing strikes on their part. The church should come to the help of the General Mission Board in maintaining these missionaries.

Perkasie.—The congregation at Perkasie, Bucks county, one of the most prosperous boroughs on the North Penn R. R., thirty miles from Philadelphia, last week paid their pastor, Rev. J. G. Dengler, a visit. Their kind feelings towards him were expressed in the gift of a very fine wrapper and a number of other articles. The evening was very pleasantly spent.

Altoona.—Trinity Mission, Rev. Lloyd E. Coblentz. Holy Communion was administered July 12th, both at the morning and evening services. The sermons were preached by Rev. T. G. Apple, D.D., of Lancaster. The attendance at both services was good. The offering for Home Missions amounted to $31.89. Eight persons were received as members.

Mann's Choice.—On July 12th, the licentiate, Albert S. Glessner was ordained and installed in the Sulphur Springs charge, Mann's Choice, Pa. The committee appointed for this purpose was Revs. R. L. Gerhart, J. B. Stonesifer and S. C. Stover. Rev. Gerhart preached the ordination sermon, which was highly appreciated by all who heard it. Rev. Glessner begins his work with much encouragement. He has already won the confidence of the people, and we pray that he may continae to enjoy such blessings and grace.

Hanover.—Rev. Geo. B. Resser was installed pastor of Emanuel's church, this place, on Sunday, June 28th, by a committee of Gettysburg Classis, of which Revs. Professor J. C. Bowman and J. H. Hartman were present.

OHIO.

Akron.—Trinity, Rev. E. D. Wettach. At the midsummer communion eleven persons were received into church fellowship with this enterprising mission. The Sabbath-school, too, is growing; enrollment, 276; attendance on July 12th, 216. We already feel we must have more room. The outlook is hopeful.

New Madison.—Rev. R. B. Richard was installed as pastor of the New Madison charge, June 25th. The committee consisted of Revs. J. H. Steele, H. L. Hart and W. E. Ludwick. The sermon was preached by Rev. Steele, of Alpha, Ohio, upon the text, "He that winneth souls is wise," Prov. 11: 30.

INDIANA.

Linton.—On Sunday, June 7th, the new Reformed church at Linton was formally dedicated. The church is erected of brick, 42x42 feet in size, in the form of a Greek cross. A debt of only $300 remains unpaid. Rev. Wm. Grether preached in English and several brethren during the day in German.

PERSONAL.

Rev. H. A. Bomberger, pastor of Heidelberg church, York, Pa., sailed last week with his brother in company, for a trip of several months in Europe and through the Holy Land. His many friends will wish him a bon voyage, and a safe return home.

Mr. Thomas A. Fenstermaker, who is a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College and of the Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., and was duly licensed to preach the Gospel, having been unable to enter upon the profession for which he prepared by reason of throat affection, has been engaged in reporting in the courts of this city and other places with great success. Recently he passed a very creditable examination and is now practicing attorney. To give up the ministry has been a struggle on the part of Mr. Fenstermaker, and that which he has been engaged in necessarily led him to the legal profession. His many friends will congratulate him upon his enrollment among the attorneys of this city, and wish him advancement and great success as such. His office is No. 625 Drexel Building, this city.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Entered into rest at his residence, 6 Alder St., East, End, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 16th inst, J. George Wolff, son of the late Barnard Wolff of Chambersburg, Pa., and brother of B. Wolff, Jr., of Pittsburgh, Pa. The deceased for a number of years was connected with Dunn's Mercantile Agency in Pittsburgh, Pa., and recently was obliged to retire on account of declining health. From that time down to the day of his death he was confined to his residence and his day of release from all sufferings came at last.

He leaves a wife, who was Miss Theresa R. May of Chambersburg, Pa., and two sons, Edward C, and Clarence M, to mourn his departure. His remains were interred on the 18th inst., in the God's Acre of Zion's Reformed Church, Chambersburg, Pa.

IN THE INTERESTS OF THE REFORMED CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES

BY THE

REFORMED CHURCH PUBLICATION HOUSE,

CHAS. G. FISHER, Proprietor,

Office: 907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

(For Terms, see page 11.)

Editorial Notes.

—Rev. I. H. Reiter, D.D., merits the thanks of the Church for his full, deserved and truthful memoir of the late Rev. Joshua H. Derr, to be found in this issue.

—The Church will sympathize with Rev. B. F. Bausman and wife in the death of their son, Benjamin F., aged fifteen months, which sad event occurred at Lancaster, Pa., on the 23d inst. The God of all comfort sustain the bereaved!

—Those congregations preferring to observe Children's Day in September will notice per advertisement elsewhere, that our House has a full supply of services for which it will be pleased to fill orders. Let specimen copies be sent for at an early date, so the work of preparation for the Day may be begun in good time.

—In case the tenure of the present Superintendent of Public Instruction of this State, Rev. D. J. Waller, Jr., should eventually be decided by the courts, to which appeal has been made, to be illegal, and a new appointment is to be made by Governor Pattison, the name of Rev. N. C. Schaeffer, Ph. D., Principal of the Keystone Normal School, Kutztown, Pa., is very favorably mentioned as one competent and well fitted to occupy that important position. His many friends in the Church would be much pleased, should the way be open, if he should be called to this high office.

—The Serial, "The Young Prophetess," which has been running for the past seven months in our columns, is concluded in this issue. No doubt those who have read it, as its several chapters appeared from week to week, found it pleasing and instructive. The author, Rev. R. Leighton Gerhart, has given evidence of his ability as a writer and weaver of an interesting story. Those who have not read it, owing to their aversion to continued stories, can have the opportunity of reading it as a whole, since it is the intention of our Publication House to publish it in book form, of which due notice will be given.

—The serial just concluded will, in a few weeks, be followed by another, which will be a story translated from the German, by one who has had some experience in that line. We have every reason to believe that it will be of interest, equal to those that have preceded it in our columns.

—In our issue of the 16th inst., we stated that Rev. H. W. Super, D.D., LL. D., had been relieved of duties in the Collegiate Department of Ursinus College, and with his duties as Acting President of the College, to which position he had been re-elected, he would fill only his chair in the Theological Department. It seems, however, that he has insisted upon his resignation as Acting President of the College and absolute retirement from the institution which was the ground of the Board of Directors making the changes announced. Accordingly, on Tuesday last, at another special meeting of the Board his resignation was duly accepted. He thus separates himself from the College, he having been connected with it ever since its organization. His, and the friends of the institution regret that he felt it necessary to take this step. Rev. Geo. W. Williard, D.D., has been elected as Acting President for the year. It is needless for us to say anything more than the experience and abilities of Dr. Williard as President of Heidelberg College will eminently fit him for his new position.

—Some are availing themselves of the special offer of the MESSENGER on trial for six months at fifty cents, and we hear that some pastors are arranging for an active canvas among their people who are not subscribers of their church paper. We trust they will meet with good success and that others will imitate their example. An agent might be sent to do this work, but the publisher prefers to give pastors the benefit of any commissions that an agent would be entitled to.

—If pastors will not undertake this work the publisher will be obliged to secure the services of one who is competent and would command the respect of pastors and people, to do it. We are glad to say the MESSENGER commands the support of the Church, and is regarded by its readers as a superior paper, and equal to, and in some respects excels, those of any other denomination. Hence, commending itself, it needs only the aid of those who alone can bring it to the attention of those who are not readers of it, in order to increase greatly its list of subscribers.

—Is a delegate to Synod expected to represent by his vote the prevailing sentiment of the body that elects him, in reference to all important questions that may come up for consideration before the Synod, or vote upon them according to his own views? This is a question that at times arises when the delegate is in the minority of the Classis he is elected to represent in the Synod, when no instructions are given by that body as to how he shall vote upon certain questions. We have always been inclined to think that if a delegate in such a case, finds he is not in accord with the majority of his Classis he should either decline to be a delegate or not represent his own, but the views of those he represents. There may be exceptions to this rule, we admit. It is a question that needs ventilation. A discussion of it in our columns would do no harm, but no doubt a great deal of good, and a proper understanding of just what is expected of a delegate in such cases would be of untold benefit.

—A correspondent recently informed us that his pastor allowed the agent of a private and unauthorized paper to canvas his charge and secure a large number of subscribers for it. In allowing this that pastor surely could not have read the extract from the contract made by the three Synods with the publisher of the MESSENGER, their property, to be found at the top of the third column of the ninth page of this paper In allowing another paper than it to circulate in his charge, he, in truth, endorses that which his own Synod solemnly covenants and agrees not to endorse, and keeps from his people the regular paper of the Church, and, at the same time, aids and abets that which is a wrong in the eyes of all that would be loyal to the paper which is published by the authority of the Church, and should not be pushed out by any that is cheap, inferior and unauthorized.

—The time for vacation is here. Change, rest and innocent amusements, so much needed by business and professional men, are now in order. Those who are able, hie to the seashore or to the country for a season to secure these. To no class of men is a vacation or a season of rest so helpful and valuable, as it is to the minister, the toiling and earnest pastor. And the congregation can well afford to grant him such a season of rest and furnish him with the means to enable him and those of his household, to take it. It will repay them well in the renewed strength that will come to him through a suspension for a time of worry and care, study and work, which will enable him to do more and better for them and the Master upon his return. Let every congregation thus gladden the heart of its pastor and see what the result will be.

—Through the favor of Rev. T. C. Porter, D. D., we are in receipt of a neat booklet which gives a brief account of the memorial celebration in honor of Mrs. Maria O. Porter, of Alexandria, Pa., and a sermon preached on the occasion by Dr. Porter, her eldest son. The event was the 90th anniversary of the birth of the one who was thus honored, and took place, May 3d, 1891. Her surviving children, four sons and four daughters, with others of the family, were present. It was a pleasant and happy occasion. The sermon was preached on Sunday morning, (3d.) in the Presbyterian church. It based upon the text: "Because I live, ye shall live also." John xiv. 19, and was very appropriate. The booklet forms a beautiful memento of the event.

—The Christian Patriot has this to say about payment in advance for papers:

"Some papers discontinue on the expiration of subscriptions and some continue until orders are received to discontinue. If a classification is made it will be found that those papers which appeal mainly to the lower tastes of their readers, to their love of news (daily papers), their love of excitement (story papers), or their love of beauty (literary and art journals), generally do not trust their readers: while those who appeal mainly, to their higher instincts, to their love of home (country weeklies), or their love for God (religious papers), do trust their subscibers. There is no inflexible rule, but the general custom is as stated."

Poetry.

NOT I, BUT CHRIST.

"Not I, but Christ be honored, loved, exalted,
Not I, but Christ be seen, be known, be heard;
Not I, but Christ in every look and action,
Not I, but Christ in every thought and word.

"Not I, but Christ in lowly, silent labor,
Not I, but Christ in humble, earnest toil;
Christ, only Christ, no show, no ostentation,
Christ, none but Christ, the gatherer of the spoil.

"Christ, only Christ, no idle word e'er spoken,
Christ, only Christ, no needless, bustling sound,
Christ, only Christ, no self-important bearing,
Christ, only Christ, no trace of 'I' be found.

"Christ, only Christ, ere long will be my vision,
Glory excelling, soon, full soon, I'll see,
Christ, only Christ, my every thought fulfilling,
Christ, only Christ, my all in all to be."

REFORMED HISTORY.

When we wrote our article on The Historical Society of the Reformed Church a few weeks ago we had in mind some specific points of interest as well as the general subject. One prominent case stood out before us, in which we have reason to have some concern for family considerations, which is commonly misunderstood, and the mistake we find is repeated by every successive chronicler. It is simply the elision, at the beginning, of a local history of about seventy years. A pretty big item. We have the facts at hand to set that item right at any time we choose to do it. Doubtless others can think of somewhat similar cases. We know instances too, in which important history lives in large part simply in tradition, which tradition is rapidly disappearing by the death of those who are the bearers of it, or by the removal of the definite landmarks to which it attaches. That history must be saved soon or it never will be. Unless this is done, in a generation or two invention will take its place, and invention often of the wildest sort. Any one who has given the subject some definite consideration knows what a strong tendency there is of that kind. We know instances also where history has been a sort of partnership product (in truth history generally is that), and one party has preserved the record of facts in so far as it is concerned, and only its side, while the other party has failed to do this, and hence has slender evidence, growing more slender with every successive generation, to show in its behalf. This thing, and the many other things which belong to the subject with which a Historical Society ought to deal, should be remedied soon, and yet it cannot be done unless a general historical interest is first awakened and then wisely, persistently cultivated.

There is another point of great importance. What history we do have on record and accessible is often defective in minor parts if not in its main features. There are links wanting here and there. For example, a biography may be defective in presenting the conditions amid which the life described was lived and in locating definitely leading events which mark that life. Matters of this kind are very important in their place, and they are among the things which make the particularization we often find in old chronicles so interesting and so valuable. But these matters must be put into permanent shape while a knowledge of them is obtainable.

Since the publication in these columns of the article referred to, we have received several letters from wide-awake friends calling attention to historical facts within their knowledge and having a general interest attaching to them. One of them we shall take the liberty of inserting in this connection both for the sake of its intrinsic worth and as a fair specimen of what may be done in this line. It locates a lost link in the biography of one of the founders of the Reformed Church in this country, and it adds somewhat to the historic interest of the town in question. The letter was written under date of July 20, 1891, by Rev. Dr. A. B. Koplin, of Hellertown, Pa.

We quote:

"It may be interesting to Wyoming to know the following bit of history concerning the Rev. John Philip Boehme, of the Reformed Church in the United States. In what is now Hellertown there stands an old stone dwelling in which lived one of the oldest, if not the oldest, son of the sainted pioneer. This son had received of his father a large tract of land at this place, and spent his days here. This spring we buried a grandson of this son of the reverend father, who left quite a large family of children, all of whom are members of Christ church, Lower Saucon.

"From what Dr. Harbaugh says of the death of Rev. John Philip Boehme, I think it more than probable that that event occurred in the old stone house on Main Street, Hellertown. Dr. Harbaugh says: 'He died suddenly, May 1, 1749, at the house of his eldest son, after he had yet, on the previous day, administered the Holy Supper in the Egypt congregation.'

"Egypt congregation is situated some five or six miles north of the city of Allentown, Lehigh Co., some forty or forty-five miles from his home in Montgomery Co. It is not likely that he would have left Egypt before one o'clock, P.M., on the day on which he held that service. It would have been more than one would expect that a man of his age would undertake to ride a distance of forty-five miles after having endured the drain which a communion service would entail, especially since he had a son living within a distance of twelve miles. Considering the probability that he had not seen his son for some time, it is more than likely that he spent the last night of his life here, and that he died here. The older Boehmes remember something of his death, as reported to them by their ancestors, and they believe that he died here, and was removed the next day and buried at Boehme's Church."

MOUNTAINS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Psalm 36: 6. "Thy Rightousness is like the great Mountains."

BY REV. S. L. KREBS.

Those words of the Hebrew poet contain not only a poetical idea expressed in grand imagery; not only a sublime truth or force present and active in the moral world to-day; but also a strong hint as to the nature of heaven. They give man a glimpse into the beautiful landscape of the future world. They reveal unto us an important element in the GEOLOGY OF HEAVEN.

Our English word "Righteousness" is a translation of the Hebrew "tsedheq," which means "compactness," "fixedness," "firmness" in some physical thing, as a tree or rock. Hence when applied to moral matters it indicates solidity of character, adherence to principle, unswerving loyalty to justice. Thus the very inspired word for "righteousness" means something immovable, unchangeable, firm and fixed; something to which a man can come with the confident assurance that it will be where he last saw it, and that it will be the same as when he last saw it. That's the way the mountains are, and that's the way God's righteousness is. How long is it since you last visited the great Rockies? Ten years? Well if you go west to-day again you will find them still there, and you will recognize them to be the same as years ago. You will see the same peaks piercing the clouds, and the same camel-back contour mapped out against the sky. How long is it since you saw the righteousness of God act? Commending the good, condemning the guilty? Ten years? Yesterday? Under the same circumstances forever in the future you will find God's righteousness always the same. You will recognize its mighty and divine outlines as soon as you see them. Have you ever heard of the Himalayas or the Alps bowing or stooping to pauper or prince? Their gigantic and rocky summits are no respecters of persons. So God's righteousness cringes and bows before no man, be he Mwanga, prince of Uganda, or Albert Edward, prince of Wales. Immovable! Unchangeable! "Tsedheq!"

Many years ago the mysterious Mound-builders constructed a series of mounds or hillocks in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys, some of which are large enough perhaps to be dignified with the name of hills. The Aztecs and Toltecs of Mexico built pyramidal structures of masonry some of which cover acres of ground. The Egyptians erected even larger pyramids, some of the stones of which are so huge and heavy as to baffle the skill of modern engineers even with all their steam power electric and contrivances. But what are these, the greatest structures of man's power, in comparison with the gigantic masonry and huge bowlders of the mountains of God which He has constructed out of the solid rock on the continents of this globe?

Similarly, nations and individual men have constructed their mounds and hillocks of righteousness, their systems of social and religious justice, their ideas of truth and right, which, standing by themselves, seem great and grand. Confucius wrought out his system of righteousness for China; Guatama for India; Mohammed for Arabia; Solon for Greece and the Senatus for Rome; all of which seem to be admirable affairs in themselves; but when brought alongside the righteousness of Jesus Christ they dwindle into unspeakable insignificance. The righteousness of the life and precepts of the Prophet of Nazareth towers gigantic and mountain high above the mounds and mole hills of Confucianism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism, Madame Blavatsky-ism, Spiritualism, or any of the Isms of heathenism. These mounds and lesser hills of human thought when brought close up under the shadow of the high mountains of divine thought, serve to make more imposing the majesty of those loftier peaks of divine revelation whose summits stretch up and are lost in the heavens.

As man has never constructed mountains but only mounds, so man has never destroyed mountains but only mounds. True, man blew up the rocks in the channel at Hell Gate with electricity and dynamite, and he has tunneled mountains and digged into their depths, and beautified them as in Switzerland, but he has never leveled nor destroyed them.

So the higher critics to-day are putting the dynamite of reason and common sense and scholarship under certain forms of traditional confessionalism and dry conservatism and exploding accumulated errors one by one, and they are tunneling and digging into the depths of divine truth and righteousness in search of concealed treasures; but they can never undermine or destroy the great mountain range itself of God's justice and truth. The higher critics are simply blasting on the surface to remove certain ugly and objectionable mounds which man has built there during the centuries, and they are digging in the depths in search of the hidden treasures of God. They are not seeking to undermine the inspiration of the Bible, which is one of the mountains of God, and a tremendously strong and indestructible one too ; nor are they seeking to destroy God's justice or existence. This they could not do even if they would. It is only such absurd people as atheists, skeptics and certain rationalists who are silly enough to try to do these impossible things. How senseless for any man or set of men to stand off and hurl marbles, bullets or even cannon balls at the great Himalaya mountains under the sweet hallucination that they will batter them down eventually ! Equally senseless for poor human beings to hurl their theories against divine realities ! Inexpressible silly for them to hurl their brilliant ideas like iridescent bubbles against the unchangeable righteousness of God, for "His righteousness is like the great mountains," like the "everlasting hills," eternal and indestructible as the foundation of the great deep, and the danger and likelihood is, not that those pigmy men wise in their own conceits will ever batter down or deface God's mountain of justice and power, but that a bowlder will eventually roll down from this mountain and crush them.

Mountains subserve geographical and political purposes. They constitute natural boundaries between nations, and states and districts, and very frequently between types of thought and degrees of civilization. Eastward of the Ural Mountains, for instance, lies the great pool of oriental stagnation and despair. West of those mountains we find occidental civilization and activity. South of the Alps are the entrenchments of Roman bigotry, ignorance and superstition. North of that range lie the lands of Protestant liberty, liberality and enlightenment. South of the Pyrenees is the country of dead conservatism. North of those rocky ridges is the land of live alertness. Thus the Ural and the Caucasus ranges separate Christian Europe from heathen Asia, the Alps, Swiss Protestantism from Italian Romanism, and the Pyrenees, French progressiveness from Spanish retrogressiveness.

Similarly, God's righteousness, like the Ural Mountains, is the mighty demarcation between heathenism and Christianity. For the pagans, however clear their conscience be by nature, have the righteousness of men only. They claim to possess the righteousness of such men as Zoroaster, Lauotse, Gautama, Mohammed and others, whom they follow as leaders of right living and thinking, in whom dwelleth not the "fullness of the Godhead bodily," but the vanity of human weakness and sin, and this imperfection materializes in their systems of righteousness, stamping them as human and fallible. But Christians rely not on human but on divine righteousness, on the righteousness of the Son of God, which becomes the possessor of the believer through faith, for "Christ is the end of the law unto righteousness to every one that believeth." God's righteousness, therefore, is the mighty range of spiritual rock which, like the Ural Mountains, separates Christianity from paganism.

God's righteousness, like the Alps, separates Protestantism from Romanism. Romanists teach that men are justified and accepted in God's sight by the works they do : sins forgiven by acts of penance, soul saved by number of Ave Marias repeated before death, etc., by all of which men gain that righteousness for themselves in turn for which God is obligated to reward the doer with eternal life and bliss. But Protestants teach that men are justified by faith in Christ primarily ; that faith is still reckoned unto men to-day for righteousness as it was to Abraham centuries ago. "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham, not having a righteousness of their own, but that which is through faith in Christ, which is acceptable, well pleasing unto God."

The Pyrenees separate progressive France from retrogressive Spain. So God's righteousness is the lofty characteristic which distinguishes a progressive man or nation from a retrogressive one. God's righteousness is the right relation which He unchangeably maintains 1) with Himself ; 2) with angels ; 3) with men ; 4) with devils and lastly with the universe in summa. In all those relations God is forever right, never wrong, not for a second. Unchangeably forever condemns He the evil and commends He the good. His righteousness is perfect. Now the man who is made partaker of His righteousness through faith in Christ, stands in right relation 1) to God ; 2) to himself ; 3) to his family and friends ; 4) to his nation and daily avocation and lastly to the kingdom of Satan. He also condemns the evil and commends the good. In all his relations he stands approved of by God and man. He is the truly progressive and happy man. He advances not only in temporal life, but also in spiritual life, which is eternal life. But the man who is right in all his relations except in his relations to himself and to His God, although he amasses fortunes, honors, friends and power, is nevertheless at heart unhappy, and in matters of eternal importance is retrogressive instead of progressive. He is not right in his deepest and sublimest relations.

Thus God's righteousness constitutes grand, immovable boundary lines in the geography of the moral world, separating Christianity from heathenism, Protestantism from Romanism, progressiveness from retrogressiveness, and the 25th chapter of Matthew clearly indicates that it will forever separate the true from the false, the sheep from the goats. For these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous, because they were right in all lines of love and attended to the needs of those who were near and dear to the Saviour's heart, shall go into eternal life, where God's righteousness will be forever and forever the changeless moral rock that will bear all falsehood from truth, all diabolism and hell from contact with deity and heaven.

REV. JOSHUA H. DERR, A.M.

Rev. Joshua H. Derr was born in Lower Milford township, Lehigh county, Pa., December 9, 1822, and died of Bright's disease and dropsy at Bellevue, Huron county, Ohio, on Sunday, June 21, 1891, aged 68 years, 6 months and 12 days.

His parents * were David and Mary Magdalene Derr, whose maiden name was Harlacher. His father was a member of the Reformed and his mother of the Lutheran Church, and both were devoted to the cause of Christ and the interest of His kingdom. His father while cultivating a small farm, was by occupation a manufacturer of pumps. About the year 1836, when Joshua was in his fourteenth year, his parents removed from Lehigh county to Montour county, Pa., settling on a small tract of land in the vicinity of Washingtonville. Here the later years of his youth were spent on the farm with his parents, and under their care and religious influence, and in assisting his father at his chosen occupation.

He was received into covenant relations by baptism in infancy by Rev. John T. Faber, Jr., then pastor of the "Great Swamp Church," or New Goshenhoppen charge (1819–1833), and in early youth, after having been instructed in the doctrines of Christianity, he was received by confirmation into full communion of the Reformed Church by Rev. Daniel Gring, who was then pastor of the Paradise charge (1835–1853).

* His parents died at their home near Washingtonville, Montour county, Pa., at an advanced age. At the time of their death his father was 79 years, 1 month and 11 days, and his mother was 82 years and some months.

He was piously inclined from boyhood and in youth he became impressed with the duty of consecrating himself to the service of God in the Gospel ministry, and therefore adhered firmly to this purpose. His primary education was received in the common schools of Lehigh and Montour counties, and by diligent application he made such progress in his studies as to become enabled in course of time to teach. He therefore either before or during his higher preparatory studies taught at the "Blee school-house" in Columbia County, and in the "Paradise schoolhouse" in Northumberland county, being regarded as "a well-informed and apt teacher." From boyhood he was "a diligent and voracious reader," faithfully improved his time and opportunity for the improvement of his mind, and having a remarkable memory he treasured up much of what he read. His course was onward. As he possessed an active and inquiring mind, he aspired after better educational advantages and higher attainments, in order to become properly fitted for the responsible duties of the sacred office.

To this end, he, in 1841, became a student in the Preparatory Department at Marshall College, Mercersburg, Pa., then in charge of Rev. Andrew S. Young. In 1843 he entered the Freshman Class of Marshall College, and after having taken a full course, graduated with honor September 8, 1847. The subject of his oration at graduation was, "Vocation of Genius." In the fall of 1847 he commenced his studies in the Theological Seminary there, and graduated in 1850.

On a call from the Selinsgrove charge, he was licensed and ordained by Susquehanna Classis, March 27, 1850, at a special meeting held at Freeburg, Union (now Snyder) county, Pa. He now entered upon the practical work of the ministry, extending through a period of forty-one years, and during these years (without entering into details for want of space), he ministered to the following eleven pastoral charges, besides doing some educational work, viz. :

The Selinsgrove charge in Union (now Snyder) county, Pa., was his first field of labor, composed of four or five congregations, which he served with acceptance from April 1, 1850 to April, 1853. During a part of this time, in connection with his ministerial duties, he was also principal of a select school in Selinsgrove.

After resigning this charge he became Rector of the Preparatory Department of Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa., having been elected to this position by the trustees, April 20, 1853, and resigning it December 20, 1854. While Rector he also for about one year was pastor of the Elizabethtown charge in Lancaster county.

Then from 1855 to 1857, a period of about two years, he was pastor of the charge in the vicinity of Sellersville, Bucks county, Pa., which had long been served by Rev. Peter. S. Fisher of blessed memory.

In 1857 he became assistant pastor to the venerable Rev. Joseph S. Dubbs, D.D., in the Zion's Reformed Church of Allentown, Pa., and for a year or two the two pastors preached alternately, as collegiate pastors of the same congregation. About 1859 the congregation was divided, and the adherents of Rev. Derr were organized as St. John's congregation, while the major part retained the name of Zion's with a pastor of its own. The two congregations, however, continued to worship in the same house until 1863 when both pastors resigned and the St. John's congregation was re-united with that of Zion's under the pastorate of Rev. N. S. Strassburger. Rev. Derr, while pastor here, was spoken of "as a preacher of unusual force and power."

He now removed with his family to Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio, and became pastor of the Wooster charge, consisting of four congregations, and served it with varied results from April 1, 1864, until July, 1869.

His next charge was that of Louisville, Stark county, Ohio, which he served with acceptance and a good degree of success, from the spring of 1870 to November, 1872, when he resigned.

He then accepted a call to the Bellevue charge in Huron county, Ohio, to which he was elected October 6th and began his labors there December 1, 1872, and preached his last sermon June 3, 1877, having served the charge four and one-half years.

From Bellevue he removed with his family to Henry, Marshall county, Ill., and engaged in teaching in "Henry Seminary" for a period of about two years, from 1877 to 1879. While thus engaged he also did some preaching as a supply to Reformed congregations in that region.

And from here he went to Spring Bay, Woodford county, Ill., and took charge of two small congregations numbering about seventy-five (75) members, serving them about one year.

He now returned with his family to the East, and in the early part of 1880 took charge of the Reformed church in Williamsport, Lycoming county, Pa., and continued there until April 1, 1882.

His next field of labor was East Berlin charge, in Adams county, Pa., where his pastorate continued from 1882 to 1886, a period of nearly four years. Here, as elsewhere stated, he was bereft of his wife through death.

His last regular charge was that of the St. John's Reformed Church of Catawissa, Columbia county, Pa., of which he became pastor in April, 1886, and served it until December, 1890. He relinquished his labors here because of failing health. Already in 1888 he made a trip to Europe with the view of improving his health, and in July of that year attended the Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterial System in the city of London. But neither travel nor medical skill brought relief. His bodily afflictions increased and he was necessitated to abandon the practical work of the ministry in December, 1890. Soon after he removed to his daughter, Mrs. Mary Magdalene Dimick, at Bellevue, Ohio, where he received the needed care of tender affection and kindness, but where, notwithstanding, after great suffering, he happily passed to his blessed rest!

On the 14th of May, 1850, he was married to Miss Jane Mary Bobst*, and the fruit of this union was six children, three sons and three daughters, one son having died in infancy, while the others survive to mourn his departure.

In 1854, in view of his progress in study and advanced attinments, the degree of Master of Arts in course was conferred upon him by Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa.

And what as to his general traits of character, ability and activity in the ministry? He doubtless was not without his faults and imperfections. And who is perfect? No one. But whatever may have been his peculiarities, mistakes and shortcomings in his life's work, he was through grace by faith in Christ a Christian man, and honestly consecrated to the service of God. This was evidenced in the tone of his sermons, preaching and teaching, as well as in his pastoral work and social intercourse.

He possessed excellent natural endowments, and being improved by diligent study, he developed considerable force and grasp of mind which was clear, vigorous and logical. And having a very retentive memory, he was enabled at all times to turn his fund of acquired knowledge to good practical account in preaching, teaching and discussion, proving himself a man of rather marked ability. Indeed he grew into a respectable scholar and theologian, and perhaps in this respect deserved more recognition than he received.

He was in different respects a strong man. He was this physically, being large, heavy built, firmly knit and commanding. He was strong in intellect, in countenance, in voice, in spirit, in purpose and in action. He thought for himself, and seemed to be made to lead rather than to follow.

He was a positive character, and had the courage of his convictions, which he candidly and fearlessly expressed. In this respect he was at times in danger of losing self-control and of being carried to an extreme position, tending to make him appear arbitrary or stubborn. But, viewed in the light of a charitable interpretation, he was honest in his purposes and sincere in his actions. He had some zest for dialectics and controversy. He was a ready debater, a forcible reasoner and a strong opponent; and in the course of discussion he stood firmly for the truth and the right as he apprehended them.

He was a good parliamentarian and counsel, had an intelligent comprehension of the organic law of the Church, and may be ranked among the best of our ecclesiastico-constitutional lawyers, dead or living. He had a legal cast of mind, and was regarded a safe exponent of constitutional questions. Hence in cases of appeal and complaint coming before our ecclesiastical courts, he by request frequently acted as counsel, and evinced decided legal ability in the prosecution of a case.

He was thoroughly Reformed in his views and official practice. As such he was devoted to the interests of the Reformed Church, in point of doctrine, government and cultus, but in no sense a narrow sectarian or bigot. But while he was honest and liberal in his religious views and practice, and manifested a liberal Christian spirit to all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in truth and sincerity, he had little patience with ecclesiastical or religious frauds, shams or charlatans.

It was generally accorded to him that he was an able and instructive preacher; for while he was earnest, laborious and efficient as pastor, his main power was made to appear in the pulpit. His carefully prepared sermons were logical in order, evangelical in sentiment, pointed in application, and delivered with a good degree of unction. His preaching was strongly doctrinal and argumentative, tending to indoctrinate and instruct, especially the more intelligent hearers. In view of his preaching ability, he was at times selected to preach the main sermon at meetings of Classis and Synod. He also was in demand at church dedications, not only to preach, but to raise funds to pay the remaining indebtedness on the building, and in the latter respect he had few superiors. He spoke equally well in the German and in the English language, and preached fluently and impressively in both.

* * * * *

And as a teacher in the sphere of Christian education combining mental and moral discipline, he was thorough, analytical and successful, having a clear comprehension of the subject taught, logical in his reasonings, definite in his deductions and practical in his illustrations.

Thus, during a period of about forty-one years, he as preacher, pastor and teacher performed a great amount of work, and had a varied experience of life's labors and trials, of its fears and hopes, of its sorrows and joys, and of its suffering and rest. This experience was enlarged and intensified by frequent removals and changes of fields of labor, and by severing old and forming new relations. The sweet and the bitter of the aggregations of life were realized in its various phases and realities.

* * * * *

But amid all these mutations, he remained true to his covenant vows, and stood firm in the faith and the hope of the gospel. For several years, especially during the last six months, he was much afflicted in body, but he bore all with patient resignation to the Divine will.

* * * * *

In his affliction and suffering, he committed his all to the Lord, believingly trusting in Him, and through grace realized divine favor and support; and as the closing hour arrived, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus on the Lord's Day, and passed to the enjoyment of the blessedness of an eternal Sabbath of peace and joy.

* * * * *

And what were the results of his ministry of forty-one years? Eternity alone can reveal the true answer to this question. He kept no record of his labors, as far as known at the time of writing this, and even recorded figures in any case, however honestly made, are not always indicative of the real results achieved; for no doubt the conclusions of God are often very different in this respect from those of men. The variety and extent of his labors, whatever imperfection there may have been, afford tangible evidence of energy and activity, and of self-denial and devotion; and therefore, under the divine blessing, of having accomplished commensurable results for the cause of Christ and of human salvation, he deserves to be held in honored remembrance on account of his ability and abundant labors.

The funeral services took place on Tuesday, June 23d, in the Reformed church at Bellevue, under the general direction of the pastor, Rev. G. H. Souder. By request of the deceased brother, the sermon on the occasion was preached by Rev. I. H. Reiter, D D., from Psalm 116: 7: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul." Rev. Drs. H. Rust and L. H. Kefauver assisted in the services in the church, at the close of which the remains were laid to rest by the side of those of his wife in the cemetery adjoining the church. The services at the grave were conducted by the pastor, and prayer by Rev. Dr. D. Van Horne. The other ministers present, in addition to those already named, were Revs. Dr. J. I. Swander, I. A. Sites and F. H. Keller of the Reformed Church. Rev. Dr. D. L. Leonard of the Congregational Church, Rev. C. Gallimore of the M. E. Church, and Rev. M. Hamilton of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Eight of the ministers acted as pall-bearers.

May the rich consolations of the gospel comfort and sustain the bereaved and sorrow-stricken, while we, by the removal of our brother in the ministry, are solemnly admonished to be also ready when the Master calls. And may the Lord keep us faithful unto the end, and ever direct our hearts into the patient waiting for Christ unto eternal life. I. H. R.

MISSIONS.

We this week sent out several hundred statements on postal cards asking a contribution from Missionary Societies, Sunday-schools and Congregations in order to meet a shortage of some $600, under which the General Board found itself at the last meeting of the Executive Committee. In sending out this statement, we took the liberty of sending to some of the pastors in the Eastern Synods. We are aware that those

* Mrs. Derr, nee Bobst, was born in Gettysburg, Pa., August 28, 1822, and died at East Berlin, Adams county, Pa., December 26, 1885, aged 63 years, 3 months and 29 days. After appropriate services at East Berlin, her remains were taken to Bellevue, Ohio, and there laid to rest with proper religious ceremonies in the cemetery adjoining the Reformed Church. She was a woman of intelligence and refinement. Her parents were Michael and Jane Ried Bobst. It is said that her ancestors, both paternal, were distinguished for talent, intellectual culture and piety; and that they hold a conspicuous place in the history of our country, and were prominent actors in the War of the Revolution and of 1812.

Synods are not exactly in our territory but, as this debt was incurred by the General Board using funds contibuted for its own missions, with which to pay the Harbor and Hungarian Missions—we felt that it would not be wrong to ask some of the brethren, in the other Synods to help make up this deficiency. It is but right for us to state here—that these two Missions now owe the Board more than the deficiency amounts to. Some may ask, how can this thing be? If these Missions are under the General Board why should that Board not pay the missionaries? True, the Treasurer of the General Board is to pay these missionaries—but with the funds sent in by the entire Church for that purpose. But the Church at large did not send in sufficient funds—and the Board used funds to pay them—that were sent in by the Synods of Ohio and Pittsburgh for their missions that is the reason why these missions owe the Board.

It is hoped, however, that now, since the apportionments were made for these missions at the meetings of the Classis this Spring, money will be coming in to sustain them hereafter. But that will not pay the indebtedness that the Board has incurred. Hence the request sent out. It is bad policy for any Board to go right ahead while a debt is continually accummulating. The General Board does not propose to do a business of that kind. But, as can be seen, in this instance the Board must either pay these two Missionaries out of its funds for the time being or the missions must be abandoned. To abandon them, thus early, would have been a disgrace upon the Church. No doubt both the Harbor and Hungarian Missions are doing a good work and should be liberally sustained by the Church.

The Church should also understand that the second missionary for the Hungarian work is now on the way, and before this appears in print, may have arrived in this country. It is expected that he will settle in Pittsburgh, and will minister to his countrymen in that city, and to some extent to those in the Connellsville Coke regions. Rev. Johann Rovaisz is a married man. Consequently his traveling expenses will be more than were Bro. Yavany's. His salary must be promptly met so that he may not be embarrassed in any way, in his work. The Church at large must remember that the Board sent for these men by order of the action of her highest body and she must now see that the money is at hand to fully sustain them. So far the Hungarian work promises well and we need only do our duty as a Church and we shall doubtless see the fruits of our labor.

Finally, brethren, those of you to whom the statement has been sent please do not lay it aside, but let your congregations, missionary societies and Sunday-schools hear of it and we believe that there will be such a response that the full sum will be raised. To do this very little will be needed from any charge. A small sum will suffice if all give. The many small sums will give us the amount but if only a few respond, the amount will not be raised though the few may pay quite liberally. Let those who do not receive the cards still remember the cause, and send in their funds.

The last meeting of the Executive Committee was one of encouragement to the Board. The missions, with a few exceptions are doing well. Indeed, some are moving forward at a rate unexpected by the most hopeful member of the Board. The need to be done is to awaken a still greater interest in the good work.

THE YOUNG PROPHETESS:

A TALE OF THE CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

BY REV. R. LEIGHTON GERHART.

CHAPTER XXXI.

CASTLE HEILBRUN.

Sixteen weary years had gone by since Baron Von Heildrich set out for the Holy Land, and six since Otho marched on his fatal Crusade. For a time, after the departure of her son, bits of information concerning the progress of the army reached the Countess through the children who had forsaken the enterprise and turned back to seek their homes. Though the news she received was never very full or complete, for the hapless little wanderers could tell only in a vague way where they had been and what they had done, yet what they said served only to increase her anxiety, for it was little else than a tale of suffering and privation.

Several months went by, and then, to the surprise of every one, Serena suddenly returned. Accompanied by a splendid retinue of servants and spearmen, the Margrave of Baden by her side, she rode up to the great portal of the castle. Beautiful, exultant, full of life, she had much more to tell of her own triumphs and the brilliant future opening before her through her engagement with the Margrave, than of the progress of the Crusade: on that subject she was reticent. But the Countess learned enough to deepen her fears for the happiness and welfare of her son. For one year Serena remained in her old home, and then came the festivities and merry-makings given in honor of her marriage with the Margrave, closed by her final departure for Constance.

A deep, monotonous quiet settled down on Heilbrun after the wedding. Neither from Serena nor from Otho was any word received for a long time. But at length rumors reached the castle to the effect that, after incredible suffering and toil, which cost the lives of thousands, the children had reached the sea and set sail for the Holy Land; but whether they landed safely on that far shore, or perished at sea, or met with some other fate, good or bad, none could tell. There was nothing the poor mother could do but hope, and pray, and wait.

The Countess, naturally very devout, began, soon after the departure of Otho, to withdraw herself more entirely from the world and surrender herself more unreservedly than ever to the services of her religion. With her thoughts fixed on her husband and her son, she prayed and fasted, spending all the time she could spare from her devotions in visiting the sorrowing and suffering, and in caring for the poor and destitute. Her sanctity gradually began to awaken attention, and penitent men and women appealed to her in their own behalf for intercession with Heaven, whilst her boundless liberality drew multitudes of the needy to the gates of her castle.

For years her face, grown thin and wan from fasting, long midnight vigils and continued anxiety, had filled the castle with sorrow, but as the years drew to a close, a confirmed conviction that her prayers and alms had ascended to heaven and would be answered by the return of her husband and son, gave peace to her heart and put the light of hope in her eyes. She had, however, lost all other interest in life. Save the attention absolutely required for the government of her house and the general management of her vast estates, it was difficult to induce her to give any thought to earthly matters. As a consequence, the great fortress and all its surroundings, the roads, the fields, the forests and hedges, quickly began to wear an appearance of desertion and neglect.

Copyrighted by Chas. G. Fisher, 1890.

This was the condition of affairs at Heilbrun, when one morning, in the spring of the year 1218, two palmers, one old and infirm, the other strong and vigorous, could have been seen slowly wending their way along the road that led to the castle.

"Courage, father! 'tis but three miles further. From the top of the hill beyond the bridge in the valley, we should be able to catch a glimpse of the towers," spoke the younger.

"It becomes us to bear with fortitude every event that Heaven sends upon us," replied the elder of the two, "but I cannot altogether overcome the foreboding that rests on my heart. I fear it is a presage of impending ill. See, the signs of decay and neglect change even the appearance of the hills."

"Years have elapsed since I was led to link my fortunes with that ill-fated Crusade—blessed to me, dear father, in that it took me to your side!—but even then the signs of neglect were beginning to show themselves. Dear mother's thoughts were too much engrossed with the affairs of Heaven to give much time to those of earth. And did we not learn from the peasant, a few minutes ago, that all was well at the castle?"

"Ay, the boor knew little," answered the other, "and even if his report was based on truth, events come quickly. But 'tis weak to yield to such thoughts," and the speaker, by an effort of the will, assumed a more cheerful expression of countenance.

"Here, Otho," he said, pausing and surveying a swamp to their left, "have we often flown the falcon."

"Ay, father, and here often—so please God!—will we fly our falcons again. Believe me, sir, happy days and prosperous lie before us."

"God grant it! They will be bright if it is but given me once more to take thy mother, my most dear and faithful wife, in my arms. Sweet soul! such patience and faith as she hath is given to none but those who walk with God."

"Lean on my shoulder, father, the hill is steep," cried the younger, for they had crossed the bridge and began to ascend the hill; and eager to gain the top from whence the towers could be seen, the young man began to press forward rapidly.

"There!" cried he at length, as the two stood together on the summit of the hill, "there are the towers of Heilbrun!"

"I see them not, my son," answered the elder, gazing steadfastly in the direction indicated by his son. "Dost thou, indeed, see the towers?"

"Ay, ay, my father! Look! under the great limb of yonder beech by the way! Seest thou them not?"

"My eyes are dim, my son, or 'tis the glare of light, but I see them not," was the answer. "Is the banner set?"

"No; I see not the banner. 'Tis early, father, and the lazy churl hath not yet roused himself."

"It was wont to wave day and night from the highest tower. I hope its absence bodes no ill."

"No, no, father; of that I feel sure. It hath been rent by the wind and is being repaired, or, perchance, 'tis forgotten," said the son, eager to find a reason that might allay the fears of his father.

It was, indeed, Baron Von Heildrich and Otho. Like countless numbers of others, who, with trumpet sounding and pennon waving, in all the pomp of war, had left their estates to do battle for the Holy Sepulchre, they were returning to their home on foot, in the guise of palmers.

The command of the Emir to care for the Baron, was obeyed to the letter. The unfortunate man was carried off to the bath; his wounds dressed, his shaggy beard and unkempt locks trimmed; he was provided with an attire that bespoke as well the wealth of the Emir as the gratitude that noble-hearted man felt for the service rendered him by his former slave; and was feasted and waited upon with sedulous care. Such ostentatious gratitude, largely unknown to us, was quite in keeping with the warm feeling and rich imagination of the Arab. He loved display, surprises and marvels, and was as unbounded in his hospitality as he was relentless and cold-blooded in his enmity and resentment. So, from the condition of a criminal scarce granted the mockery of a trial, the Baron was transformed into a guest, and treated with princely regard.

The improvement in the condition of the Baron, quickly revealed itself in his whole appearance and manner. No longer compelled to consort with menials, that repellant haughtiness which had made him so many enemies, vanished; and gentle of speech and gracious in manner, he gave all with whom he came in contact the impression that he was, indeed, a man of noble rank and high lineage. One thought gave him anxiety—Otho was still a slave. But this was relieved by the reflection that the Emir would, upon learning the relation of the two, consent to allow the young man to be ransomed. That the ransom would be heavy, he felt assured, but if his large estate and the still larger estate of his wife had not gone to ruin during his long absence, he believed that, large as the ransom might be, it could easily be paid. Months would have to go by and weary journeys would have to be taken before such an arrangement could be carried into effect, but with the hope before him of seeing his family re-united, that would be a comparatively light burden.

Though the swoon into which the Emir sank was deadly, yet under the skillful treatment of the physician, he again revived, and from that moment began slowly to mend. One morning when, still feeble, he reclined on the soft cushions of the divan in the beautiful saloon, the Baron seized the occasion offered him by a remark of the Emir, to make known his hope with regard to the future of his son.

"You will soon, noble sir," said the invalid, "set out on your return to your own land."

"It was my desire, my lord, to begin my journey at an early day. But there is a wish in my heart that I desire to have fulfilled, if it meets with your gracious consent."

"What wish can one still have who from slavery has been raised to freedom—from confinement in a foreign land is given permission to return to his own—ay, who is not only permitted to return, but who will be provided with means for his journey?" and the latter looked the surprise his words so plainly expressed.

"My lord, the kindness you have shown one who was absolutely in your power, would seem indeed to leave little that my heart could desire, and yet my wish is of such a nature that, if it remains unfulfilled, even freedom itself will have few charms."

"Now God be merciful!" exclaimed the Emir, a frown of well affected displeasure gathering on his face, "the cupidity of you Franks, who from your own lands have come weary leagues by land and sea to seize a narrow strip of rocky soil belonging to the domain of a foreign monarch, is boundless. But let me hear, noble sir," he concluded, the frown relaxing, "this wish."

"Sir," said the Baron, "Alhadan, who as thy slave stands by thy side, is, wonderful as it may seem, my son,—ay, my lord, my only child. A strange fortune has brought him here."

"God's ways are inscrutable," replied the Emir. "I have heard the story from your son's lips, and have never ceased to marvel at it. But would you rob me of a servant for whom I paid no less a sum than 4000 gold pieces, and whose faithfulness and wisdom have made him invaluable? Ungrateful man!"

"My lord," replied the Baron, "I wish not to cause you any loss, and will ransom my son by the payment of 8000 gold pieces."

But the Emir shook his head and answered:

"Not 8000 gold pieces, nor any number, can buy your son's freedom."

"Then, freedom to me is nothing. Let the old man stay, and set free the one whose life is all before him. 'Tis but a few years more that I can, at best, spend on earth, and my labor for my God and my country can be little. I beg you, my lord, set free my son and let me remain."

Otho stepped forward to protest against such a proposition as that suggested by his father being accepted, but the Emir motioned him back.

"Noble sir," he said, the severe expression which during the early part of his conversation rested on his face giving place to a beneficent look, "you have not yet sounded the depth of Emir Aboulias' gratitude! You know not his heart. Small reward would it be, indeed, to give freedom to a father, and let his heart be pierced as with a dagger by the knowledge that his son remained the bond-slave of another. You have not yet sounded the depth of Emir Aboulias' gratitude!" Turning to the young man by his side he said, with ill-concealed emotion: "Alhadan, though you have been faithful to me, though I will see you depart with unfeigned regret, though none can altogether fill your place, yet, Alhadan, you too are no longer a slave. From this time you also are a freeman."

And so it came to pass that Baron Von Heildrich and Otho found themselves, one morning in the spring of 1218, slowly approaching their home.

In the castle quietness reigned. The countess, attended by one of her women, was in her own chamber, little thinking, that her long years of faithful waiting were fast approaching their close. For the first time in many months, she had begun work on a piece of tapestry,—a favorite kind of embroidery in mediæval times,—that had long lain in a state of partial completeness in a great chest near her bed. Whether a premonition of the event that was about to transpire had touched her spirit, or because the natural peacefulness of her disposition was more strongly asserting itself than usual, her face wore a more serene and cheerful expression than it had shown for many days; and in her voice there was a lingering intimation of the old joy that had always sweetened it in days gone by.

"What art thou gazing at so intently, Catherine?" she inquired, raising her eyes from her work. For the waiting woman had risen, approached the turrent window, and there stood, gazing at some object that had attracted her attention in the road.

"Little of importance, my lady," somewhat indifferently answered the woman. "In truth, it is a sight so familiar that 'tis scarce worthy of mention."

"And yet thou hast stood full two minutes gazing down the road. Methinks, a thing of so little importance is scarce worth looking at so long."

"Two pilgrims my lady, one old and the other young," now answered the woman. "The old one seems exhausted and weary, and the younger is supporting him on his way most tenderly. I was attracted by the care which the young man showed."

The countess made no immediate reply, then she said, quietly:

"He may be sick. It might be well for thee to go and see that his wants are supplied."

She had scarcely concluded, when, as if struck by a sudden thought, she glanced up, a startled expression in her eyes, and, laying aside her work, she approached the window. Often, through the long years of the past, the Countess had, in imagination, seen two men approaching the castle, one of whom was old and the other young. Sometimes they came as knights in full armor, attended by a strong body of followers; sometimes as two knights unattended, but frequently it was as two palmers that she saw them. Sometimes in one character, sometimes in another, they appeared, but there were always two, and those two, her husband and her son. Sometimes they were mounted and traveling like merchants; sometimes they were ill and wounded and were being born on their way in litters; sometimes they were on land and then on the deck of a ship at sea; sometimes they were desperately fighting, and then beset by storm and tempest; sometimes they were suffering and in want, and then again they were in health and strength. But there were always two, her husband and her son, and their faces were always turned toward castle Heilbrun. On more than one occasion as she caught sight of two men approaching, or was told that two had come,—for in the constant throng to the castle of mendicants and travelers this was not an unusual occurrence—the thought had sprung into her mind: "My husband and Otho!" Then with a strange light in her eye, and a quickening of hope in her heart, she would hasten to satisfy her conjecture;—and return to her chamber saddened by disappointment.

With this thought in her mind she now approached the turret window. No sooner did she catch sight of the two than her eye became steadfastly fixed upon them. There was much that was strange about them, but something in the manner, the gait, in the general contour of form and face impressed her with a sense of familiarity. A sudden thrill of conviction dilated her eye and made pallid her cheek. But the poor lady had been often deceived, so repressing the cry that sprung to her lips, she stared fixedly at the two palmers a moment longer. Then the belief that she indeed beheld her beloved ones became too strong for her restraint, and she said, speaking as one in a dream:

"It is my lord! it is Otho!" Yet she remained standing at the window as though not crediting the words her own lips had spoken.

"It is my lord! it is Otho!" again she exclaimed, turning to the waiting woman, every feature of her fine face tremulous with emotion.

"Oh, my lady, my sweet lady!" expostulated the woman, "do not think of them so much! Why weary yourself with disappointment? They will never come again! we will go to them, but they will never come to us."

The Countess, staring at her as in a daze, stood irresolute an instant longer, and then, uttering a cry of joy from which all doubt had gone, flew from the apartment, down the long corridor to the great portal. There under the shadow of the ponderous arch she paused. And the two palmers paused also, for they had caught sight of her. Then the younger of the two waved his hand, shouting in a loud, excited voice:

"Mother, I have brought father back! we have come home!"

Immediately the two began to run toward her. She sprang to meet them. An instant later, and the arms of her beloved ones were around her.

With that quickness with which any exciting news spreads through a house, word that a startling event had transpired drew the servants and retainers to the gate in an incredibly short time. Streaming through the gates, they surrounded the weeping and rejoicing group, and with shouts and tears testified the joy that all experienced at the return of the wanderers. Finally, taking the Countess, the Baron and Otho in their strong arms, in a tumult of joy, they carried them on to the moat, over the drawbridge, under the great arch, into the quiet, the comfort, and the security of Castle Heilbrun.

THE CAREFUL MESSENGER.

A pound of tea at one and three,
And a pot of raspberry jam,
Two new-laid eggs, a dozen pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

I'll say it over all the way,
And then I'm sure not to forget;
For if I chance to bring things wrong
My mother gets into a pet.

A pound of tea at one and three,
And a pot of raspberry jam,
Two new-laid eggs, a dozen eggs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

There in the hay the children play—
They're having such jolly fun!
I'll go there, too—that's what I'll do,
As soon as my errands are done.

A pound of tea at one and three,
A pot—of—new-laid jam,
Two raspberry eggs, with a dozen pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

There's Taddy White flying his kite;
He thinks himself grand, I declare;
I'd like to make it fly sky-high,
Ever so much higher
Than the old church spire,
And then—but there—

A pound of three and one at tea,
A pot of new-laid jam,
A dozen eggs, some raspberry pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

Now there's the shop, outside I'll stop,
And run through my orders again;
I haven't forgotten—no, ne'er a jot—
It shows I'm pretty cute, that's plain.

A pound of three at one and tea,
A dozen of raspberry ham,
A pot of eggs, with a dozen of pegs,
And a rasher of new-laid jam.

PERNICIOUS SELF-SACRIFICE.

There is a fruitless and blamable self-sacrifice which bears the same relation to the enlightened and well-directed self-sacrifice that superstition bears to faith. It hurts the subject of it beyond telling. It is reponsible for an incredible proportion of the disagreeable characters one meets, and of the material and spiritual failures which strew the paths of life.

Mothers are the chief sinners in this respect, though maiden aunts are not seldom guilty in the first degree as well.

Who has not seen the frail, gentle mother wearing herself out in the service of a house full of vigorous boys and girls; loading herself with unnecessary tasks, depriving herself of needed rest and relaxation, not for their ultimate good, but for their immediate and permanent injury? She is in very modest circumstances, and cannot afford a servant; but with her modest position and two or three growing-up daughters, she would scarcely feel the need of one if she divided properly the household duties. But Jennie has pretty hands, and their satin surface might be a little roughened if she were to wash the dishes, and Maria's delicate complexion might be injured if she ventured as near the kitchen fire as her share in the family ironing or the preparation of the meals might bring her. Then they both must be dressed at least as well as the school companions they prefer to consort with, and this lays on the already overburdened mother the care of endless fripperies and furbelows, quite beyond their means, and out of countenance with their home and way of living.

And Jennie and Maria grow up, preserving their delicate hands and fine complexions, selfish, useless, indolent girls, with hardly a thought for the poor drudge who has so foolishly sacrificed herself for them.

By and by, perhaps, friends and lovers begin to come; but "mother" is seldom visible. She is too tired after her day's labor to help to entertain visitors, and moreover, she knows, sorrowfully enough, that her daughters will enjoy themselves much better in her absence. She has fallen woefully behind the times during all these years. She has no time to read. She rarely gets herself a new dress. She is prematurely old and faded and nervous.

Such mothers often grieve over the indifference or ingratitude of their grown-up sons or daughters. But, after all, what good have their sacrifices accomplished for their children? What have their children to be grateful for? An abnormal development of selfishness; an utter unfitness for the duties of their state; tastes and aspirations which, in the ordinary course of events, never can be lawfully gratified. It was not of the foolishly indulgent and weakly sacrificing mother that the inspired writer said: "Her children shall rise up and call her blessed."—The Pilot.

A LITTLE GARDENER.

He was hard at work in the garden,
Though the day was very hot,
Busy planting and watering something
With his little sprinkling pot.

But he came in warm and breathless
As the clocks were striking noon,
And he startled me with the query:
"Will my cookies be up soon?"

Then, before I had time to ask him
What his funny question meant,
He went on and told me the labor
On which all his thoughts were bent:

"I broke some cookies in pieces
And picked out the little seeds,
And I planted them in my garden
When I'd pulled up all the weeds.
I watered them very often—
Perhaps they're a little too wet—
For though I've watched every minute
Not one has come up yet!
I put on the dirt very lightly
So they'd hurry and come through,
And the very first cookie that blossoms
I'm going to pick for you.
I've got a few seeds left over,
Here in this little tin cup.
Mamma, don't you think by to-morrow
A few cookies will be up?"

Such an earnest little gardener
It was hard to tell, indeed,
That the world has never tasted
Cookies raised from caraway seed.

Little Men and Women.

LITTLE JOE'S GIFT.

Grandpa and Grandma Stebbins had the Bible in their home, but they seldom read it. It lays upon an upper shelf, and the dust was often allowed to collect upon it. They were so intent upon gathering together this world's goods that they found little time to think of the world to come. Joe, their little grandson, was a brave little boy and they laid by every cent they could spare in order that they might educate him. It was for Joe that they toiled early and late. When he first went to the district school, how proud the old couple were of the reports of his behavior! No boy gave less trouble to his teacher, nor was more loved by her.

The teacher was a Christian and she told him about Jesus and the boy's tender heart was touched, and that evening he ran all the way home in his haste to tell grandpa and grandma the story. The aged parents had long been familiar with it and they listened, not untouched by the boy's enthusiasm.

Joe kept the story in his heart and pondered often of the blessed Jesus who died for sinners.

While Grandpa Stebbins was never idle yet he had not prospered as many another and his heart hardened as he thought of what he would, but could not, do for his boy. When vacation came, Joe, who was bright and active in word as well as study said:

"Grandpa, I am not too young to lend a hand."

So, when grandpa went to the woods with his axe to hew down trees, Joe went down, too, determined to help. The old man was proud enough of the little man who ran by his side and grandma, as she watched their departing forms from the window, smiled as she resumed her knitting, a pair of warm stockings for Joe.

Grandpa never could tell how it happened, but when the oak at which he was hewing fell, Joe fell, too, crushed beneath its trunk. One leg must be taken off, the surgeon said, and the little fellow clung to grandma's neck, striving vainly to smother the sobs that shook his frame.

It was a sad household and Joe, as he lay upon his bed, strove vainly to cheer the hearts of his grand-parents. "Don't cry, grandma," he would say; "I can get around on one leg and there is lots of things a boy with one leg can do."

He made a rule to speak to them each day of Jesus. In his sufferings the dear Lord was very near to him and he thought often and wonderingly of the life and death of the Saviour.

One day his teacher brought him a mission paper and in it was the story of a child who worshipped idols and when told of Jesus wept for joy and said, "Tell father, too," and turning from the wooden image, he bowed his knee to the living Jesus.

Joe's form daily wasted and his dear ones saw that his earthly life was short. "Grandpa," he said one day, "have I cost you much?" The old man hid his face and sobbed. "I want to know, grandpa," Joe continued, "just how much I cost a year."

"Not much, my boy, not much; not more than one hundred dollars."

"Well, grandpa, I am going home soon, and I want you to give that money to some other boys to teach them of Jesus, that they may come to the same home where I am going."

Grandpa sobbed "yes" and the boy, stroked the white hairs of his head, said: "Won't you and grandma come too?"

This is how Joe performed his work for missions, and brought his grandparents into the kingdom.

Soon the wasted form was laid to rest, but the old couple never forgot their promise to little Joe. The Bible was brought down from the shelf, and each year into the mission fund there came the offering of one hundred dollars, bearing the words "Little Joe's Gift."

SPIDERS.

Spiders belong to a large and interesting tribe of Acatines. The general class, the Arachnida, is composed of various orders or sub-tribes, each of which is then divided into various families. They therefore have an extensive relationship, that is, many cousins and second-cousins, the scorpion belonging to the latter. Naturalists have studied their different families very carefully and brought to light many striking facts in regard to their habits, their industry and struggles for existence. Dr. Rauch in his lectures on natural history told us all about them, a long time ago, and we thought that what he said about them was quite as interesting and instructive as what he said about the ants and the bees. Their webs spun from numerous strands, each one of which is composed of numerous filaments or threads. As an eminent naturalist has said, it would take several millions of them to form a thread as thick as a hair of his head. Some spiders shoot out long lines of silk, and on these they float about in the air like a balloon, suggesting the possibility of aerial navigation. Thus one was observed coming across the Susquehanna three hundred feet above the water towards a cliff that was high up in the air.

But spiders have never been generally popular. Outside of scientific circles they are looked upon with detestation and manifest disgust. They are intruders in our houses, and the good house-wife, with an eye to cleanliness, pursues them with a broom and in a moment sweeps away their fine-spun speculations of a home above her head. Moreover it is believed that their sting is poisonous or at least dangerous. Sitting at the opening of their funnel-shaped retreats they resemble bandits or robbers, watching for their prey. They look at you for a moment, and if you move towards them, in a moment they disappear. In the animal creation they are probably the best speciments that illustrate the character of the supremely selfish man. He sits watching the course of events around him, takes no interest in anything except what he can turn to his advantage, by putting a penny in his pocket or a feather in his cap. He looks also upon his fellow-men around him with the same spider's eye. If he can use them in any way as his instrument, as a tail to his kite, or as a source of profit or his own aggrandizement, he is quite affable to them or even courts their society. In this way the animal nature in man asserts itself among high and low, among cultured and well dressed people, no less than among the degraded slaves of passion. But human beings have a higher mission than spiders, which live merely for themselves. Endowed with a moral nature, they rise immeasurably above the cattle of the field. With social instinct, and the help of divine grace, they live for others as well as for themselves, and they are never so happy as when they are even more ready to give than to receive. This brings them into a holy fellowship with other men, with the race, with history, with the good and great of all ages, with the heavenly world, with their heavenly Father and with Christ, His Son. Thus no longer a mere animal or worm of the dust, man fulfills his mission and attains to his final and eternal destination in the skies. They that live in the flesh perish in the flesh.

RIVER OF TEARS.

The prophet Jeremiah once uttered sad lamentations over the destruction of Jerusalem and the devastation of the Holy Land. In the most touching and plaintive language he gives utterance to the nation's sorrow. At first view it might appear as if he grieved simply on account of the outward desolation of his own people, as men do now over the ruin of their own country. But a careful reading of his Lamentations will show that his sorrow was mainly of a spiritual character. It was excited because wickedness seemeth to be everywhere triumphant, whilst righteousness and truth seemed to be banished from the earth. Righteous men and women are always sad at the prevalence of sin and iniquity around them. It is said that the righteous soul of Lot was vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked, when he was compelled to see and hear their unlawful deeds from day to day. 2 Pet. 2 : 7, 8. The Psalmist in still stronger language expresses his profound grief at the prevalence of sin when he says, Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law. Ps. 119 : 136.

The violation of the Divine Law inflicts pain upon the upright soul just in the same way as men of right feeling would be saddened by the ruthless destruction of towns, villages, industries or works of art at the hands of savage hordes, breaking through the barriers of civilization. The law of God is just and holy ; the statutes of the Lord are more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold ; and if they are despised or contemned, such conduct lacerates the tenderest feelings of the heart, or the law of God itself which rules and reigns in the heart. But the sorrow is so much the more intensified by the thought that the transgressor, without being conscious of the fact, is inflicting upon himself unspeakable sufferings and pain—rushing with fury down to hell. This is not only the case with the gross transgressors of whom we read in our daily papers, but with all who wilfully reject the Gospel. Thus men, women and children around us are perishing daily for lack of knowledge. The contemplation of such wholesale destruction occurring under our eyes wherever we go, is well calculated to awaken our sympathy for these poor human beings, intended to be like God Himself, godly, and to cause our tears to flow for them—like rivers of waters. It is not strange, therefore, that Christians are trying to do something to pluck them as brands out of the burning fire ; but it is certainly very strange that they are not doing more to rescue their fellow-men everywhere from the death that never dies.

HARVEST HOME.

For the last two or three years, our farmers have realized a sore experience in their business interests. Prices for their produce have been low, their crops, whether of cereals or fruits, have been short. Foreign demand has been light which served to depress rates, so that as a class our agriculturists have been oppressed with a shortage in their receipts, which while seriously embarrassing them in their business affairs, has materially lessened their ability to contribute liberally to the advancement of our Church work. The Reformed Church, whose membership is largely up made of farmers, has keenly felt the effects of this depression, in carrying forward her organized work. The treasuries of her Boards have been depleted, so that in some instances they were enabled to refrain from contracting their operations, only by allowing the formation of debts, while onward movement, and aggressive operations, were effectually prevented.

In contrast with this our late experience, the outlook for the future, we are happy to say, is cheering even to excitement. The depressing conditions of the late past have nearly all been exchanged for those of promise and greatly increased revenues. The present prospect indicates an unusually large demand for our breadstuffs and fruits, while for our cattle an enlarged demand with improving prices is already realized. Besides, our improved facilities and arrangement with foreign countries, give promise of an additional demand for our food products. In harmony with their improved conditions, it has pleased a kind Providence to open largely His liberal hand. We are just gathering in the largest crop of breadstuffs which has ever been produced on this continent. Those in a growing state are in a most promising condition ; while our fruits are in almost overflowing abundance. Everything almost indicates a year of more than average production, while the consumers are congregating with enlarged offerings, to take what we can spare.

Soon our membership with its pastors will congregate to observe their praiseworthy festival of Harvest Home. We bespeak them to recollect the source of these cheering prospects—to distinctly recognize their bountiful crops, as the gift of God—that they receive them with thankful hearts—and that with liberal hands they lay enlarged thankofferings upon the altar of the Lord. Then will gladness enter into the house of the Lord, and famishing souls be fed with the bread of everlasting life, and the Church replenished in means, will go forth to the accomplishment of the work, lately neglected, because of her empty treasuries.

JOHN BULL.

Some time ago an English officer, wishing to arrange the soldiers of his regiment in such a way that he might be able to send them in companies to their respective churches on Sunday morning, thus addressed them : "Fall in ! The Church of England to the right ; Roman Catholics to the left, and all fancy religions to the rear." We should have been much gratified to have been present and seen which was the largest platoon. It would not have been surprising to us if the fancies had turned out to be the strongest in able-bodied men. In that event they should have been located in a more prominent position to do the hard fighting. No fault can be found with the officer for placing his own Church side by side with the Church of Rome, because most likely he had been taught to do so in his youth in some country parish, or possibly in some cathedral. If he had been better instructed, he would have called the "fancy religions" to the front, the Presbyterians or Puritans and the Methodists to the centre, the Baptists somewhere along the water, to protect the boats, and some of the minor divisions might have been employed to do the scouting through the forest, or been placed on guard at exposed points. Our Anglican friends manifest due consideration for the old Greek and Latin Churches, in which they may be right or wrong, but they certainly make a huge mistake when they order the Evangelical Church to the rear. Some of them seem to have a dim conception of the existence of such a Church. Others of their number no doubt have better ideas, or else they would not have been so anxious to appropriate to their Church the title of "Bulwark of Protestantism," which originally belonged to the Dutch Reformed in Holland. The spirit of John Bull still lives, and it seems he has not yet repented of the sins he once committed against his brother Jonathan a long time ago. Once when this brother with streaming eyes exhorted him to flee from the wrath to come, he got angry, took him by the collar, marched him out of the gate of his park, and what else he then did, history fully records. Jonathan is now quite as respectable as his brother John, has a much larger park than he has, lives in as handsome a house, clothes and educates his children just as well, and they know about as much here in America as their cousins in England—if not a little more. John's family ought to take these things to heart and change their tactics.

TRANSITION.

A period of transition is a very interesting, it is also a very difficult and trying, period to live in. It is interesting, because it is always interesting, in any process of development, to observe the meeting, the temporary apparent collision, and the eventual adjustment and reconciliation, between the Old and the New. It is difficult and trying, because, at such times, men are easily bewildered, distressed and alarmed. Clearness of vision is dimmed by the smoke of conflict and controversy. It is not possible to recognize the forces that are at work. A friend is mistaken for an enemy. The darkness breeds terrors; imagination is at work; men grope about in agitation and fear. Legitimate and necessary change is misjudged as breach of continuity and violation of history. A natural and beneficent evolution assumes to men's minds the guise of an unnatural and destructive revolution. The whole situation is full of confusion and misunderstanding. The Old seems at times blindly to repudiate the New, not knowing it to be its own child. And the New is not always tender, and reverent, and loving toward the Old, as it ought to be toward its own parent.

It is such a time of transition, as regards religious belief, through which we are at present passing; and it possesses all the interesting features, and also all the perplexing and distressing qualities, which belong to such critical periods in the history of the Church. The explanation of the present ferment and agitation is contained in our Saviour's words: "No man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish. But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved." The Church is a living Church; the Holy Spirit has never departed from her; her faith and life, while immemorially old, are nevertheless truly of to-day. The Past lives on in the Present; without this, the Present could not even exist. But the Present is not destroyed, or in any wise enslaved or degraded thereby; it has its own life, without which the Past could not perpetuate itself. "Der Lebende hat Recht," as Schiller says, in one of his most beautiful poems. The living Church has its own rights, which may not without danger be disregarded. The Church is as a vine of perennial and indestructible vitality, from which, out of the depths of old life, "new wine" is continually being produced. The new wine is not a denial or repudiation of the vine's old life; on the contrary, it is the product of it.

New wine has not been wanting in these last three hundred years of the Church's history; but, being contained as yet in the bottles provided long ago, it threatens to burst them. The old expressions are no longer found to be sufficient; the old statements and definitions are felt to be inadequate. New wine requires new bottles. The life of to-day must be allowed to express itself in its own way. It is not a different faith, but the same faith asking the liberty of making its own confession. It is not a different kind of substance, but the same kind of substance claiming only to be placed in a receptacle adapted to its own peculiar needs. Let no one be alarmed at what is going on. Even if bottles should be broken, the perishing of bottles is of small moment in comparison with the testimony which is thereby borne to the continued and invincible vitality of the old vine.

Nevertheless, many are offended and alarmed. There are those who feel that the ground on which they have stood is giving way beneath their feet. Finding themselves compelled to give up certain views, which have been among their cherished beliefs, and unable to distinguish between the circumstantial and the essential, they fall more and more into doubt, grope about in darkness, feel themselves bereft indeed, and wonder whether there is certainty anywhere. How far a soul may fall into this forlorn condition, many a pastor knows. The writer knows, by personal intercourse, and also by correspondence, through what difficulties more than one noble and sorrowful soul is, in these days, fighting its way. There are probably many such. They deserve, not our condemnation, but our tenderness and our sympathy. And it is with reference to such, or, more particularly, with reference to those of them with whom things have come to the worst, that we beg leave to quote a certain passage to which our attention was called a long time ago, and which has been to more than one a mountain-peak for guidance at such a time. It seems opportune to call attention to it now, and, indeed, the citation of it was our object in beginning this article. It is from F. W. Robertson, and is a part of the address delivered by him to the working-men of Brighton, in 1848:

"It is an awful moment when the soul begins to find that the props on which it has blindly rested so long are, many of them, rotten, and begins to suspect them all; when it begins to feel the nothingness of many of the traditionary opinions which have been received with implicit confidence, and in that horrible insecurity begins also to doubt whether there be anything to believe at all. It is an awful hour—let him who has passed through it say how awful—when this life has lost its meaning and seems shrivelled into a span; when the grave appears to be the end of all, human goodness nothing but a name, and the sky above this universe a dead expanse, black with the void from which God Himself has disappeared. In that fearful loneliness of spirit, when those who should have been his friends and counsellors only frown upon his misgivings, and profanely bid him stifle doubts, which for aught he knows may arise from the fountain of truth itself; to extinguish, as a glare from hell, that which for aught he knows may be light from heaven, and everything seemed wrapped in hideous uncertainty, I know but one way in which a man may come forth from his agony scathless; it is by holding fast to those things which are certain still,—the grand, simple landmarks of morality. In the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this at least is certain. If there be no God, and no future state, yet even then, it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be chaste than licentious, better to be true than false, better to be brave than a coward. Blessed beyond all earthly blessedness is the man who, in the tempestuous darkness of the soul, has dared to hold fast to these venerable landmarks. Thrice blessed is he who,—when all is drear and cheerless within and without, when his teachers terrify him and his friends shrink from him,—has obstinately clung to moral good. Thrice blessed, because his night shall pass into clear, bright day.

"I appeal to the recollection of any man who has passed through that hour of agony, and stood upon the rock at last, the surges stilled below him, and the last cloud drifted from the sky above, with a faith, and hope, and trust no longer traditional, but his own, a trust which neither earth nor hell shall shake henceforth forever." J. S. K.

A GERMAN TRUST SONG.

LAMPERTUS GEDIKE, 1683.

Just as God leads me I would go;
I would not ask to choose my way.
Content with what He will bestow,
Assured He will not let me stray.
So as He leads, my path I make,
And step by step I gladly take,
A child in Him confiding.

Just as God leads I am content;
I rest me calmly in His hands;
That which He has decreed and sent,
That which His will for me commands,
I would that He should all fulfill;
That I should do His gracious will
In living or in dying.

Just as God leads I will resign;
I trust me to my Father's will;
When reason's rays deceptive shine,
His counsel would I yet fulfill—
That which His love ordained as right
Before He brought me to the light—
My all to Him resigning.

Just as God leads me I abide;
In faith, in hope, in suffering true.
His strength is ever by my side;
Can aught my hold on Him undo!
I hold me firm in patience, knowing
That God my life is still bestowing,
The best in kindness sending.

Just as God leads I onward go;
Oft times 'mid thorns and briers green,
God does not yet His guidance show,
But in the end it shall be seen
‖ : How by a loving Father's will,
Faithful and true, He leads me still. : ‖

A man with grace in his heart, and Christian cheerfulness in his face, and holy consistency in his behaviour, is a perpetual sermon, and the sermon differs from others in that it has but one head, and the longer it continues the better.

When you think of it, friends, the worries,
The troubles that wear you out,
Are often the veriest trifles,
That common sense would flout;
They write the forehead with wrinkles,
They bow the shoulders with care,
Yet a little patience would show you, friend,
Just how the weight to bear.

Science and Art.

Dr. B. W. Richardson has found that gutta percha softened in hot water, or in hot water and glyeerine, may be made to absorb almost any desired styptic and antiseptic substances. The mass can then be drawn out or molded into any required shape, and as a surgical dressing will serve the purpose both of adhesive plaster and splint.

The water power of the Rhone in the neighborhood of Geneva is now largely used for driving electric motors, of which 216, with a total of 1,565 horse power, have been in operation during the past year. The smallest motors, of one-third horse power, have been employed for running sewing machines, while the largest one, of 625 horse power, drives the dynamos for lighting Geneva.

At a meeting of the Physiological Society of Berlin, it was given as a fact that when the bee has filled his cell, and has completed the lid, a drop of formic acid, obtained from the poison bag connected with the sting, is added to the honey by perforating the lid with the sting. The formic acid preserves honey and every other sugar solution from fermentation. Most of the insects that have a stinging apparatus similar to that of the bee are collectors and storers of honey, so the sting has a double function—it is a weapon and a pickle.—Health Monthly.

Items of Interest.

The new university at Washington City is no longer a possibility, but an assured success. The city of Washington has furnished $100,000 for the land, and $31,500 has been raised toward the endowment.

The female members of St. George's church in Berlin have the privilege of casting their votes at the election of a pastor, according to an old custom; the only church in Germany where women have the right of voting.

Rev. Phillips Brooks is now Bishop of Massachusetts, or will be as soon as consecrated. A majority of the Bishops and 37 of the Standing Committees of the 52 dioceses in the United States have now recorded their votes in favor of his confirmation as Bishop. This settles the question of his election.

The Syrian Orphans' Home in Jerusalem, established by Pastor Schueller in 1860, has, in thirty years, sent out about 700 pupils, the majority of these having been at this Home for a period of from six to ten years, acquiring a good rudimentary education and learning some useful art or trade. About 600 of these young Arabs are now scattered over the Orient. None are allowed to go until they are eighteen years of age.

On a recent Sunday, about 12 o'clock, grasshoppers stopped the Rock Island passenger train east of Lamont Junction, in Colorado, and about fifty miles west of the Kansas State line. They covered the track for a distance of five miles, and the wheels of the engine slipped helplessly. Another engine was procured at Lymon, which pushed the train through, it taking two hours to accomplish this, even with two engines. The "hoppers" were too young to fly.

For twenty-one years, Henry C. Bowen, proprietor of the Independent, has had a celebration of the Fourth of July at Roseland Park, Woodstock, Conn., his summer residence. Distinguished statesmen and other persons of note have delivered addresses there, and the recent one was no exception to the previous ones. A reception at "Roseland Cottage" on the previous evening was crowded by a thousand guests, and among the orators of the day were Gens. Joseph R. Hawley, who presided, and O. O. Howard, Chauncey M. Depew, Esq., Hons. N. W. Aldrich, William McKinley, Jr., Murat Halstead, and Rev. Dr. David Gregg. The addresses and proceedings are given in the Independent of the 9th inst., and are of great interest and value.

Hints and Recipes.

Lemon juice will whiten frosting, cranberry or strawberry juice will color it pink, and the grated rind of an orange strained through a cloth will color it yellow.

Put camphor gum with your new silverware and it will never tarnish as long as the gum is there. Never wash silver in soapsuds, as that gives it a white appearance.

A good way to discover the presence of moths, and also to destroy them, is to place a lighted candle in a basin of water. The moths will be attracted by the flame, and will drop into the water.

Maple syrup, to be pure and just right to eat, should weigh about 11½ pounds to the gallon. When poured out in a glass, it should be clear and amber hued, without containing dark streaks. If, after it has stood in the dish a few hours, a dark sediment is found in the bottom, it is not pure maple syrup.

A writer in the Medical and Surgical Reporter claims that he has successfully treated severe cases of membranous croup by keeping the patient breathing the steam of hot vinegar, produced by putting hot irons or bricks in a pan of vinegar, renewing the hot irons continually, so making a cloud of steam.

To wash Madras curtains, beat and shake out the dust very thoroughly, and then wash in bran water. Boil a quart of bran in a bucketful of water, strain, and put the curtains in while it is yet moderately warm. Rinse in more bran water, and hang up smoothly in the shade to dry. Press them on the wrong side with a not very hot iron.

SUMMER DRINK.—1 ounce of tartaric acid, 1 ounce ginger root, 2½ gallons water, 1 good-sized lemon, 1½ pounds white sugar, 1 gill yeast. Slice lemon, bruise sugar, and mix all, except yeast; boil the water and pour on, letting it stand till cooled to blood heat. Add the yeast and stand in the sun one day. Bottle at night, tying the corks. In two days it may be used.

The following is a cure for bee stings: Take a pinch in the fingers of common salt, put on the place stung and dissolve with water, and rub with the finger. If not relieved in one minute, wet the place with liquid ammonia. For bites and stings, apply instantly, with a soft rag, most freely, spirits of hartshorn. A lump of wet saleratus applied to the spot stung by a wasp will afford instant relief. The alkaline properties neutralize the poison. A bruised leaf of common poppy applied to stings will give immediate relief.

The great secret of cures wrought at the various health-homes throughout the country is as much in the regularity with which all the rules of hygiene are observed as in the rules themselves; hours are allotted for exercise, for rest, for sleep, for eating, and enforced observance of these soon restores the dyspeptic, the hypochondriac, the worn-out and exhausted patient, to health and strength again. The same regimen adopted at home would doubtless often produce substantially the same effect, though change of air and general environment are potent factors in many cures.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

Farm and Garden.

It is estimated that the food of one cow and 100 hens is twenty cents per day on an average. As to which will prove the more profitable depends on the mode of management.

John Kerns, of Clarksboro, N. J., says he has marketed about 17,000 quarts of strawberries from seven acres of land, and has received between fourteen and fifteen hundred dollars for them.

In giving salt to animals it should be done in a manner to allow each animal to partake of as much as it desires and prefers, instead of giving the salt in the food, thereby compelling some animals to use more salt than they wish. Each animal has its individual preference, and the proper mode of allowing salt is to place it where the animals can have access to it at all times as each will use only the amount needed.

Keep down suckers in the raspberry and blackberry plantations, leaving only about four or five new canes in the hill for bearing next year. Treat all others as weeds and cut them down remorselessly with the hoe. Pinch back these new canes when they reach the height of about four feet, which will induce them to become stocky and to throw out laterals. Vacant hills may be filled up by transplanting suckers taken up on a wet day with a spadeful of soil about the roots, and even new beds may be set out in this manner where there are plenty of young sucker plants to be had.

RESOLUTIONS.

At a special meeting of the Consistory of Wentz's Reformed church, the following resolutions were adopted on the death of Samuel W. Hendricks:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His wise providence, to remove from our midst our beloved brother and member of the consistory, be it

Resolved, That we feel the loss of one whose calm judgment, wise counsel, and deep interest in every thing pertaining to the Church distinguished him and caused us always to regard him with love and respect.

Resolved, That our congregation has lost a valuable officer, and a most worthy member, and that which he did will be spoken of him as a memorial to him.

Resolved, That we recognize his removal from us as a special act of Divine providence, feeling assured that what may seem to us a sad loss is to him eternal gain; bowing in grief and sorrow yet in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well for the good of all His creatures.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family, and pray that God may sustain them in this bereavement, and that we may all ever cherish the fond hope of a glorious reunion in heaven.

Resolved, That these resolutions be recorded on the minutes of the consistory, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and that they be published in the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER and Montgomery Transcript.

IN MEMORIAM.

At the family homestead, near McEwensville, Pa., on Friday, June 19, near midnight, Mary E., wife of Samuel Derr, peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, at the age of 49 years.

When the bridegroom came, He found her as one of those virgins with lamp well trimmed, filled with oil and burning.

Although only in her fiftieth year, this sister had for nearly half of that time been in frail health.

During the last sixteen months she was especially afflicted, having been a victim of paralysis in one of its severest forms. All of these bodily afflictions, however, were the means of developing a most sweet and loving temperament, which won not only the devotion of the members of her family, but a host of the warmest friends.

Her whole life was spent in the church of Christ, and the vows assumed were performed in faithfulness. Whenever health permitted, she was an attentive listener to the Word of God and a devout worshipper in the sanctuary.

In her home life she was quiet and unassuming, a faithful wife, and a tender, loving mother, and performed these duties in such a way as to leave an effectual impress. To do or to suffer, as her Lord saw fit, it was all right to her.

The church of which she was a member; the missionary society in which she was ever active and interested; and her husband and two children, though they mourn, yet mourn as those who have faith in the Word of God, and rejoice that she was one of whom it may well be said: "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a regular meeting of the Missionary Society of the St. John's Reformed church of McEwensville, held July 4th, the following action was taken relative to the death of Mrs. Samuel Derr:

WHEREAS, It hath pleased an all-wise and merciful Heavenly Father to remove from our midst this beloved sister, who, for four years, was a co-laborer with us; and,

WHEREAS, It is but just that we should pay a becoming tribute to her worth in life, and her memory in death, therefore,

Resolved, By the Missionary Society of the Reformed church of McEwensville, that for the interest and devotion which Sister Derr ever manifested for the best interests of our society and the extension of Christ's kingdom upon earth, we here record our appreciation of her, recognizing in her death not only a loss to the society but also the sundering of a link of pleasant Christian fellowship.

Resolved, That the bereaved family has the heartfelt sympathy of this society in their hour of affliction, and that we affectionately commend them to Him whose strong arm and loving heart can alone sustain and comfort them.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, published in the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER, and entered upon the minutes of the society.

DIED.—June 25th, 1891, at his home, near Mount Pleasant, Pa., Elder Isaac Shupe, aged 76 years, 9 months and 11 days.

In Elder Shupe the Mt. Pleasant charge lost one of its oldest and most respected members. In 1843 Mr. Shupe was married to Miss Margaret Barnhart. The issue of this happy union was two sons, who remain with the widow to mourn their loss.

In 1846 Mr. Shupe united with the Reformed church, in whose midst he has been an office bearer for nearly 40 years. His life was a model of purity and piety. Of a naturally modest and retiring nature, he never cared to have the world know his inner nature. It was only to a smaller circle of his most intimate friends that his true worth was known. It needed that closer fellowship in actual life to reveal his inner character and purity.

Early in the fall his health began to fail him, but he lingered on through the winter and spring, gradually growing weaker until the end came. Conscious to the end, he seemed to realize from the first that his end was drawing near. Not a word of complaint was heard, but patiently he bore it all. Speaking of his approaching end, it was always with assurance of perfect peace with God, and so he died in that peace "from which none ever wakes to weep."

His remains were taken to St. John's church, where the services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. C. R. Ferner, assisted by Rev. Ressler, of the U. B. church.

C. R. F.

DIED.—At her home, on East Second street, Frederick, Md., July 9, 1891, after a lingering illness of consumption, Mrs. Laura J. Lindsay, in the 44th year of her age.

She was the daughter of the late Wm. Davis. She leaves an aged mother, and an afflicted daughter, who are all that are left in the now deeply bereaved home.

Mrs. Lindsay was well and favorably known in this community. The whole of her life was spent here. She was a consistent member of the Reformed church, and no one was more faithful according to her opportunities. The church bell never rang out its invitation to come to service, that she did not promptly respond. She was in her place on the Lord's Day, at the mid-week service and with her class in the Sunday-school, as long as her health would permit her to do so. In the vocation in life which she filled, she proved herself a modest, self-sacrificing, heroic, Christian woman, and performed all her duties to the best of her ability.

As long as it was possible, she exerted herself to care for herself and those dependent upon her. She bore her long affliction with patient resignation and met the coming of the death angel with a confident hope.

To the tired and weary pilgrim sweet and blessed rest has come. Her remains were borne to Mt. Olivet cemetery, where they await the joyful awakening of the resurrection morning.

THIRD ANNUAL CONVENTION OF BROTHERHOOD OF ANDREW AND PHILIP.

The third annual convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, to be held in Baltimore September 25, 26, and 27, is rapidly approaching. The growing popularity of the organization, whose claim to the sympathy and regard of the church is meeting with increased recognition each year; the admission into its fold of the Presbyterian churches; the active inquiry into its character and object from other denominations, plainly indicate an enthusiastic and successful session. This organization seems to meet, better indeed than anything now in existence, the growing needs of the times, and secures to the pastor the hearty support and co-operation of a portion of his congregation from which, unfortunately, but little has been expected in the past. The peculiar aims of the Brotherhood outline a plan of action in which the young men can be especially effective. St. Paul says, "I have written unto you, young men! because ye are strong," and it is this bounding, restless, vigorous strength of the young men that has carried the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip to the van to-day, and through it done so much to revivify the church. Oh if we can only learn to appreciate and understand the young men, there is in their aggressive spirits a tide of force and virtue that will help the church advance gloriously! There are hundreds, aye, thousands, in the bosom of our church, who are ready and willing, but know not in what direction to turn their hand. This restless energy must be utilized and directed; this yearning for action must be satisfied. The young must be ever moving—if not in one direction, then another; if not right, then wrong. What possibilities are passing while we wait! What opportunities offered in vain! What precious souls allowed to wander from the fold! There should be a chapter of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip in every congregation—it could do no harm—might, and if the experience of the past is an indication, would do much good. The Baltimore chapters are hard at work outlining and perfecting their plans for the convention, and are anxious to have every congregation in the church represented. Accommodations will be provided for all, ministers, delegates and members, and an earnest invitation is extended to as many as will come to be present.

We wish to urge, in no uncertain words, the importance of this convention; we trust that every congregation, whether it has a chapter or not, will be represented; we hope especially there will be a large attendance of the ministers of our church, so that those who are not familiar with the plans and purposes of the Brotherhood may know what it is accomplishing; that those who have noted with pleasure its steady advance in the past may have new cause to rejoice; and that all may join in thanksgiving to "our Father above" for His mercies in the past and bow in fervent prayer for His blessing upon our future labors.

FROM VIRGINIA.

The excitement of the boom in Virginia is over. The time for sober reflection is at hand. The great question with many is how to save themselves from financial ruin. With others the question is how to prepare for future work and progress. Among the latter class is the Reformed church. That the South will develop her resources more and more is a settled fact. It is also true that the wild speculation of last year will be a blow to progress for some time to come. But time will adjust values and put affairs on better footing.

To be prepared for the change so as to take part in the more substantial growth which must come in time is the problem that now confronts us as a church.

What is to be done? We have members at Basic City, also at Buena Vista. A lot can be secured at each place provided we build a church. But there is an element of uncertainty as to the growth of these places which makes an investment to partake the nature of a risk. Are we as a church justified in taking such a risk? As we look back and see how often we have missed good opportunities in the past we are inclined to say we should make an effort to hold on to what we have at these places. This especially at Buena Vista.

As to Roanoke I see no reason why I should change my opinion as to its being the best opening the Reformed church has southward. No doubt many have been frightened at the large figures given by Superintendent Whitmer as the price of a lot. This needs a few words of explanation. The lot in question is a corner one—65 feet wide, 151 feet deep, widening as it goes backward to 81 feet, making ample room for a church and parsonage. Moreover it has on it a fine frame house. For $200 part of this house could be changed into a neat chapel, seating fully 150 persons. From this it can be seen that with but a small outlay a home can be secured, which, though small, will serve until a better building can be secured. Taking the location, size of lot and building into consideration, the price is not so wild as it at first appears.

But to secure a lot money is necessary. The treasuries of the church have little in them for such purposes. What is to be done? For once we can say our misfortune is also our gain.

Real estate to put it mildly is dull. The prospects are that the bottom has not been reached. The time for this is not far off. When it comes it behooves us to be ready to take advantage of it.

In order to take advantage of the fall in prices and also secure a church home your missionary has received instructions to canvas for funds. Where can he go? Reader, are you interested in this work? If so I will be glad to hear from you in such measure as your heart prompts. For the next six weeks I will be in Pennsylvania to present my cause. Who will help?

Asking the prayers and help of all, I remain, Yours in the Lord,

LEWIS REITER.

NOTES ON THE MEETING OF CLASSIS OF EAST SUSQUEHANNA.

Classis convened at Millersburg on the evening of May 20th, when the retiring president, Rev. G. B. Dechant, preached the opening sermon. The theme of his discourse was, "The time is short." 1 Cor. 7 : 29.

The president pointed out the fact that a short period is allotted to man in which to accomplish or fulfill the mission for which God destined him. The ministry is no exception. The statement was made that to him it seems that not many years have passed, so short seems the time, and yet in this period he passed from being one of the youngest men of Classis to the second oldest. He has lately passed his sixty fourth birthday. Full of zeal and energy, rich in experience, he was fully equipped to direct the theme of his discourse principally to the young ministers of Classis. Stress was laid on the fact that they are not only to be mindful of the Master's call, but ever to remember the shortness of time in which to perform the Lord's work.

Almost, if not every Classis has its aged ministers, whose work in the Lord's vineyard is valued. Men who stood in the younger days of their manhood and in the beginning of their ministry, when our beloved Reformed Zion was struggling for existence and recognition, who are now known by the younger ministers of Classis and called "Father."

This Classis has its Father Duenger, who is a pioneer minister of this section of the Reformed church, and identified with this Classis for half a century. There are, indeed, few men who carry with them the love, respect and reverence that is accorded this aged servant of Christ by the young ministers of this Classis. This is as it should be.

But there are also, indeed, few men who manifest the deep unselfish interest in the prosperity and success of the young ministers of Classis in their chosen life work that is shown by this aged disciple of Christ.

That cordial, yea, fatherly greeting—that pressure of the hand—that smile of friendliness, drives away every barrier and all are drawn to him and around him by that spirit of peace and good will towards all men. Every hand manifests its willingness to smooth the rugged pathway and lighten the burden of the cross of this aged veteran of Christ as he is bearing it to his Calvary.

Our other "Father," Joshua H. Derr, has laid down his cross and taken up his crown. A year ago he met with us at Ashland. It was here that he tendered to Classis his resignation of the Catawissa charge, on account of physical inability for the full performance of his pastoral duties. Every heart was moved with the deepest sympathy when this "Father" committed this portion of his work to Classis as no longer able to carry it forward. Ever ready in debate he would speak upon a question with telling effect. A letter in lieu of a report was received from him during the session of Classis at Millersburg. His feebleness prevented him from doing any pastoral work at that time. His love and respect was tendered the brethren and thought he would not be able to meet with East Susquehanna Classis again. His prophecy came true. He died at Bellevue, Ohio, June 21st, in the 69th year of his age. Honored and respected in life by this Classis, and in death lamented.

In looking over the members of this class as they were congregated in its sessions we noted a Dechant, a Derr, a Hottenstein, upon whom the mantle of "Fatherhood" will soon be laid.

This Classis is composed almost entirely of young ministers. Many changes were made during the past year. Rev. C. B Schneder's call to Shamokin, Raymond E. Butz's to Catawissa, J. J. Stauffer's call to the Lykens Valley charge were confirmed.

The charges of this Classis are now provided with pastors except, I regret to state, that Rev. Geo. J. Lisberger has resigned the Deep Creek charge. This makes the only vacancy in this Classis.

Some years ago there was a mission at Lykens, but for some reason it was discontinued and finally abandoned. The mission had a church building there but was finally sold. Lykens is in a coal district and many members of the country charges have moved to this place. So is Tower City a coal town, and many members of the Reformed faith have moved there.

These two towns, in connection with Johnstown, about two miles from Tower City, petitioned Classis to organize there and create preaching points and supply them with a pastor. Classis heard their petition and granted their request. A committee consisting of Revs. Derr, Siegel and Stauffer were appointed to take charge of these interests to organize and aid in the securing of a pastor. This is not a revival of the old Lykens interest; but, so to speak, a new beginning.

The interest in Armstrong Valley may be regarded as a mission in this Classis.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

These people are, indeed, self-helpful. The little aid they asked from Classis was cheeriully granted. These people were served by pastors from other charges or who lived at a distance from them, and therefore the field could not be so thoroughly cultivated. Their pastor, Rev. C. W. E. Siegel, lives among them, in the pleasant little village of Fisherville. His report to Classis breathed life and hope, and showed a steady and sure growth of the Reformed faith there.

Rev. J. A. Danner is the missionary at the promising point at Mt. Carmel. This mission is fostered by Classis and by the Women's Classical Missionary Society. This mission also was strengthened by attaching an interest at Enterprise composed of members of the Shamokin charge. Mt. Carmel is a growing town in the coal district, eight miles north of Shamokin, to which many Reformed members moved to obtain employment. They will also find their mother church there to greet them.

LINCOLN CLASSIS.

The Lincoln Classiss convened in annual sessions in Grace Reformed church, Sioux City, Iowa, May 21st, 1891, at 8 o'clock, P. M.

The opening sermon was preached by the retiring president, Rev. S. Mease, D.D.

Rev. J. F. Butler was elected president; Rev. S. Mease, D.D., corresponding secretary; and T. F. Stauffer, treasurer. T. F. Stauffer is stated clerk.

There was a full attendance of Classis, except elders from Lincoln and Redfield missions.

The sessions were harmonious and the items of business duly considered. All subjects referred by Synod were approved, and pastors and consistories instructed accordingly. The new Hymnal was unanimously adopted.

The parochial reports read by the pastors and responded to by the elders, exhibited earnest and efficient work in the missions within the bounds of Classis. The Redfield mission, being without a pastor, there was no report. The stated clerk was instructed to correspond with the mission and secure a report, and, if possible, arrange for some preaching service for the time being.

The Sunday-school Convention of Classis convened in the same church on the 20th and 21st, holding three sessions.

The topics discussed were—"The Sunday-school as a Church Organization," by Rev. E. Erb; "The Claims of the Sunday-school upon the Membership of the Church," by Rev. J. F. Butler.

T. F. Stauffer presented a report upon permanent organization. The report was adopted, and under its provision, the organization resulted in the election of Rev. E. Erb, president; Elder H. Retelsdorf, vice-president; T. F. Stauffer, secretary; and Rev. J. F. Butler, treasurer. Rev. S. Mease, D.D., was elected general and statistical secretary, whose duty shall be to hold one mid-week Sunday-school convention in each charge, during the year; prepare and secure complete statistical reports from each school, and report to the next annual meeting at Imogene, Iowa.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Classis was organized Saturday evening, the 23rd, at 8 o'clock. The president, Mrs. T. F. Stauffer, not being present owing to sickness, Mrs. M. L. Firor was appointed president pro tem.

The meeting was of the most interesting character and reflected much credit upon the ladies entering the organization.

Mrs. Stauffer presented a paper, which was read by Miss Kate Kifer, upon the "Object and Import of Missionary Organizations." Miss Jennie Erb presented a paper upon "Woman's Position in the Missionary Field."

Both papers were instructive, showing that the cause of missions is by no means a stranger to the women of the church, and that they are laying hold of the work with willing hearts and hands.

Mrs. M. L. Firor read a prepared constitution, which was unanimously adopted, and under its provisions the following organization was effected — Mrs. T. F. Stauffer, president; Miss Kate Kifer, secretary; Miss Jennie Erb, corresponding secretary; Mrs. G. F. Weisz, treasurer. The presidents of congregational societies are the vice-presidents.

Efficient work will be done by this society. The work of the society was enthusiastic throughout. The members of Classis, by request, took active part in the discussions, bringing out many features of interest to the work of the newly organized society.

The regular sessions of Classis closed on Saturday, 3 P.M., the brethren having enjoyed a profitable meeting and the generous hospitality of the pastor and members of the mission. While the mission has had its trials in the past, and suffered much during the last few months from removals, yet the visiting brethren all feel that there is a large field for the mission, and that ultimately great good will be done and a self-supporting charge result.

Statistics.—Congregations, 7; members, 195; unconfirmed, 95; baptisms, infants, 13; adults, 5; confirmations, 11; reprofession and letter, 35; communed, 182; dismissed, 3; deaths, 1; Sunday-schools, 7; officers and teachers, 33; Sunday-school scholars, 213; benevolent contributions, $73.35; congregational purposes, $991.86.

These statistics are not complete, therefore subject to revision as soon as complete reports are made to the stated clerk.

The next annual meeting will be held in the Reformed church, Imogene, Iowa, May, 1892. T. F. STAUFFER, Stated Clerk.

AN ENDOWMENT INCIDENT.

In the sacred mount the command of God came to Moses, saying, "Let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them." Moses, according to God's command, informed the people that it was the Lord's will to have a tabernacle built for the performance of religious worship; and that He commanded him to speak to them to bring in their offerings, which were necessary for accomplishing the work. These offerings were not to be exacted, but the people were to present them willingly. All were invited to contribute something for an end so important, but it was left to each individual to act in the matter with perfectly free choice. The offering of every one was to be given willingly with his heart. By reason of the great readiness of the people to offer materials, more than enough were soon collected. Men, women, and children even, united in showing their zeal by contributions of various sorts that could be useful, till an order had to be publicly given for them to bring no more. Exodus 36: 5–7.

The command of God has also come to us, as a Synod, to endow a professorship in our "School of the Prophets." As ministers, it is our duty, like that of Moses, to inform our people, that it is God's will to have the Seminary properly endowed and equipped, so that ministers well qualified, "able rightly to divide the word of truth," may be sent forth, in order that God may dwell among us. For an end so important all are invited to contribute something. These offerings are not to be forced or wrung from the people, but each one is to give willingly, as the Lord has prospered him and from the heart. If the people are properly informed the great majority, like the Israelites, will willingly and cheerfully respond, and bring enough, and more than enough, for this object.

In the effort made in the Emmanuel charge in behalf of the Endowment Fund, we witnessed with joy and a thankful heart the willingness, cheerfulness and liberality of the people. We also witnessed the sacrifices made by some in behalf of this cause. Many might be held up, but let one example suffice. A little girl, who was received into the church by confirmation not a year ago, had made up her mind what she would give before the committee called at her home. Silver, gold, or greenbacks she had none—nothing save one pet lamb or sheep. She had tenderly cared for it, when forsaken by its mother, gently gathered it in her arms, and plentifully provided for all its wants. It grew up by her side, and was her daily companion in her walks in the enclosure near the house. When she heard of the Endowment Fund, unsolicited, she said, "Mother, I will give five dollars and sell my sheep to obtain the money." She thus gave not only the very best, but her all unto the Lord.

Of this sheep it can be truly and emphatically said:

Once I was the property of a little maid,
Now in the Endowment Fund I am laid.

How unlike the parable that the prophet Nathan spake to King David, were the actions of this little girl.

How many blessings, and how much wealth God allows some professing Christians to have, and if it were necessary, as He told David, He would even add more. If they cannot number their flocks and herds by hundreds and by thousands, they can count their earthly substance by so much, but some are loath even to spare one sheep for the Lord's cause. The professorship will be endowed, even if it has to be done by the little girls of the Synod with their pet lambs. F.

MERCERSBURG COLLEGE.

When this College closed its doors in 1880 it was nearly $15,000 in debt. All had been provided for except about $5,000 by the last annual meeting of the Potomac Synod. A committee was appointed by the Synod to secure the amount and free this property from debt, which is worth at least $40,000. It was hoped that this would be accomplished during the synodical year; with a united and earnest effort it can yet be done.

Let meetings be held in each church, if only a single session either during the day or evening—where addresses are made on our educational work with special reference to the wants of this Synod and the necessity of paying this debt, so that the young people of that section of the church may enjoy greater advantages. At some time during the session secure contributions from all present and afterward visit such as may have been absent. It will not require large personal subscriptions, but the many small ones will provide for the debt, do untold good, and crown with success another of the Synod's undertakings.

A good commencement has been made. While only five congregations have been canvassed, with a few personal subscriptions, we have $1300 toward the debt, and $900 of the claims assigned for the permanent use of the college. In short, if we raise $3,700 in addition to what we have thus far secured, the entire debt will be cancelled, and $900 will remain for endowment. The above includes two subscriptions of five hundred dollars each, which were given on condition that the whole amount be provided for.

With the 1st of August a special effort will be made along the whole line, and we ask the pastors to give their hearty cooperation and we can assure the church that it will not be long before the work will be completed. C. U. H.

INSTALLATION SERVICES AT ALTAMONT, ILL.

Two members of the committee appointed to install Rev. J. W. Alspach, on July 12th, 1891, Rev. D. N. Frantz and the writer were present, Bro. H. L. Beam having given notice of his inability to attend.

Bro. Frantz preached the sermon in his usual earnest manner, taking for his text, Matt. 21: 28, "Go work to-day in my vineyard." The discourse teemed with wholesome counsel and impressive admonition. At the close of the sermon the writer proceeded with the installation services. Thus the insignia of the pastoral relation were bestowed, and it is hoped the ties of this relation will grow stronger as time rolls on, until one common interest shall spur to action pastor and people alike for the ingathering of souls and fitting them for higher abodes, where ties of friendship shall never again be broken.

It is the opinion of the committee that the Board made excellent choice in selecting Bro. Alspach for the mission. His family is also well adapted to assist in leading the young onward to usefulness in the church.

The charge can congratulate themselves on the prospect through this double force to prosecute the Master's work in the midst of them. Hitherto, on the whole, the charge has not been as progressive as might have been expected. The time is at hand when the efforts of the pastor and the help of the Board must show better fruits.

It was pleasant to go back to our former home, to meet kind friends. It was pleasant to address the little congregation in the evening, as we had done for four year; pleasant to mingle with old acquaintances the next day; and when all was done, and the train carried us beyond the limits of the town, the anxious question came to mind, "What shall the harvest be?" JOSHUA WOLBACH,
Chairman.

Breakfast Fruit Cake

BY MARION HARLAND.

1 quart of flour, 2 cups of milk, 2 tablespoonfuls of butter, 1 tablespoonful of lard, ½ teaspoonful salt, 1 quart of strawberries, huckleberries, blackberries or raspberries, ½ cup of sugar, 2 teaspoonfuls of Cleveland's baking powder.

Sift flour, baking powder and salt together, chop in the shortening, stir in the milk with a wooden spoon. The dough should be just stiff enough to handle. Roll into two sheets, line a baking pan with one, put in the berries, strew with sugar, lay on the other sheet and bake. Cut into squares, split and eat hot with sugar and butter.

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

The leavening power of Cleveland's Baking Powder comes from cream of tartar with soda, nothing else; that is why Cleveland's is perfectly wholesome, leavens most, and leavens best.

SPECIAL MEETING OF EAST PENNSYLVANIA CLASSIS.

A special meeting of the East Pennsylvania Classis was held at Cherryville, Pa., on Wednesday, 22d inst.

Licentiate Morgan A. Peters was received from the Tiffin Classis, Synod of Ohio, and the call to him from Weissport confirmed. Revs. Thomas A. Huber, T. O. Stem and J. W. Mabry were appointed to install him on August 19.

Licentiate Wallace A. Wotring was received from Lehigh Classis and the call to Dryland church confirmed. Revs. J. O. Lindaman, G. A. Schwedes and J. E. Smith were appointed a committee to install him.

The most important business before the meeting was the trouble in St. Paul's church, Cherryville, Rev. Mr. Mabry, pastor. Classis first considered the question of the legality of the election of the officers on Sunday, June 21, and after a full discussion the election was declared valid in all respects.

The complaint of certain members of the congregation against the pastor was taken up, but referred back after a good deal of discussion, because under the Constitution, "the consistory must institute an immediate investigation into such complaints," and this had not been done. The tenor of debate showed that the course of the pastor was emphatically approved by the members of Classis.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Reading.—First Church, Rev. H. Mosser, D.D. The extinction of a sixteen-year-old church debt was appropriately celebrated on Sunday, July 19. Extensive and tasty decorations greeted the congregation. On an arch over the pulpit was printed, "The Lord is in His Holy Temple." On a scroll was inscribed: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit," etc. Two small banners graced the sides of the pulpit, one bearing the phrase, "The Fruit of the Spirit;" the other, "Faith, Hope, Charity."

A history of the remodeling was read by Mr. Levi R. Snyder. Mr. A. J. Fisher, ten years treasurer of the finance committee, read a report, giving the whole amount of money contributed during the present pastorate, also amount of property contributed for the new St. Paul's church. The following figures indicate the summary of said report:

Three lots on which the church is located,	$12,000 00
Cash realized on lots sold prior to 1873,	30,000 00
Benevolent contributions from 1873 to 1891,	15,613 67
Ordinary church expenses from 1873 to 1891,	54,455 08
Cost of remodeling in 1874,	41,362 26
Interest paid on debt during 16 years,	14,069 50
	$167,500 51

The pastor gave an address on "Lessons Learned."

At 6 P.M. the Sunday-school participated in the happy celebration. Many scholars during their entire life heard the song of the "church debt." The treasurer selected from his report such amounts which the Sunday-school was specially instrumental in gathering. Their effort resulted in bringing $9,337.76. The last act of the treasurer was to present the mortgage, once valuable, now worthless, for cremation.

Mr. Aug. F. Boas, now 77 years old, thirty-four years superintendent of this school (1845–1879), briefly explained the doomed paper, then applied the match. Then the vast congregation sang Gloria in Excelsis.

Incidents of the trying period were recited showing the good will manifested in voluntary offerings, and great sacrifices made on the part of those who had small means but consecrated hearts. The collections of the day amounted to $705.

Butler.—Licentiate H. E. Snyder has accepted a call to Bethany church, Butler, Pa. He has already entered upon his duties. His P. O. address is, accordingly, Butler, Pa.

A Reception. The members and friends of Bethany Reformed church, Butler, Pa., met at the residence of Rev. C. A. Limberg, Tuesday evening, July 21st, where they gave a reception and warm welcome to their pastor-elect, Lic. H. E. Snyder. The evening was unusually beautiful, and the home, so attractive by nature and grace, was decorated with the rarest flowers. Above the front door the word, "Welcome," made of flowers, fully expressed what each one felt during the whole evening in that Christian home. The first part of the evening was spent in pleasant, social intercourse, which brought pastor and people into closer relationship with each other, after which Henry Biehl introduced Father Limberg, who delivered an address of welcome in which he feelingly set forth the relations, duties and responsibilities of pastor, people and officers, and welcomed the young minister heartily on behalf of the people. Mr. Snyder made an eloquent but brief response to the words of welcome, and the warm reception tendered him and his young companion. Prof. J. C. Tinstman replied to the toast, "Our Ladies," in his usual characteristic way. He paid a glowing tribute to woman, her influence and work. After this feast of words came another feast, in which all indulged freely. It cannot be described. It was hugely enjoyed. Almost one hundred people were present. The event was a happy one. All were well pleased. Bethany Reformed congregation enters upon a new era. "Fear not, little flock; it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." You have a pastor now, with a helpmeet who, we believe, will prove herself a tower of strength on account of her excellent social qualities; Mr. H. E. Snyder is a graduate of Tiffin College, O., but took his theological course at Lancaster, Pa. We wish him and his accomplished young bride eminent success and God speed in this their first field of labor in the Master's vineyard. May there be such an ingathering of souls, such peace, such harmony, such Christian fellowship and love that their hearts will rejoice in the Lord. A FRIEND.

St. Clairsville.—Rev. S. Z. Beam, D.D. On Sunday, July 5th, a missionary society was organized in the Pleasantville congregation of St. Clairsville charge. About two-thirds of the members have joined it, and there is a fair prospect of having all the members in the society at an early day. All congregations of this charge now have missionary societies, and there are many indications that the great cause of missions is advancing in the affections of this people.

St. Petersburg.—Rev. Simon S. Miller. At a recent communion in St. Peter's Reformed church, of the above place, twenty persons were added to the congregation—five by baptism, nine by confirmation and six by renewal and letter of dismissal.

Amityville.—Rev. John H. Leinbach, who was requested by the Classis of Goshenhoppen to cease supplying the congregation at this place, acquiesced in the request, and preached on the 12th inst. his last sermon before it. Since then, at the request of the congregation, the Committee of Supply of the Classis has arranged that Rev. Leinbach shall serve the congregation until he has confirmed the Class of Catechumens he has had under instruction.

Jerseytown.—Children's Day was observed by the Sunday-school of the Strawberry Ridge congregation, Montour Co., Pa., on the 12th of July. Rev. W. G. Engle, pastor. Children's Day Service was used; in addition there were single recitations also recited. The church was beautifully decorated. A collection was lifted for the orphans at Womelsdorf, which amounted to $5.79. All seemed well pleased with the services.

"Mt. Pleasant.—First, Rev. C. R. Ferner." Under the above heading in our issue of July 23d, it was stated that "The communion was the smallest under the present pastor." The pastor informs us that this is incorrect. He says, "The records show that out of the first nine communions under the present pastorate there was only one so large as our last." We cheerfully make the above correction.

OHIO.

Dayton.—First Church, Rev. W. A. Hale, D.D. Holy Communion was observed July 12th by this congregation. Sixteen were added to the church. Rev. G. W. Williard, D.D., of Ursinus College, asisted the pastor. Services were held in the afternoon in the mission and a very successful effort was made to collect funds for the erection of a church on the two lots donated by Elder B. Kuhns. The building will be erected at once and will be ready for occupancy by October 1st. Dr. W. rendered good service also at this meeting.

Piqua.—Licentiate Albert Schoepp was ordained to the holy ministry and installed pastor at this place by a committee of Cincinnati Classis, of which Revs. Benj. Stern and F. O. Zesch were present.

KANSAS.

Hiawatha.—Rev. John A. Novinger has accepted a call to this place. He has already entered upon his duties there.

PERSONAL.

The friends of Rev. G. W. Williard, D.D., in Tiffin, O., gave him an impromptu reception at his son's residence, Dr. G. P. Williard, July 20th. It was a delightful occasion. His other son, Rev. E. R. Williard, was also present. The venerable Doctor was in fine spirits and greatly enjoyed meeting so many of the citizens of the city in which he dwelt so many years, and by his untiring labors in behalf of Heidelberg College left a monument that will speak of him for years to come.

NOTICE.

The program for the Pen-Mar Reunion, August 13, which gives promise of a rich treat, is being sent out to the several congregations, to the end that the choirs and people may make themselves familiar with the hymns and music to be used, that all may join heartily when they come together, in the singing. The numbers refer to the New Hymnal.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. E. Pitts-Moody, writes: "I Ask For Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair."

IN MEMORIAM.

Died at his residence No 6 Alder St., East Liberty Pittsburgh, July 16th, John George Wolff in the 73d year of his age.

Mr. Wolff had been a sufferer from acute disease for more than a year, and for the last six months has been, for the most time confined to bed. He was born in Chambersburg, and was a son of the late Barnard and Judith Anne Wolff, whose family were among the early members of Zion's Reformed church, in Chambersburg. His grandfather Christian Wolff was one of the corporators of the congregation. The interment was in the cemetery attached to the Church, and by the side of his ancestors, and his children. Although there is not now a representative of the family connected with the congregation, yet the representatives still hold the dear old spot in warm, affectionate remembrance, and return at times to particepate in worship, where their fathers lived, labored and died.

Mr. Wolff was married October 18, 1844, to Theresa R. May, daughter of Daniel May, Esq., of York, Pa. Six children were born to them, of whom Edward Wolff and Clarence M. Wolff with the wife, survive. B. Wolff, Esq., of Pittsburgh, Mrs. Catharine Lindsay of Chambersburg, Pa., and Mr. John D. Thomas of Adamstown, Md., also survive him. He received his education in Chambersburg, where he spent most of his life in business, and removed with his family to Pittsburgh in 1866, where he lived at the time of his death. Mr. Wolff, was a cheerful, genial gentleman and made many friends. He possessed fine conversational abilities and was always a welcome person in the social circle. He was a member of Grace Reformed church, Pittsburgh, Pa., and died in the Christian faith. The funeral services were held on Saturday in Zion's Reformed church, and were conducted by the pastor Rev. W.C. Cremer. C.

Editorial Notes.

—The Spiritual Conference which assembled at Lancaster, Pa., on the 29th ult., was largely attended and much interest was manifested. The papers read elicited much discussion and all no doubt, derived great benefit in being in attendance.

—The Reunion of the Reformed people in Western Pennsylvania, as will be seen from a notice elsewhere, will be held at Idlewild, August 13th. These reunions have been largely attended and the promise this year is that the attendance will be larger than ever.

—Rev. T. J. Stauffer, missionary at Lincoln, Nebraska, in this issue, makes a strong and earnest appeal in behalf of his work in that city. It is to be hoped he will receive the help from the Church he undoubtedly needs would our Church be represented in that rapidly growing city. A liberal response now will be worth more than in years hence.

—From a private letter just received from Rev. J. P. Moore, dated Sendai, Japan, July 8th, 1891, he informs us that he and Mrs. Moore will sail for this country in the steamer "Belgic," and will reach the city of Philadelphia, which they expect to make their home for a time, at least, about October 1st. We are sure our readers will wish them a safe voyage homeward and we also feel certain a warm "welcome home" will be given them by every one. It is the purpose of Mr. Moore to visit the Synods and the Church and bring the cause of Foreign Missions more prominently before the people so as to awaken a new interest in its behalf.

—We are in receipt of the Annual Catalogue of the Mission House of the Synod of the Northwest, Central Synod and the German Synod of the East of the Reformed Church in the United States, located at Franklin, Sheboygan county, Wis. The faculty is composed of seven professors, three of whom occupy chairs in both the Seminary and the College, with Prof. H. A. Muhlmeier, D.D., as head master. In the Preparatory Department, first class, there are 31 students; in the College proper, second class, 25; third, 9; fourth, 10 and fifth, 5; in the Seminary, first class, 5; second, 7; third, 10. Total number of students, 102. This institution has done a great work in preparing young ministers for work among the German portion of the Church. Our German brethren are to be congratulated upon the growth and prosperity of their institution.

—The minutes of the West Susquehanna Classis which met in Annual Sessions at Madisonburg, Pa., May 20–23, 1891, are printed in pamphlet form, making in all, 36 pages They make very interesting reading for distribution among the congregations within the bounds of the Classis, giving full account of its acts and proceedings and what is expected of pastors and people. The Heller Brothers Printing House, of Wiliiamsport, Pa., are the printers and have done well their part.

—The Obituary Department is the only one about which we receive complaints, and that principally because of delay in the appearance of contributions to it by pastors and friends of deceased persons. The MESSENGER is not the only paper that is subject to such. Others have had complaints, and in spite of repeated requests on their and our part, contributors will persist in sending articles of unnecessary length and containing more words than the limit fixed. For this reason there can be inserted only a few at a time, and hence the delay in the appearance of others. In self-protection other papers have had to limit the length of obituaries to a fixed number of words and charge for all above that number. We feel compelled to do something in that direction so that we may better accommodate contributors.

—Upon referring to notice at the head of that department in this issue, it will be found that the number of words for free insertiou hereafter will be limited to two hundred, and for all words above that number, one cent a word will be charged, and the money must always accompany the obituary. Also all poetry and resolutions will be charged for at the same rate. Of course memoirs of deceased ministers and their wives, and prominent laymen in the Church, will be excepted from this rule. Will pastors and others help us to remove this one cause of complaint? Here is an opportunity to practice condensation in writing which should not be neglected. The editor should not be asked to do this instead. And let it be understood we do not make this rule in order to make money, but simply to adopt a way by which the object named may be attained.

—It is announced in the Sunday-school Department of The Visitor, a monthly published by Trinity Reformed church, Dayton, O, Rev. Chas. E. Miller, pastor, that "The officers and teachers of Trinity Sunday-school have resolved that the Quarterly should be used at home and the Bible in the class. Will parents see that their children take Bibles with them to the school?" This, we opine, is a good move in the right direction. The Quarterly and other Sunday-school Lesson Helps are to be used in the study of the lesson, and home is the place where it is to be studied, and should then be left there, and in the class the questions be answered from memory, and the text and references be read from the Bible. It is also necessary that the teacher study the lesson thoroughly and not read, when before the class, everything that is in it from the Help in hand. To use the Helps in any other way is a hurt and not a good to either teacher or scholars, and, at the same time, prevents that familiarity with the Bible itself as a book which every student of the Word of God should have. It would be well if all Sunday-schools would adopt the course of the one referred to.

—A correspondent in response to our note upon the propriety of the founding of a Home for the Aged Ones of our Church, suggests that the buildings in Mercersburg, Pa., no longer occupied by Mercersburg College, would be admirably adapted for such a purpose. They undoubtedly would be, but the question may arise, would the location be best for the calling out of the benevolence of the Church, as if such a Home were located in one of our large cities? The first thing, however, to determine is, should we have such a Home? and if that be decided in the affirmative, just where it should be located would be easily settled. Let the Church think on this thing. It must be a work based upon faith and if it be so established it will surely be sustained, as has been the case in other denominations. The Lord will not let the work of those who undertake it in His name, to flag or fail.

—The Interior no doubt hits the nail on the head when it says:

"When you look for the causes of schism in any church you must look back of doctrine. It will always be found in the old controversy—the wish of men to dictate to other men and the unwillingness of other men to be dictated to."

—The Romish Church is at this time agitating the subject of the education of the children of its members in this country. Its leaders think that the children, being obliged to attend the public schools, and thus under other influences, is the principal cause for the loss, they say their Church has sustained in members. The Presbyterian in an editorial upon this subject, says:

"Here," in the public schools, "a slow and constant disintegration goes on which is irresistible, and which weakens the ties which bind the youth to the Church of their fathers. This is the secret of their constant agitation regarding the public school system. They declare that it makes for Protestantism, that it beguiles the second generation of the settlers in America almost insensibly from their faith, and weakens the power of the priest over them. Therefore, they must have their own schools, wholly under their influence, in which their faith is to be taught every day. The Catholic Review boldly avows this purpose. It says: 'Catholics are bound to build up a Catholic branch of the public school system where children will be educated as Catholics at the expense of the State.' But the basis of the whole system would be disturbed by the 'Catholic branch.' The States cannot teach any special form of religion in the schools common to all. All the principles which lie at the foundation of our government forbid such a use of the public fund. The people of this country will go into a long and bitter struggle before such a scheme reaches its accomplishment."

INVOCATION.

Source of Life: beyond my vision,
Give, O give new life to me;
May that breath from lands Elysian,
Fill my soul with melody.

Source of Strength: to all Thy creatures
Give, O give new strength to me,
That my life, in all its features,
May be more conformed to Thee.

Source of Light; to souls in darkness,
Shed Thy Light upon my way;
May Thy love, in all its fullness,
Fall like sunshine on each day.

Source of Patience; to Thy children,
Give, O give more faith to me;
With the weight of every burden,
May I have more trust in Thee.

Source of Wisdom; through the ages,
Guide me through this mortal life—
Grant to me, in all its stages,
Faith in Thee, through all its strife.

Source of Hope; to erring mortals,
I will lift my heart to Thee,
When I pass through death's dark portals,
Thou wilt still my comfort be.

Source of Love; the sum of all things,
Give, O give my needy soul
All the Strength, and Hope, and Patience,
I may need for its control.

GERMAN AND ENGLISH.

In the Reformed Church in this country there appears to be at present a far better understanding of each other between the German and the English elements than was formerly the case. Two generations ago the English-speaking part of our membership was comparatively small in numbers and striving for recognition and an opportunity to grow. The German-speaking membership was largely in the majority and somewhat suspicious of the influence which addressed it from the other side. It was not only that a change of language on the part of many congregations was involved; it was also feared that with it the Church would get on to uncertain seas of views and life. In this fear lay probably the main strength of the opposition to become an English-speaking as well as a German-speaking Church. Happily, all this has been peacefully and satisfactorily changed. Both interests now understand each other; both vie with each other for the upbuilding of a great, harmonious Reformed Church. The evidence of this state of things is multiplying from year to year, and in many ways.

More and more it is coming to be felt that our growth of new congregations, based upon a membership born in America, must be in the line of the English language. Especially is this the case in the larger towns and cities, and also in strongly mixed country communities. Some good work has been done in this direction, and we have little more than fairly begun the work. We can establish rapidly hundreds of English-speaking Reformed congregations all over this wide land: good, solid congregations, in centres of population and whatsoever goes with that. And the more definitely we insist on making them in every proper sense Reformed the more certainly they will grow and have a permanent future before them. This fact has been practically shown over and over again, and thus the cause for fear, as it once existed, has been finally removed. It has also been made clear within the last twenty years that the organization and progress of new English-speaking congregations does not, as a rule, injure or interfere with the life and development of the German-speaking section of the Church. On the contrary, the English portion of our Church, by virtue of its language, has brought the whole body in touch with our general American Christianity, and in this way mediates continually in favor of the other portion. It thus avoids friction, adds appreciation and forestalls the abruptness and isolation of position which would otherwise inevitably, sooner or later be felt. This is a great service.

On the other hand, the Reformed Church must look for new material, for such membership as it has not as yet in the United States, for all large additions to the stock at hand, if we may so express ourselves; for all this it must look mainly to the German population, and to the element in its membership which uses the tongue of the Fatherland. In the language of the German Bible, of Goethe and Schiller, the ungathered masses now here and coming hither annually by tens of thousands, have to be gathered in by us, or we shall not be able to gather them in at all. This fact has also worked itself out into full daylight, and is appreciated by the English portion of the Church almost as well as by the German. Every one sees it, and every one is desirous that it should have full consideration in all the general methods and activities of the denomination. This implies that we should have strong German Synods, educational institutions, boards of missions, education, charity in its various forms, and whatever builds up a general Church life. Not to be omitted, in this connection, is a German literature of papers and books such as our Cleveland Publishing House is becoming splendidly equipped to furnish. In truth, its wonderful success is the best possible evidence of the necessity for the work which it does so well.

MOUNTAINS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.—II.

Psalm 36: 6. "Thy Rightousness is like the great Mountains."

BY REV. S. L. KREBS.

Conclusion.

Mountains are a source of health. They purify the air which man breathes into his lungs. Climb up into the mountain heights and there you will find the oxygen and the ozone. The air in those higher strata is laden with a freshness and a fragrance, a purity and a power, that dilates the nostrils, brings the sparkle of sunrise to the eye, paints the bloom of mountain roses on the cheeks, and sends the pulses bounding, chasing each other on a rapid race of delight through the arteries and veins. One seems to quaff the very elixir of life.

When we look around us and see the wicked prospering, and observe how the high and the honorable ones of earth indulge passions and yield to impulses that would forever ruin the reputation of lesser men; and when we behold the corruption of the rich and vices of the poor and the general imperfections, dishonesties and iniquities of the race; and when such sights make us soul sick, and we feel that the whole moral atmosphere is freighted with impurities, miasma and disease; and we grow languid and disheartened; then is the time for us to get away from the world awhile, and climb up into the mountain heights of God's righteousness and breathe into our fainting souls the moral purity and health of those lofty summits, and take a sweeping view from that divine standpoint of the far-reaching workings of Providence, be refreshed with the thought that the wicked are in the end punished, and the good blessed; refreshed with the sight of the English middle classes rising up in rebellion against the immoralities of him who would be their king; refreshed with the sight that wherever God's righteousness prevails in the hearts of His true Israel, there the moral atmosphere is healthy and pure. And so we will come down again from that refreshing mountain climb and lofty view point, and go forward in our daily duties gladdened and strengthened with the assurance that God's righteousness is like the great health giving and purifying mountains.

Mountains are often a strong defense against an invading foe. It was the frowning barriers of the mountains of Oeta that protected ancient Greece from the devastating myriads of Persia. War critics assert that it was the "Rocky Hills of Gettysburg" as much as the skill of tacticians and the courage of soldiers that won the battle and saved the nation. Far up among the Alps are valleys that are snugly hidden away there like eagle's nests in the protecting embrace of towering peaks; two centuries ago, there lived in these mountain valleys the little Waldensian church, with a communicant membership of only 14,000, and with hearts all a flutter, like eaglets attacked by a vulture. For in 1686 the Roman Catholic Church swooped down upon the little nest in bitter and fanatical persecution, and the only thing, under God, that saved them from total extinction, were the mountains around them, which lovingly opened their valleys and caves and crevasses and offered them shelter and rest.

Fellow Christians, when suspicious calumniators and gossips sneeringly point out to others the faults and imperfections of us who are professing Christians and are faithfully trying to do our best, let us not rely on our own righteousness for defense and vindication, but let us do as the Greeks did, retire behind the mountain range, the range of God's righteousness, let us hide our imperfections behind the perfect righteousness of Jesus Christ, for then it will defend us and turn the poisoned shafts of maligners back into their own teeth.

When the enemies of the Church marshal themselves and the foes of the Bible gather in thick ranks, let us not pause to squabble in the valley about sectarian specks and inerrancy, but, like our countrymen at Gettysburg, let us climb the everlasting hills and take a firm stand on God's righteousness, for that moral rock cannot be undermined, circumvented nor battered down. It has no variant texts nor jarring sects, and from that position we can better fight the enemy, for such a position insures victory. The very position is victory.

When subtle temptations assail us from within and swoop down upon us from without, let us follow the example of the persecuted Waldenses, let us creep into the cleft of the Rock that is higher than we or hide in its shadow; let us creep into the crevasse of prayer; for, hidden away in these secret shades, temptations cannot find us; they will but beat and surge against the adamantine rock of Christ's righteousness like the billows of ocean against the ramparts of Norway, whilst our souls will repose in safety and peace within.

Finally God's righteousness is like the great mountains because of its Beauty and Grandeur. Crossing the Alleghenies on bicycle-back I encountered the famous scene on the Juniata ridge which the mind of every traveler indelibly photographs. At various points of the compass huge forest-clad camel-backs loomed up and toyed with the clouds, that clustered around their summits like gray locks around a Titan's forehead. It seemed too as if the Titan had just had some of his locks trimmed, for a few of the cloudlets had strayed down the mountain side, and were gently resting half on the giant's shoulders and half in the air. Looking to the west I saw one ridge rising up beyond another, with others back of these, and still another frowning over those, and yet another peeping over the last, the most distant one seeming to meet the very heavens and enter therein.

I stood on one of the summits of imagination and surveyed the world of life and thought. I saw certain peaks of God's righteousness dashing skyward around whose ethereal heights the graces of heaven seemed to cluster in loving embrace. Turning, I glanced over the realms and saw one ridge of God's righteousness looming up directly before me in the realms of nature, all things therein nicely adjusted and rightly related. Beyond this stretched another ridge of God's righteousness in the realms of beauty. Frowning over this God's ridge of law in the realm of science. Still further beyond this His range in the realm of philosophy. Higher still God's righteousness in the realm of morality. But the highest of all and nearest heaven, nay that seemed to meet and enter it, was the realm of religion, the righteousness of Jesus Christ, the righteousness of providence. Nay the view was not cut off even here. For the next series of mountain ranges I saw was in heaven itself. What the mountains are in this world God's righteousness is in the next. Some people are wondering whether in the spiritual world there will be such a thing as a spiritual landscape, mountains and fountains, rivers and trees. Relying on revelation and analogy I am strongly inclined to reply in the affirmative to this question. In the geography of heaven there are fountains and rivers, but they are filled and flowing with what we here call LIFE. The trees there are composed of what we here call HEALTH, for there grows the tree whose leaves are for the HEALING of the nations. The atmosphere there is not a mixture of three gases, but the pure sparkling substance LOVE. And so finally, the mountain ranges of heaven which beautify and variegate the landscape, are composed of God's righteousness, and just as here on earth the rocky core of all the mountain ranges is connected with the solid interior rock of the whole planet, so the ranges in heaven are connected with God's universal righteousness which sustains all the realms and creatures and things of that illimitable world. On the summits of those ranges grow the trees of health; down their slopes trickles the fountain of living water, and at their base flows the river of LIFE. They are fanned by the breezes of love, and over all shines the Lamb who is the light thereof. What an unspeakable joy to drink at that fountain, to wander by those still waters, to rest under the shadow of those trees, to climb those mountains of heavenly transfiguration with Jesus our blessed Master, and from the heights of God's heavenly righteousness view the eternal landscape o'er!

THE MISSIONARY GUARDIAN

The Missionary Guardian is a valuable addition to the literature of the Church. It is devoted to the discussion of a subject in which all Christian people should be interested. To gain this interest they should know the wants, efforts and successes of the Church in this work. The Church, east, west, north and south should see to it that the Missionary Guardian reaches every family. Its cost is a trifle; its benefits incalculable. I have been a regular and attentive reader of it, and am delighted with the energy and talent which is displayed in its pages, and, with others, am surprised that its circulation is not four times the number it now is. To do its best work it should receive the hearty support of the ministry,—not simply a permissive, but an active, co-operative support. There must be some reason why our ministers are so slow in taking hold of this work. The fact is, the ministry are, as by virtue of their office they must be, primarily the pivot on which the whole machinery of Church work must turn. The old adage, "like priest like people," is as true to-day as ever. If your minister is noted for his social qualities, the probability is, he will cultivate the social in his visits to the neglect of his pastoral functions. His visits to the family will be taken up with the discussing of the current events of the day or the gossip of the congregation, and will be conspicuously free from the subjects which should never be omitted, as being for the spiritual growth of Church members; and when the visit ends, there is no savor of prayer or benediction left with the family. So, also, if the minister's heart is not in Church work, missions, education, Church extension, but in the preparation of fine sermons, his people will most likely exhaust themselves in extolling his sermons, and, when he asks for money for some special Church work, they will not respond. I do not mean to insinuate that our ministers are thus, but they may well practice all the cautions to avoid such a character.

There is a good reason why many of our ministers are slow in the work of missions, especially; and why we have heard so little on the cause of missions from our pulpits, except on special occasions. From 1850 up to 1875 (I use these dates as only approximate) our Church was engaged in an earnest discussion of questions pertaining to dogma and worship, such as some of our sister churches are about to engage in now, only under different names. Most of the ministers who entered their office previous to the year 1875, heard little of the cause of missions; indeed, during that discussion, everything else was lost sight of. In one year, about 1865, the whole amount of donations for foreign missions was little over $50, from the whole Reformed Church in the United States. Only after the Church had exhausted herself in the controversy and began to realize that the spiritual life of her people could not be fed on a controversy about dogma, free or read prayers did she begin to return to the consideration of her needs in practical work. The mission cause at home was sickly, even unto the little missionary box of a few earnest women, who in many instances had to see to sending even that to the missionary. It was by the establishing of a foreign mission, the mission of Japan, that the true life of missions began to pulsate through the hearts of the people. The pulsation was not strong and regular. There is necessity to supply life with proper food. The cause of foreign missions always makes one feel like fulfilling the highest idea of "hoping for nothing in return."

This subject of missions, which is so important, is very seldom the theme of sermons in the regular Lord's Day service. The ministers seem to feel that the monthly meeting of a missionary society on a week day, where the proportion of women to men often is as eight to one, is quite sufficient to the demands of this great work of missions. Thus the men and boys of the Church hear little of the cause of missions. This fact may be in some measure an answer to the question, why are women so active at present in the cause of missions. They hear more about the subject of missions than men, and therefore they are more deeply interested. I am glad to see them organizing so calmly, so thoroughly, and so solidly and efficiently for this work. I notice in the Missionary Guardian that their societies are active. They are working in a practical way, cultivating a missionary feeling among the people by their own zeal and enthusiasm, as well as by distributing missionary information, thereby laying the ground-work for large success.

If the ministry are truly in earnest in this work of missions and Church extension, let them talk of it as they go among their people, and in their visits to families. Let them make frequent exhortations from their pulpits of the essential character and necessity of missions, as involving the very heart of Christianity, and the blessing of God will follow their labor, and the Church will be quickened to a more earnest life in every department of her work. FOR SUMMER READING.—II.

"From out of the Old Testament we enter into the New. Out of the fulness of the times is unfolded the fulness of revelation. The root and stem of Jesse, which grew slowly through the centuries of the Old Dispensation, in a day bends and expands into a flower. How swift the course of events. One day is as a thousand years. The period of one human life comprehends germinally all the Gospel that we need to know under our present dispensation, all that we shall ever know till the final appearance of our Lord."

Beautiful, poetical and true is the above extract from our Professor Bowman. And when we consider the moral force and purpose of the Bible we find an emphasis to the closing words of the above extract.

It is here, we have long thought, that we have the true test of Swedenborg. Presuming not to judge him as a scholar, a thinker, a devout man, a teacher for truth, we find that in what he honestly believed was a new revelation given to himself, there is much said on subjects upon which the Scriptures are largely silent, but there is no reaching beyond the moral force and teaching of the Bible. In the sublime fulfillment of the law by the love of the Redeemer is revealed a moral force and example which says to all so-called revelations, thus far shalt thou go, but no farther.

Not a moral precept nor injunction, not an inspiring example nor word, beyond what is found in the Sermon on the Mount or in the death of Jesus, can Swedenborg or any seer give to the Church.

When God speaks His words are of continuous force. When He said: "Let there be light" and light was, there was no need to repeat His word. It is once for all, and it remains for us to become more and more receptive of that word that we may partake more largely of its fulness.

This fulness of the Divine Word unfolding and revealing its grace and power as it reaches man, comes to humanity in our weak and imperfect state. Seen of men and believed on in the world it is apprehended, by those whom it has apprehended, in varying degrees. It asks no proof—it simply speaks. It accepts all that human wisdom and eloquence and piety have said in its defence, but it needs no such defenders. We may need them—it does not. It is self-authenticating—and here is its power. To the lowly and unlearned, as to the mighty and learned, it reaches the depths of the heart and lays hold of us before we can rightly lay hold of it.

In my pastoral labors I was called upon to visit a man who in his youth had been a heavy drinker and a fighter. For many years he had been a faithful member of the Church under the pastor who had confirmed him and under myself. In his last illness the recollection of his youthful transgressions swept over his soul with crushing power. He felt like the Psalmist when he begged God to forgive the sins of his youth, but he could see no light amid the overhanging clouds. As I approached his house I met the physician who said he had left him in a terrible state and that he had been unable to afford him the slightest relief.

I found him in a wretched plight. Haggard, tossing on his bed, weeping and groaning, he seemed like one without hope. Yet he had been a good, kind-hearted and devout man. But he was in the depths. All that I said seemed but to add fire to the flames that were consuming him, and I sank back, wearied and baffled, in my chair by his side, hearing his ejaculations and cries but silent. At last, and almost involuntarily, I said, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." I quoted the beautiful words of Isaiah, "Come let us reason together," etc. For every doubt I gave him a text of Scripture, till, with the light of hope in his eyes he raised up in his bed, and stretching his long thin arms toward me, cried out, "Give me more of that."

When I left him he was calm and restful, soothed by the word of God. What morphine could not do God's Word accomplished and in healing the wounds of the soul gave rest to the tired body. And in that state be continued till some days later, when he fell gently asleep in Jesus.

"How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yea sweeter than honey unto my mouth!"

One morning I read the 86th Psalm, and having it fresh in my mind started out to make pastoral calls upon some sick. I went first to the room of a Presbyterian friend who had no pastor. He was near the end of life—nearer than I thought, and all was not light around him as it might have been. With the Psalm in my mind I selected it as the lesson and offered prayer. I had hardly risen to my feet when he exclaimed Mr. K. what Psalm was that?" "The 86th." "Will you please mark it for me?" I found as I turned to it in his faithful wife's Bible, that she had marked it and knew of its wealth of comfort.

From there I went to the room of a pious, gentle lady who was waiting her call. I read the 86th Psalm to her, and after prayer she said, "Mr. K. what Psalm was that?" "The 86th." "Will you please mark it for me?"

I went next to the home of an old man, a Swiss, an elder in the Church, having loved the Word of God from his youth. This time I read the same Psalm with a purpose, anxious to see whether he too would find in it the comfort which it gave the others. When I closed my prayer the old man—Father Bollinger—raising himself on the arms of his chair, but not waiting to rise, said "Will you please mark that Psalm for me." Two of these friends were called to rest before I saw them again, and I have no doubt the precious truth of divine mercy and love, which stayed the heart of the Psalmist, was comfort and strength to them. One rough man, but a believer, said to a companion as he came forth from the dying chamber of the lady, If you want to see a Christian die go in that room! Father Bollinger lingered a long while, but the light of redemption always shone for him clear and steady in spite of physical weakness and fears.

Years passed. In a new home I was called upon to minister to a young man, again a Presbyterian, but reared in our Church, dying of consumption, but ignorant of his approaching end. He seemed singularly uninterested in religion, and it seemed to me as I took the Bible, that my visit would be to him a visitation. I learned afterwards from his own lips that he had been so attentive to his body in the desire to recover, that he had neglected church, prayer and the Bible, and that he knew not his spiritual state even as he was ignorant of his physical condition. Feeling that I was about to inflict upon him an annoyance, which for his mother's sake he could not evade, and fearing lest under such conditions my duty would be merely a formal one, I selected, as much for my own help as his, the 86th Psalm. After reading a few verses he began to weep, and when about the middle of the Psalm, possibly at the words "In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee," he violently sobbed. Pausing I said "John, this may be too much for you. Shall I stop!" "Oh no! no!" he cried. "It does me good. It is just what I need. Read it over again." It was just what he needed. It broke his spiritual disease. It made him eager for the visits of the Christian pastor, and enabled him to share the faith and devotion of a pious mother. And when the shadows of death gathered round him, the Word of God was a lamp to his feet and a light to his path.

No criticism can ever destroy the power of the Book. No criticism can ever destroy its power for us, provided we read it, and reading it receive it as that which is able to make us wise unto salvation. If we look for mistakes we shall find them; but if we look for life and immortality we shall find them. E. N. K.

AS IT WAS AND IS.

Very often people get the idea that the world is growing worse. If such persons had more knowledge of the past they would be able to judge more intelligently of the present, but only a little sober reflection would convince them that their gloomy notions are not in keeping with the actual facts. No doubt the world has grown better, although it is yet far from being once more a sinless paradise.

All Christians are supposed to know what Herod did when the wise men from the East failed to return to Jerusalem and tell him that they had found the new-born King. His bloody vengeance was promptly inflicted on the children of Bethlehem and no one dared to call the cruel tyrant to account. No ruler in Christendom would now dare to enforce such a measure. Law is against it, and public opinion is so mild and tender that it would be driven to prompt resistance by such scenes of horror. But in the days of Herod popular feeling was used to barbaric cruelty, and infants everywhere were at the mercy of individual power and caprice. The early Christians struggled manfully against the monster evil and laid the axe to the root of it, and the blessed fruits of the Gospel have come down to us in a social condition which will not allow any one to indulge in brutal butchery of human life for the gratification of selfish purposes. If no other change in the popular opinion and manners had been made during the nineteen centuries of our era, this one would be sufficient to prove that the world has grown more humane and that the evil passions of our fallen nature have come largely under the control of divine mercy and personal restraint.

Pontius Pilate declared as judge that he found no fault in Jesus, but he proposed to chastise Him and let Him go. This proposal was unlawful even in those days, yet no one raised his voice against it. And finally Jesus was condemned to be crucified. Plain Christian people need hardly be told that if a judge in our criminal courts would be guilty of such an abuse of power in so open and public a manner, the penalty of his wrong-doing would be visited upon him in a summary way. If those who wear the judicial ermine judge venally, they must do it under cover of law and with the appearance of right. Pilate did not judge in this way. He did not fare well in his after days, but he answered for other sins than those he committed at the trial of our Lord. May we not believe and say that, if he would do the same wrong in our days that he did in Jerusalem in his days, his punishment would be quick, direct and specific.

What was done to the Master was also done to His disciples. Those who have read the history of the persecutions that came upon the early Church throughout the Roman empire will not need to ask how this came to pass. The rule of the empire was an iron rule, especially when it employed all its forces and resources to root up and destroy the Christian faith. And the frequent attempts to accomplish this object were made with such diabolical ingenuity that we need not wonder at the number and cruelty of the methods which were used to make the blood of the martyrs flow. Such persecutions can no longer take place. The last religious war that cursed the earth and disgraced the religion of Jesus was that of thirty years in Europe. There have been troubles, and conflicts and wars since, but these were of a different nature and less hurtful in their results. And we may believe and hope that the time is approaching when all wars shall cease, and when peace and mutual good will shall reign throughout the length and breadth of the earth.

But let us go back once more and meditate for a moment on the mercies of the so-called middle ages. Shortly after the Church had gained a complete victory over heathenism in the Roman empire, hordes of barbarians from the north began to make their way southward and gradually they weakened and destroyed the empire. This destruction of civil government carried with it a complete upheaval of society, and a brutal reign of ignorance and physical violence. There was no longer any safety of either property or life. We can hardly imagine what degree of misery was brought upon the civilized Christian peoples of southern Europe by the barbaric revolutions and invasions of this unhappy middle period. Still in the midst of all this ignorance and brute force, the devil did not rule absolutely. The Church did her work once more and she did it successfully. Order came out of confusion. The barbaric tribes were converted into Christian nations. When the reformers of the sixteenth century rose to do their work they had the benefit of the heroic labors of those who worked before them in the primitive and the middle ages. And we have the benefit of the labors and the triumphs of all workers and victors in all ages, ancient and modern, and our age, with all its evils and its dangers, is better than all the ages that have gone before, not because we are better by nature, but because we are controlled by forces that are more fully in accord with the dignity and destiny of manhood and of mankind. Thanks be to God that we are permitted to live in this better age.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

82 children in the Home. Health very good. Have had no professional visits from the House physician for sometime but we require about 300 loaves of home-made bread a week.

Sunday evening, July 26th, the orphan family in a body attended the Harvest Home services in Zion's Reformed church, Womelsdorf. We were warmly received by pastor Stambaugh and his people.

On Monday and Tuesday, July 27th and 28th, we had a steam separator at the Home to do our annual threshing. This requires a great deal of work on the part of our boys. They did unusually well this year and everything passed off successfully. We had a good harvest, viz., 480 bushels of wheat, and 216 bushels of oats. We also raised 75 bushels of rye, which was threshed by flail in order to preserve the straw. After the rye was threshed all the chaff bags in the house were refilled with new straw. It required over 100 large bundles to fill all the beds.

July 28th, being the birthday of the youngest inmate of the Home the children were all treated to a good supply of marshmallows in honor of the occasion. As this kind of confectionery is something quite rare for our children they enjoyed the treat very much.

The question has been asked, whether, on Bethany Day, the orphans would have public exercises. Certainly, they will have singing and other exercises, as in former years, only they will not take up all the time.

A friend of the Home at Hickory, N. C., sends the following under date of July 27th:

"To-day is your Anniversary Day. Distance prevents us from being present in person, but we are with you in our prayers and spirit. Enclosed find a small contribution to be used for the Home."

Although one month ahead of time (Anniversary is August 27th), the gift is none the less acceptable. In thus giving publicity to it, it may be a reminder to many others that Anniversary is a kind of harvest day at the Home and this year, on account of our unusually heavy expenses, we sincerely hope and pray that the ingathering may be correspondingly large. We expect to greet many friends of the Home on that day and others who may not be able to be with us in person may become inspired by the example of this friend in North Carolina to do likewise.

OUR TRAINING SCHOOL.

SENDAI, Japan, June 28, 1891.

Dear Dr. Callender: Since my letter of June 6th * * * * we have somewhat enlarged and reorganized our school. The name chosen for the whole institution is Tōhoku Gakkwan. These are compounds. Tō means East; Hoku, North; Gaku, Learning; Kwan, Place, or Hall. Tōhoku Gakkwan means, East-North-Learning-Hall.

The Tōhoku Gakkwan is to consist of three departments: 1. Preparatory Department, two years; 2. Collegiate Department, four years; 3. Sendai Theological Seminary, three years.

By enlarging we can give our students a better course of study, and at the same time increase our usefulness and obtain a source of income from the entrance and tuition charges. The outlook is most promising, and both Japanese and foreigners are encouraged at the new prospects. Brother Oshikawa is especially sanguine of early success.

A well-educated ministry is of prime importance in our work in Japan. The country is flooded with all kinds of agnostic, and atheistic and scientific objections, so-called, against the Christ the Son of God. Then, too, the better Japanese are so fond of learning that they will not listen to an uneducated man's preaching of the Gospel. A good course of study, therefore, prepared, and with the same faith as in our most humble beginning five years ago, we go forward without fear or alarm at the stupendous undertaking. The God who out of nothing has brought us to our present stage of development, will continue to show His strong right arm. Out of our present school goes forth already a power for good untold. With our increased facilities we shall do more than ever before. With a goodly number of paying students we shall gradually make for ourselves a new source of steady income. Our Japanese brethren are enthused over our present outlook.

I am most happy also to report the assurance of brighter things in our evangelistic work. Recent events have thrown Japanese and foreigners into closer communion, and there is coming into existence again the former mutual understanding and confidence.

I wish the Reformed people could have attended the farewell meetings held for Brother Moore and wife. These eight years of earnest, faithful labor have wrought strong ties of love and sympathy between the hearts of the Japanese and our two missionaries. The Japanese have recently expressed great gratitude for the work done by Mr. and Mrs. Moore in Tokio, in Yamagata and in Sendai. Mrs. Moore's successful work among the poor, the sick and the afflicted, has been a living Gospel unto the Japanese; and the influence that is going out from this kind of work can never be told. I have often wondered why Christ told John's disciples to tell their master that the Gospel was being preached to the poor. By the remarkable confession of a bright and useful Japanese gentleman that "It is hard, very hard, to call the abject poor, brothers and and sisters," I can understand how real heart-and-soul work among God's most miserable and repulsive children is the proof of the Divine Spirit.

Mr. and Mrs. Moore have had an experience, granted to very few of the later missionaries in Japan. Out of a full life—mind, heart and soul—they will come unto you and tell you many things that will make your hearts burn with a new love for God's cause in Japan. I believe they will move you, dear friends, as missionary apostles. They are sent unto you in the grace of Christ. They will bind you unto Japan with new chains of gold. The old chains of iron are rusty and broken in places, and some of you are slipping away from your first love for Japan. Better times, brighter things, nobler deeds, are in store for all of us.

Let me add a few words about the Tōhoku Gakkwan. The management remains as it was before. Of the whole institution, Rev. Masayoshi Oshikawa is the President.

Mrs. Hoy and Willie and I go in a few days to the seashore for our first real summer's vacation. I must return, however, almost daily to oversee the completion of the Sendai Theological Seminary building. The change will do me good, it is hoped. Yours with new hope,

W. E. HOY.

Rev. and Mrs. Moore expect to sail from Yokohama, September 12th, and arrive at San Francisco, Cal., about the 26th.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

THE CHURCH IN THE HOUSE.

Some time ago $15 were sent to a Board of Missions from two families that lived quite away from the Church and so could not meet with their own people, but who met together every Sunday, studied the lesson for the day together and took up a collection for missions.

This is not only piety but also good sense. It is a praiseworthy self-help. In hundreds of cases where our people have no church of their own, they could have a "church in the house," as the early Christians often had, with singing, prayer, Bible study and almsgiving. The outcome of this in many cases would be the organization of a congregation; for this coming together would awaken interest in each other, warm their hearts toward God and inspire them with love for the Church; and so after awhile that Sunday-school would need a larger house and a hall would be secured, leading step by step to the organization of a congregation. Many of our people do not help themselves as they might, and hence the help of the Church is not so prompt.

NEEDED.

A brother lately wrote, "Where can I get a concise, printed history of the home mission work of our Church?" Alas! it has not been written. We need such a book and the right man should set to work upon it; and in the minutes of our Synods we have the body of the material.

THE FOURTEENTH FUND.

The morning mail has just brought me the fourteenth Church-building Fund, from Miss Anna M. Knecht, of Freemansburg, Northampton Co., Pa., in loving memory of her mother, who died only a few months ago. This beautiful monument will continue to stand, when all that is earthiy has fallen; and this offering of love will ever be a joy to the heart of the giver.

A MISSIONARY QUILT.

The special work of the "Home and Mission Society" of Annville, Rev. J. E. Hiester, D.D., pastor, during the spring and summer months, was the making of an Album quilt for the Girls' School at Sendai, Japan, by which $50 were netted for the school. The members of the charge were asked 10 cents for the privilege of placing their names upon separate bricks or upon the border of the quilt.

The work was truly a labor of love, and we believe the interest thus awakened will do more good than the securing of large offerings from only a few interested persons. It was pleasing to see whole families desiring to be represented upon it; and quite a number were anxious to place there the names of their departed parents, brothers and sisters; as well as children and loved ones. The latter were printed, "In memory of ——." White muslin and crimson oiled chintz were used in its construction. The quilt is unique in design. The pastor's name forming the centre piece, and encircling it are the names of members and friends of the charge. A small effort of this kind in all our societies would soon free the Board of Foreign Missions at least to some extent from the financial embarrassment which hinders their progress and occasions no little anxiety. From humble efforts ofttimes great blessings flow. Who will try our plan?

A DAY OF PLEASURE.

A committee of two members from the Annville Home and Mission Socitey started out on the morning of the 22d of July to canvass for the Missionary Guardian. In seven houses they secured 22 names, which, with the 4 already subscribed makes 26. This congregation is by no means large; neither has it great wealth. We have every reason to believe that a revival of missionary interest will be the result. Who will try a day?

HAMMOCK MUSINGS.

Here in my hammock I lie and swing
  Under the shade of the apple-trees;
Hither there comes to me on the wing
  Of the mild westerly summer breeze
Odor of clover heads white and red,
Over the meadow-land freshly shed.
Carpet is spread o'er the orchard old,
Silvery daisy and buttercup gold.

Hazy and dim on the broad blue rim,
  Thrusting their heads in the very sky,
Massive and silent and rough and grim
  Stand up the sentinel mountains high.
Wardens around the horizon they,
In their green panoply, helmed in gray,
Ever are saying, with ne'er a sound,
So His beloved is He around.

Over the meadow-slopes farther down,
  Louder than laugh of the merry brook,
Soundeth the bell of the cattle brown,
  Luring the indolent eye to look.
Flashes a red-winged blackbird over
Reaches of golden-rod and sweet clover;
Robins are going, with laugh and dash,
For the red clusters of mountain-ash.

Lazily drifting, the purple smoke
  Floats from the mountain-side clearing yonder,
Where the deep forests of pine and oak
  Fall, the sharp axe of the woodman under.
There, at the kiss of the lover sun,
Blushes of bloom o'er the fresh soil run,
And the gaunt, flame-blackened stumps between
Patches of gold are, and lines of green.

Lowliest fern-frond and cliff sublime,
  Marked with His monogram I behold;
Purpose eternal revealed in time,
  Witnessing as in the ages old.
Ravine of rock over lowland fair,
Balmy and sweet music-laden air,
Birds in the branches, and clouds above,
Brightness of beauty and life in love.

MRS. LAFFERTY'S POCKET-BOOK, AND WHAT CAME OUT OF IT.

"Now, I s'pose the churches are goin' to give all the better to make the Board smile; ef they all felt like me for givin', my, what money them missionaries 'd get to work with!" said Mrs. Lafferty in a soliloquizing manner after reading the latest reports in the Church paper. She was a good, Christian woman living in one of the small towns along the Licking not far from its confluence with the Ohio River.

They were, indeed, plain folk, working every day for a living. Jonas was a successful shoemaker, but he seldom made shoes. Every body bought them ready-made, and so, the only way he could ply his trade was by patching and mending. His shop was along the alley, a short distance from their little dwelling, and their large garden gave him constant employment from spring to fall whenever business was slack. In no phase of Church-work were they so interested as in missions—poor Jonas had missions for breakfast, dinner and supper; but he liked to hear about it almost as much as his wife liked to talk about it. And no wonder; their only son Thomas was one of the ardent laborers in the foreign field. He had gone as a delegate to some of the missionary conventions of seminaries and was one of the several scores of young men who pledged themselves for foreign work.

"I and Jonas told him many a time to stay near us, and who would a 'spected me to give up my only boy to go clear across the ocean to break the bread o' life, as Tom says, to hungry souls. Says I to Tom, there's plenty preachin' places this side the ocean; besides, them's wicked heathens fur away and you don't know what they're up to doin' to you, so you stay here with the ol' folks. But there was no use talkin', Tom would have his own way 'bout goin'."

Letter after letter reached the little town, describing the customs, people, scenery, cities, the millions of human beings in that far-off country; how hard it was to acquire the strange language, the encouragements even in the early years of missionary activity among those, who, for the first time heard the name of Jesus. Then came a season of depression. The Board lacked money, had to make debts to keep their men afloat. The foreign work grew to larger proportions and required more liberal support. Opposition on the part of native priests developed into open persecution. With all the courage Rev. Lafferty could muster, he began to feel sick at heart; his coadjutors were almost overwhelmed with dismay, seeing that in the time of greatest need the Church could not be persuaded to respond. Poor Mrs. Lafferty was almost beside herself. The Board appealed to the Church members, but there was no one who had a mind to listen; letters were sent to wealthy individuals, but there was no treasury from which supplies could be taken; debts increased in spite of loud appeals.

Tom did not tell his parents the awful discouragements with which he had to contend. He knew too well, such tales were not for hearts softened by parental love. But the real state of affairs was not a secret of the Board. Almost every issue of the Church paper brought more intelligence and repeated requests. Mrs. Lafferty read more than the printed page; some words had a two-fold meaning for her as she thought of her boy striving to overcome immense obstacles.

"Jonas," said she to her husband one morning, "I'm goin' to write to the Board to send Tom back; I didn't sleep a wink las' night a-worryin' and thinkin' 'bout him. Them mission'ry things won't go. Tom says about his work a-prosperin', and a lot o' heathens baptized; he says you should a' seen the poor people made happy when he brung eatables to their homes, and I know'd Tom 'd give his own bread away to help the hungry and keep none for hisself."

But none of the missionaries could be spared from the foreign field. For days and weeks Mrs. Lafferty's mind was busy with plans how she might add to her earnings and send a neat lump to the Board. There was the spinning-wheel her folks had brought along from Pennsylvania, but there were few people who cared for such relics. She went to Deacon Carter to talk with him about selling the furniture in Tom's room. It had been sacredly kept ever since he left, and, in fact, furnished the only spare room in the shoemaker's little home.

"You're not in need of money, Mrs. Lafferty, or I might help you out with a loan," said the deacon.

"No, Mr. Carter, you see we kin get along widout Tom's bed and stuff, and want to put some more to our savin's; so I says to Jonas, I'll go to deacon Carter to see 'bout buying the whole set, and Jonas says, all right; so we made out we'd get the money for the Board."

No one knew exactly why the deacon bought the old furniture, and it was said he paid enough to buy a brand new set. So it went on. The only ornament of the garden was carried off one day, a large iron vase filled with rare flowers. It was the pride of Mrs. L., for people would often stop along the pavement to look at the rich colors and profuse growth of vines that almost obscured the whole vase.

"Well, what'll Tom say when he hears that we give so much money," said Mrs. L., at the supper-table; "he'll wonder if we struck a gol' mine in our back yard. He'll pray the Lord be wid us and—come in." Mr. Long stepped in; he was one of the prominent business men of the town.

"Good evenin' Mr. Long, what a seldom visit for you to see us."

"Hope you are well," said the visitor; he always said that, and perhaps it was because no one else could say it in such a dignified tone. "I came on a little business; Henry is going to marry before long, and some things I heard recently led me to believe that you would sell your place. I want you to let me have the first chance if you intend to dispose of your property."

After a long pause Jonas's wife exclaimed, "Well, well Mr. Long, to think of sellin' the old homestead; who'd a thought of it. Why, what'd become of Jonas and me?" The merchant begged to be excused for having ventured upon the suggestion and thought he had been misinformed.

Small towns are always more or less gossipy. Some one had started the rumor that the Laffertys were going to sell out, and that no doubt put it into Mr. Long's head, that it would be a capital place to erect a fine house for his only son.

After the distinguished visitor left Mrs. L., began by saying, "Well, Jonas, them missionaries has been troublin' me a heap o'late." They had a long talk about it. They prayed about it that evening. One was surprised at the other for ever imagining to consent to sell the lot. It was in a quiet part of the town; some fine dwellings had been built in the vicinity, and more than once they had refused point-blank to sell at a bargain. But to help one at a distance and bring encouragement to his heart was the all-absorbing thought.

Jonas often sat on his bench the next day with his hands folded in his apron. Those passing along his window might have seen how awkwardly he broke a lot of pegs trying to drive them into the stubborn leather, his eyes at times blinded with tears. His wife did not wait to wash the breakfast dishes that morning. Her bonnet quickly put on she was off to see Mr. Carter. She had great confidence in his advice, for he was regarded by every one as a Christian business man. The deacon advised not to sell the property, because, said he, in a few years it would be worth much more, and there was no telling but that they might be able to realize a little fortune at the opportune time. After considerable thought he however named the value of the piece of real estate.

Jonas and his wife consented to Mr. Long's offer, which was even beyond their estimate. Their dwelling and shop were to be moved to the end of the lot along the alley; a small piece would remain as their garden, they were going to try to get along with less. The day their check for $1200, was sent to the Board was a momentous event. They could hardly speak about it for joy. Their prayers were those of gratitude, that the Lord had enabled them to give an offering of thankfulness.

Some of the neighbors tried to remonstrate with Mrs. Lafferty for depriving herself of part of her living. She had only one answer, "If all the church members had a boy clean across the ocean givin' his life for them heathen, if they could feel as me and Jonas feel about them mission debts, they'd 'a done the same. Ol' as me and Jonas is, we mus' help Tom all we can to break the bread o'life, and sure me and Jonas'd rather go a beggin' a thousan' times than have them mission'ries a sufferin' for them mission debts."

LIKE CHRIST.

He who would be most like Christ must pay the cost. If a furnace is needed to purify and brighten you, do not shirk the furnace. Patience is an admirable grace; but it is not oftenest worn by those who walk on the sunny side of the street.

in silver slippers. It is usually the product of head winds and hard fights—of crosses carried and of steep hills climbed on the road to heaven. "The trial of your faith worketh patience." So it is with all the noblest traits of a robust, healthy and symmetrical character. No man is rocked into godlinesss in a hammock. Christ offers you no free ride to heaven in a cushioned parlor car. John Bunyan sent his sturdy "Pilgrim" to the "Celestial City" on foot, and some pretty rough walking and hard conflicts did he encounter before the pearly portals welcomed him to the streets of flashing gold. His piety was self-denying, stalwart and uncompromising; he relished even the stiff severities of duty, and was never coddled with confectioneries. Self-indulgence is the besetting sin of the times; but if you long to be a strong, athletic Christian you must count the cost. It will cost you the cutting up of some old favorite sins by the roots, and cutting loose from some entangling alliances and some sharp set-tos with the tempter; it will cost you the submitting of your will to the will of Christ.—Dr. Cuyler.

IF! IF!

If every boy and every girl,
Arising with the sun
Should plan this day to do alone
The good deeds to be done;

Should scatter smiles and kindly words,
Strong, helpful hands should lend,
And to each other's wants and cries
Attentive ears should lend.

If every man and woman, too,
Should join these workers small,
O what a flood of happiness
Upon our earth would fall!

How many homes would sunny be
Which now are filled with care!
And joyous, smiling faces, too,
Would greet us everywhere.

I do believe the very sun
Would shine more clear and bright,
And every little twinkling star
Would shed a softer light.

But we, instead, must watch to see
If other folks are true,
And thus neglect so much that God
Intends for us to do.

—Golden Days.

"WASTE NOT, WANT NOT."

"Jamie, you must eat your crusts," said mother, as the little boy carefully laid up the crusts of his bread around the edge of his plate.

"Don't like 'em, mamma!" snapped the boy.

"That makes no difference," said mamma.

Jamie pouted. "They're hard."

"You have good teeth, my boy."

Jamie wanted another good slice of bread and butter, but there were those tough crusts. He knew mother would give him nothing more till those were eaten. He sat still a few moments, and then, as if a new thought had come to him, he broke out, half laughing, half crying, "Did you eat your crusts, mamma, when you were as big as me?"

Mamma smiled at the "big as me," but very good-naturedly answered: "Yes, my boy, I had to. I remember that one day I tucked all my crusts carefully under the edge of my plate on the side opposite to my mother, so that she could not see them. But when I came to the table the next time, there were all my crusts in a very neat little pile on my clean plate. I made up a face, and was just going to turn them out of the plate, when my mother, who had been watching me, said quickly: 'Not so, my little lady; you can have no dinner until you finish your breakfast.' There was nothing for me to do but to munch my crusts. After that I thought it the best way to eat them as I went along."

By this time Jamie's crusts had disappeared. He had learned the lesson his mother wished him to.

"The crust is the best part of the bread, my mother said; the very sweetest. If we throw our crusts away, we waste a large portion of our bread. It is wicked to waste. What we waste now we may sorely want some time. If we save the fragments, we shall have the means to help the poor."—Morning Light.

SHOW YOUR LOVE "NOW."

"I have a little story to tell you, boys," our old neighbor said to the young people the other evening. "One day—a long, hot day it had been, too—I met my father on the road to town.

"'I wish you would take this package to the village for me, Jim,' he said hesitatingly.

"Now, I was a boy of twelve, not fond of work, and just out of the hay-field, where I had been at work since day-break. I was tired, dusty and hungry. It was two miles into town. I wanted to get my supper and to dress for singing class.

"My first impulse was to refuse, and to do it harshly, for I was vexed that he should ask me after my long day's work. If I did refuse, he would go himself. He was a gentle, patient old man. But something stopped me—one of God's good angels, I think.

"'Of course, father, I'll take it,' I said heartily, giving my scythe to one of the men. He gave me the package.

"'Thank you, Jim,' he said. 'I was going myself, but somehow I don't feel very strong to-day.'

"He walked with me to the road that turned off to town, and as he left he put his hand on my arm, saying, 'Thank you, my son. You've always been a good boy to me, Jim.'

"I hurried into town and back again. When I came near the house, I saw a crowd of farm-hands at the door. One of them came to me, the tears rolling down his face.

"'Your father!' he said. 'He fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you.'

"I am an old man, now, but I have thanked God over and over again, in all the years that have passed since that hour, and those last words were, 'You've always been a good boy to me.'"—Selected.

WHY ROBERT WENT TO THE FOOT OF THE CLASS.

Now that school work has begun, and we are all in the harness again, we cannot be too careful to make the most of the fragments of time. A lad named Robert was moodily turning the pages of his book, and as he did so he said complainingly: "I shall never be able to get this lesson ready by to-morrow."

"You have ten minutes now before dinner; why not begin at once?" asked his brother.

"Ten minutes!—that's nothing; besides, I must have a run with Rover now," replied Robert, whistling to his dog.

After dinner the two boys walked off to school again. Frank took out his book and began to learn.

"What a book-worm!" said the other, laughing; and he looked out for birds' nests in the hedges till they got to the school.

"Come off to cricket!" shouted a party of school-fellows, as they broke up from lessons. Robert bounded away with the rest; Frank promised to follow in a quarter of an hour, and he took out his book once more. This done, he played away with the rest, and enjoyed the game heartily.

The boys were tired that evening and went to bed early; but when they returned to school the next day, Frank knew his lesson perfectly, while Robert pleaded that he had no time to learn it.

"How did you find time, Frank?" asked the master.

"I had ten minutes before dinner yesterday, sir; a quarter of an hour going back to school, and as much before cricket, then I looked over my lessons before I went to bed, and took ten minutes before breakfast this morning to make it perfect."

"Which makes an hour's preparation," replied the master. "Go to the foot of the class, Robert, and learn that for those who take care of the minutes the hours will take care of themselves."—Exchange.

HOW QUARRELS BEGIN.

"I wish that pony was mine," said a little boy, who stood at a window looking down the road.

"What would you do with him?" asked his brother.

"Ride him; that's what I'd do."

"All day long?"

"Yes; from morning till night."

"You'd have to let me ride him sometimes," said his brother.

"Why would I? You'd have no right in him if he were mine."

"Father would make you let me have him part of the time."

"No; he wouldn't.

"My children," said the mother, who had been listening to them, and now saw that they were beginning to get angry with each other all for nothing, "let me tell you of a quarrel between two boys no bigger nor older than you are that I read about the other day. They were going along the road, talking together in a pleasant way, when one of them said:

"'I wish I had all the pasture land in the world.'

"The other said, 'And I wish I had all the cattle in the world.'

"What would you do then?" asked his friend.

"'Why, I would turn them into your pasture land.'

"'No, you wouldn't' was the reply.

"'Yes, I would.'

"'But I wouldn't let you.'

"'I wouldn't ask you.'

"'You shouldn't do it.'

"'I should.'

"'You sha'n't.'

"'I will.' And with that they seized and pounded each other like two silly, wicked boys, as they were."

The children laughed; but their mother said, "You see in what trifles quarrels often begin. Were you any wiser than these boys in your half angry talk about an imaginary pony? If I had not been here, who knows but you might have been as silly and wicked as they were?"—Sunday Afternoon.

CONCERNING CHRIST AND THE CHURCH.

It is sometimes said that ministers preach too much about the Church. This may be true of some of them, but it is also true that others, and a great many of them, too, do not preach enough on that subject. There are those who do not like even the term itself and they point to the fact that the Saviour did not often mention even the word. In His day the Church did not yet exist, and the time had not come to make it specially prominent; but when He had occasion to speak of it to Peter, who was specially prepared to know what it meant, He very emphatically affirmed that it would come into existence, and that it would be built upon a very firm foundation, never to be shaken. When, however, it became an historical fact, the Apostles frequently refer to it in their discourses or writings. With them the Kingdom of Heaven was constantly uppermost in their minds, and, in connection with it, its outward manifestation in the assembly of the saints. In our day the Church is too often regarded as nothing more than a voluntary association made up of men and women, brought together like any other association for a useful purpose. It is not strange, therefore, that some persons rise up with objections when higher claims and prerogatives are ascribed to her than such as pertain to other organizations of their own making. And so, too, it is not strange that they put these societies in the place of the Church and regard them as something better. We have met with those who regard their society as their Church. They do not wish for anything better. The difficulty here is that they look at its human side, as exclusively made up of imperfect men and women, and not at its internal life or divine side. Christ is its head in the true sense of the term, the Holy Spirit the animating principle, and God speaks to men in it through His Word and the holy ministry. Apart from the presence of these supernatural powers there can be no Church, just as without the soul there can be no bodies such as we have. This is the view of the Church according to Scripture, brought out very emphatically by St. Paul in his great Epistle to the Ephesians. There he says expressly that it is the body of Christ, the fullness of Him, that filleth all in all. The early Christians felt the full force of his language, and the Church very properly became an article of faith and was inserted in the Apostles' Creed, in connection with its faith in the three persons of the Trinity.

But if this be the case, it follows that ministers of the Gospel should preach on the subject of the Church no less than on the other articles in the Creed, and if it is not done, such preachers fail to preach the whole counsel of God. Christ cannot be separated from His body, and it is all in vain for any one to imagine that he is preaching Christ, if he does not preach concerning the Church also. The two are inseparably connected, the one leading to the other. A proper view of the mysterious union between Christ and believers will lead necessarily to an exalted view of the one, holy Catholic Church, in which He lives and is ever present. There may be many theories or much speculation about it, just as there may be doctrines or speculative doctrines based on other truths of the Bible, but it addresses us in the Creed as a fact and not as a doctrine, not as something individual, local or national, but as something universal, whose ultimate vocation is to bind the entire human race together into one birthhood of love and affection. "The tabernacle of God is with men," and it is downright wickedness to conceal this gracious fact from their knowledge.

THE JEWS.

Will it never end, this persecution of the Jews? What does Russia mean? Is the antisemite feeling in Europe the true fruit of Christian charity? It looks as if the dark ages were not past and gone, or as if they were coming back to us once more. Possibly the persecutors may flatter themselves that, they are offering service to God, because they seem to be fulfilling Christ's prediction, that the impenitent Jews should be detested among all nations. In these circumstances it is certainly refreshing to see that the secular papers of this country are beginning to utter kind words in behalf of the children of Abraham. For an instance, see a recent number of the Philadelphia Inquirer. Facts go to show that these people make good American citizens; that they are active and industrious; that they are less expensive and troublesome to the community than the representatives of most other nationalities; and that they do not engage in riots or live on the public in our county jails. Such as are wealthy among them contribute to the support of their poor, and exhibit brilliant examples of benevolence. The oppressed of all lands are flocking to our shores for a home, and we all, as it seem to us, ought to be glad that we can offer these afflicted Israelites a place of refuge. In this respect we are in advance of the old world, throwing off some of its narrow traditions, and showing a good example to the nations at large. Moreover, in proportion as we act the part of true Christians to this class of persons, the more likely will they be to regard Christianity with favor; and as they no doubt will when the time comes, embrace it with a true ardor and timely faith.

IS CHRISTIANITY LIFE OR DOGMA?

The Presbyterian of July 15, has an editorial of nearly two columns on the above subject. It is in defence and vindication of Dr. Patton's deliverance in his late baccalaureate sermon,—"If I must choose between life and dogma, I will say that Christianity is not a life, but a dogma." It is a matter of lively interest to us, that this dictum has attracted attention sufficient to call for a defence on the part of his friends. The fact that Dr. Patton has not "deigned to reply," "to his various critics," is a matter of indifference. What is gratifying to us, is, that the subject is commanding attention, and giving rise to inquiry. Indeed in view of the manifest meaning with which Dr. Patton, as also The Presbyterian, invests the terms of the antithesis, we are not surprised that he does not feel moved to reply. If the term "life," as used in this contrast, means nothing more than Christian practical living—conformity in walk and conversation to the principles, precepts and commands laid down in the word of God, then, of course, there must be a formulation of those principles, precepts and commands into a doctrinal code, before we can know how to conform our walk and conversation to their requirements. If the whole subject is bounded by the horizon which The Presbyterian, indicates as Dr. Patton thought, "He is assailing the modern idea that it matters little what a man believes so his moral conduct is correct," we are prepared to accept his teaching as correct. We have no sympathy with this Unitarian and rationalistic deliverance. And in this view we can understand why The Presbyterian treats the contention in the cavalier manner it does.

But is this all there is in this contention? Have those who have been asserting that Christianity is first, a life, and secondly, dogma as growing out of this life, attached no deeper meaning to the word life, than Dr. Patton and our esteemed cotemporary do? This is the point to which we would draw attention. We maintain that life is one thing, and that its outward manifestation is another thing. True, the outward manifestation indicates the quality and character of the life. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Still the life is first in the order of sequence. We hold that in Christianity there is something back of its outward manifestation in the form of conduct; that Christian conduct and activity does not spring out of our natural human life, as guided and controlled by divine precept and made possible by divine aid. We unhesitatingly maintain, that as a condition precedent to the possibility of a true Christian walk and conversation, even with the help of a divine influence, there must be a regeneration—a new creation, "Christ be formed in you,"—"God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." "The life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God." The life spoken of in these passages, and dozens of others which might be quoted, involve vastly more than a moral change—a transformation of the thoughts, desires and determinations of the old Adamic life effected by the help of a divine influence. This is what we mean by life when we affirm that Christianity is primarily and fundamentally a life, and that dogma, is the formulation of the principles, precepts and requirements constitutionally involved in this life. The proposition, Christianity is life and not dogma, is incorrect; it is both life and dogma. But life primarily, and dogma, as a necessary and involved consequence.

THE STARRY HEAVENS.

At this season of the year we gaze upwards at the nocturnal skies more frequently than at any other, because we like to sit in the open air during the evening and enjoy its cool breezes. The starry heavens spread themselves out like the pages of a book and invite us in our thoughtful hours to read their contents. Portions of this vast volume are visible to us every night during all seasons of the year, such as the two Bears, big and little, revolving around the Polar Star, the chair in which it is supposed that Cassiopeia is still sitting, and the great Dragon, twisting himself around the Little Bear, with his mouth wide open and its fangs just ready to fasten on its prey. There are, however, several constellations and many stars that look down upon us only during the summer season, and we in a measure have become familiar with their appearances, at least such of us as are careful observers of what is taking place around us. The constellations in fact suit the season of the year, and its occupations. To the south of us the Scorpion, as if roused to vitality by the hot weather, hangs wriggling in the sky, with the sharp sting in his tail ready to inject its fatal poison into flesh and blood. But behind him stands the Archer with his bow bent, in the act of shooting his arrow into the head of this celestial Scorpion, teaching us that man ought to rule over nature and destroy such noxious creatures. Above us Leo, the Lion, is going westward, and in his body a number of stars from the Sickle, with the bright star Regulus on its handle, to inform us that it is the harvest season. A short distance to the eastward is the Virgin, with outspread wings and some ripe ears of wheat in her hand, showing the harvest is already being gathered into barns. To the east of the Lion and the Virgin there is a number of combinations, of interesting stars. First comes the Northern Crown, and then the Lyre in which, Lyra is very conspicuous, one of the brightest and most beautiful stars in the firmament. Near by the latter in the Milky Way is the Northern Cross in the neck and across the wings of the Swan. It is easily identified when it is once found, but it is sometimes difficult for many persons to trace it out, for the first time. But after they once see it they are not likely to forget. So it is with another cross. When it at length rises up to the view of the sinner, he clings to it through the wildest storms and there he puts his trust. Not far from the Cross, south-westward, is Job's Coffin in the Dolphin. It resembles a coffin, but nobody knows why it came to be named after that patient patriarch. We may, however, say that the name is appropriate for a group of stars in the neighborhood of the Cross. The sufferings endured on Calvary put an end to such sufferings as Job endured, at least in another world, and may be said to be very properly buried in his coffin.

At present there are comparatively few of the planets seen in the evening sky. Jupiter does not rise from his couch until after ten o'clock; at night Saturn retires early: Venus, rises before daylight; as the Morning Star; and Mars has rushed up so close to the Sun that he has lost his fiery brightness. But there are plenty of other bright stars for our contemplation, moving in solemn silence all over our heads. They seem to be numerous, but they are in fact comparatively only a few grains of sand glittering, compared with the millions upon millions of bright orbs, seen or unseen in the sky at night, through the most powerful telescopes. Scattered throughout the immensity of space, they no doubt support and cherish innumerable worlds, inhabited by beings like outselves, with the light of intelligence, and looking up with us to the same God and Father of all. Perhaps some of them are fallen worlds, like our own; but if so, the number no doubt is comparatively small, whilst the rest, an innumerable company of them, obeying the Divine Law, are now basking in the sunlight of the divine favor, and are forever sending up their vast multitudes who never sinned, out of nature into the world of glory beyond the natural creation. Truly the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy work.—The constellations have for the most part heathen names, which are very ancient, and were worshipped as deities, among pagan nations. Now they nightly sing: The hand that made us is divine.

REGENERATION OR THE NEW BIRTH.

There are several points in connection with the new birth that present difficulties, perhaps the chief difficulties, in considering the subject.

One of these points is whether the new birth is instantaneous. The general opinion in the Church is in the affirmative, that it is instantaneous; and the argument usually given for this opinion is drawn from the nature of natural birth. The first, or natural, birth, it is said, is instantaneous, therefore the second, or spiritual birth, is instantaneous. But the first proposition here may be questioned.

Even if we understand by birth merely the separation of the child from the parent, yet we cannot overlook the period of gestation, the period of preparation, which stands so closely related to what is usually called the actual birth as to be considered really a part of it. Certainly the child is not formed instantaneously, and if we understand by birth the formation of a new human being, then certainly birth is not instantaneous.

But we may raise another point in this connection. As there is a period of preparation going on before the separation of the child from the parent, so there is a period following that act, during which the process of birth comes to its consummation. Let us explain. Birth is not merely a physical fact. The separation of the child from the parent does indeed give the child an independent existence physically considered. But is there not a like independence required on the spiritual side, and does not this require a certain process before the child becomes an independent personality? Even physically the child depends for a time upon the nourishment derived from the mother. But now there is a period of incubation for the child in the bosom of the family. It requires some time before self-consciousness is developed. It designates itself by its name in the third person, "Henry wants this, Henry wants that," until a new light dawns and it begins to use the pronoun I. Can we say its birth intellectually is complete until it has a consciousness of its own personality? So, too, there is a period before its moral and religious consciousness is developed sufficiently to make it morally and personally accountable. It may be said, these are only stages of development, and correspond rather to the development of the new Christian life in sanctification, but are not these rather epochs, in which the birth really comes to completion? They are surely more than ordinary stages of growth.

The point to be noticed here is, that natural birth has an objective and a subjective side to it. The objective is that side of the process which goes forward without the child's agency. Its birth is brought about by laws of life over which it has no control, and of which it is not conscious. The subjective side is that which engages the responsive activity of the child, the operation of laws from within itself. If this responsive side is not active, if the child remains unconscious of its personality, it cannot be regarded as a fully developed person, and hence as not having come to a complete birth, as really an abortion as though it had not come to the full development physically.

We believe that all will agree as to the facts stated, though all may not agree that all the processes named belong to birth. And this first point, as to whether the new birth is instantaneous, includes another, viz., is man passive only in the new birth? If we extend the new birth over processes corresponding to such as we have included in the natural birth, then we would have to hold that the new birth is not a mere passive act on the part of man, or that he is merely passive, while God alone is active. And so we would reach something like the sunergism of Melanchthon. He held that in regeneration there are three factors operative, the Word of God, the Holy Spirit, and the human Will, while the other Reformers generally held that regeneration is God's act alone in man.

May we not say that in the new birth there is an objective side, God's act in us, and also a subjective side, our response to this divine act? And is not this objective side represented in baptism, with such exceptions as the Church has always made? And may it not be that the objective and subjective factors do not always come together in precisely the same way in different individuals, and under different circumstances? May we not say, for instance, that in the case of infant baptism the two factors require time, a certain incubation, so to speak, in the bosom of the family of Christ. The child is born again when it is baptized, so far as its objective membership in the Christian Church is concerned, but subjectively it has not yet attained to a consciousness of its Christian personality. It is treated as a member of the Church, it is a member, and included in the covenant of God, but it cannot yet assert its new personality, its new ego, or I. We do not make account of time here in the ordinary sense, for the new birth is a spiritual fact, and pertains to a higher order of being, but we do have regard to the two factors, the objective and the subjective, the sacramental and the experimental. These two sides belong together, and form portions of one process, which we may call the new birth, or regeneration.

Certainly the regenerate life comes from God alone. Our Saviour declares that as the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself, and that the Father giveth life to whomsoever He will. It is the prerogative of Christ to make alive those who were dead in sin. But God does not act upon man as upon a machine. Life must act in the organism of the human soul, and even in the process of becoming alive the soul must coöperate with the divine power that acts upon it. The process is not a fiat, not magical, but one that takes place according to the laws of our being. As the new day comes upon the world when the night is past, first the dawn heralding the coming light, then the rise of the sun in his full-orbed splendor, so the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in His wings in the benighted soul. The Father through prevenient grace draws to the Son, and then the Son in turn makes known in a new way the Father, and so the adoption takes place.

Of course we may not press too closely the analogy of natural birth in seeking to explain the mystery of the new birth, yet the general features in both are similar. It is to be feared that some, by pressing the point that regeneration is instantaneous, give a somewhat magical character to the mystery. Some in this way find the whole process completed in the moment of baptism, while others substitute a certain momentary experience of the religious feelings, and make this the indication of its taking place. Baptism represents the activity on the divine side, it is the approach of God to man to take him by the hand and make him His child. Faith is the responsive act on the human side by which man accepts and appropriates the gift of salvation. The two factors, the divine and the human come together in regeneration in a way that we cannot comprehend, but that the human factor is active we may infer from the fact that God cannot regenerate a man against his will. We grant the distinction theology makes between regeneration and sanctification, but this does not necessarily preclude the conception that there is a certain process in regeneration. And with this conception of a process we may be able to join together the two factors, baptism, and a believing acceptance of divine grace, in one process, or act, though in the case of infant baptism they may be separated in point of time.

And this may aid us to explain why some in whom some elements of the new birth are present, yet because some one element is wanting, never come to the full birth, but fall away into their old sinful life. But this opens up a subject which our space forbids us to enter upon now.

Poetry.

NOW AND THEN.

BY CHARLES COLLINS, D. D.

"Now we see through a glass darkly; but THEN, face to face."

I.

Now, by the wayside, see! thistle and thorn,
Often 'neath storm-cloud, yet wending one's way;
Footsore and weary,—depressed and forlorn—
Sighing and hoping, for some cheering ray.
After a while, then, cessation from toil;
After a while, then, the harp and the song;
Deliverance forever, from strife and turmoil,
Rejoicing and saved, with the blood washed throng.

II.

Now, in the desert, o'er parched lands we tread,
Pitching our tent, on cold, wild, sterile ground;
With desolate prospects;—it is the place of the dead;
And the waters of Marah, so bitter we've found.
After a little, then, a heavenly land;
A far better country, where spring-time seems rife;
Companionship lovely, with the white clad to stand,—
As heirs of salvation,—by the river of life.

III.

Now, treading the vale, with life's trials and cross,
They chafe the poor pilgrim, by night and by day;
'Tis woe, disappointments, sad chastenings and loss,—
The heart-breaking farewells, of those passed away!
After a little, then, 'neath heavenly palms,
Shall come the re-union, in that land of song;
We shall join with eternity's thanksgiving psalms,
And vie with the millions—the chorus prolong.

IV.

Now, in the home-land, where doubtings and fears,—
Where sin, pain and sickness, infest every breath;
Where sorrows, bereavements, draw forth floods of tears,
And hovering close by is the Angel of Death!
After a while, then, the last tear and prayer,
A sundering of earth ties, so tenderly riven;
And then, the King's welcome; for He will be there,
To give us a place, 'mid the glories of heaven.

The ailantus trees are now in bloom, and it is surprising how beautiful many of them are, even in the streets, where it is hard for any tree to develop symmetrically. The ailantus fell into disfavor some years ago because some persons objected to the odor of the flowers. This, however, is not an inseparable accompaniment. The ailantus is dicœcious, the staminate and the pistillate flowers being borne on separate plants, and the odor belongs only to the staminate flowers. The female plant is free from this objection, and though it is less showy in blossom, its foliage is just as fine.—Philadelphia Times.

To the great regret of the friends of the late Dr. Schliemann, many of the interesting relics dug up by the great explorer in Troy have been stolen and destroyed by the miserable inhabitants of Asia Minor. Turks and Arabians in the neighborhood of the excavations use the valuable stones to build their huts. After Schliemann's death a man was employed to guard the ruins. His salary was discontinued recently, however, and the watchman ceased to guard the excavations. The Stamboul, of Constantinople, calls upon all scientific societies of Europe and America "to put an end to the iconoclasm and vandalism of the semi-barbarous inhabitants," and to continue the work of the great Schliemann.—New York Tribune.

Hints and Recipes.

Light, crisp wafers of molasses, or made largely of butter and sugar, make an excellent substitute for loaf cake in summer. By many they are liked for breakfast, with the cup of coffee or at luncheon with cocoa. A good-sized batch of sugar cookies may be made from the following recipe: Mix one cup of butter with two cups of sugar, and when they are creamy add two well-beaten eggs, one-half cup of milk, three cups of flour and one teaspoonful of soda. Flavor with vanilla or almond. Roll the dough very thin. These are very good and rich enough to keep two weeks.

NONPAREIL PUDDING.—Beat smoothly together one coffeecupful of powdered sugar, and half a cupful of butter, make this a smooth cream, then gradually stir in three cupfuls of milk; when smooth pour this slowly upon two cupfuls of flour. Put in the egg beater and beat for five minutes and then beat in the frothed whites of six eggs, beat five minutes more, and pour into a well-buttered pudding dish. Bake one hour in a moderate oven. It is quite a thin batter. It is a beautiful pudding in appearance, and in taste delicate and delicious. To make a good sauce for it is: Take two of the yolks of the eggs, beat to a cream with half a cupful or more of butter and one cupful of sugar. Set in a pan of hot water and stir till it thickens. Add a pinch of salt, and half a cupful of any fruit syrup. The pudding should be served as soon as it comes from the oven. The experiment met with such success the pudding was at once christened the "Nonpareil."

Farm and Garden.

It is estimated now that there are more than fifty thousand silos in use in the United States. It is not yet twenty years since the first mention of them was made in America.

If you find the shade of a tree is grateful these days, consider it as a reminder that you should be planting others next fall or spring. Shade is good not alone for you, but as well for the stock that stands unsheltered all day long in the open pasture. Plant a row of shade trees along the edge of the field that is next the road and get the blessings of the traveller and of your own cattle, and beautify the farm as well.—American Agriculturist.

The American Cultivator says: "Some years ago we grew sweet corn for seed for a practical seedsman. It was a large variety, and the season being cold and wet at harvest time, we suggested drying it in an evaporating house. It was kept at a temperature of 110 degrees to 120 degrees above zero for two days, and in that time every bit of moisture seemed to have dried out of it. This corn, the seedsman informed us, made the most satisfactory ever-green seed corn he had ever had. All seed should be dried as soon as ripened, and kept dry till planted."

Professor Cook recommends the following as an effective wash for fruit trees. It prevents egg laying and kills the newly hatched caterpillars as they begin to tunnel the trees. Take one hundred pounds of caustic potash, one barrel of lime, one gallon of crude carbolic acid, two pounds of white arsenic or London purple, which is perhaps better and certainly cheaper, and water enough to make 300 gallons of the wash. This will be sufficient for 3,000 trees; smaller quantities may be made in like proportion. Apply the wash with a stiff brush during summer, preferably early in July.

There are many elaborate and semi-scientific ways of accounting for white specks in butter. When the cream is skimmed off more or less milk is taken with it. This milk is full of casein that always and readily curdles, one of the causes of the specks. All the trouble, according to the Dairy World, usually comes from allowing the cream to become too old and sour before it is churned. Badly kept dairy utensils may accomplish the same result. The remedy lies in the direction of quicker work and making the butter from sweeter cream. White specks are one of the penalties for being a sour-butter crank.—North Pacific Rural Spirit.

THE RED CORD FROM CREATION TO CHRIST. The Bible Story made Plain to Young Readers. By S. B. Rossiter, D.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co, 38 W. 23rd street, New York. Cloth, pp. 177. 50 cts., postpaid.

This neat little book contains the Bible story in plain style for young readers. The author thus takes up the Red Cord—or thread, that runs through the Holy Bible, binding the whole together, from Creation to Christ. He advises the young reader to have the Bible near at hand for reference. It surely is a valuable help in the study of the Word of God.

THE INTERPRETER WITH HIS BIBLE. By A. E. Waffle, A.M., author of "The Lord's Day," etc. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. Pp. 106. 60 cents.

This is a manual to help students of the Bible to ascertain its true meaning. It fills a want at this time since there is an increased interest in the Holy Bible, its authenticity and its inspiration. Its preface presents proofs of Divine Inspiration, and this establishes the fact that the Bible is the Word of God. Its contents are: I. The Interpreter Himself; II. General Principles of Interpretation; III. The Interpretation of Figurative Language. The design of the work is thus faithfully carried out, and the general student will find it a valuable help in understanding the Book of books.

DIED.—June 18, 1891, in Baltimore, Md., George L. Hoffman, aged 75 years, 6 months and 1 day.

Father Hoffman passed his entire eventful life in the city of Baltimore. He was baptized in infancy and a rich legacy of faith and trustfulness was that bequeathed him by pious parents. He adorned his Christian profession by a life of godliness. In his disposition he was somewhat retiring, never obtrusive, but he met every one, with whom an extensive business threw him into contact, with a warmth and candor, which at once cemented firm friendship. His frankness, uprightness and Christian manliness caused him to be a power amid his associates. In his position as office bearer he recognized the weighty responsibility imposed and the enlarged opportunities for service granted. He was kind and affectionate. In the home circle his presence was always a guarantee of good cheer. How closely the tendrils of his affection twined around the hearts of his children, no one can describe. He leaves one son and daughter to mourn his loss, together with many grandchildren and several great-grandchildren, all of whom will arise and call him blessed. His son John M., the first superintendent of St. Paul's Reformed Sunday-school, preceded him to his heavenly reward nine years ago.

Father Hoffman's suffering continued for more than a year before death came to release him, but though his illness was prolonged, his confidence in God never wavered. Through his long suffering he felt that "the Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge. Therefore will not we fear." His life bears a grand testimony to the comfort and happiness of the Christian life. His funeral took place from St. Paul's Reformed church, of which he was a member from its organization. His pastor, Rev. Warren J. Johnson, preached the funeral discourse based upon Rev. 3: 12, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God."

Revs. J. T. Rossiter, C. Clever, D.D., A. M. Schmidt, L. F. Zinkhan and A. S. Weber were present at the service, the three first named assisting in the services.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the Consistory of St. Paul's Reformed church, Baltimore, Md., the following memorial was adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father in His inscrutable yet all-wise providence to call from time into eternity our beloved brother and co-laborer, Elder George L. Hoffman, who by his kind and considerate disposition, benevolent spirit and lofty Christian manhood had endeared himself to all, and by his unabated interest in the church, by his words of matured counsel, and by his liberality had contributed most materially to the prosperity of this congregation, and who by his unswerving faith in God has left an example worthy of emulation.

Resolved, That whilst we mourn our loss as one incalculable to ourselves and to St. Paul's Reformed church, we sorrow not as those which have no hope, but bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father. Whilst we shall ever cherish his memory, we thank God for his Christian life and example, and extend to the mourning family our expression of great sorrow at our common loss and sympathy with them in this bereavement, praying God to comfort and console them.

Resolved, That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of this consistory, that a copy thereof be presented to the bereaved family, and that they be published in the REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER.

Baltimore, Md., July 8, 1891.

DIED.—Joshua Bruner, on Thursday morning, July 9, 1891, at Frederick, Md., after a lingering and trying illness, in the 75th year of his age.

He was born and reared within a mile of Frederick, from whence he removed, about 19 years ago, into the home in the city, where he died.

He was the youngest of three brothers, only one of whom, Lewis, the present Mayor of this city, survives him. Mr. Bruner never married, spent the whole of his long life in this community, and was one of our best known and most highly respected citizens. He inherited a generous nature, sustained an unblemished reputation, was the soul of honor, and possessed all those virtues which make an exemplary citizen and a good man. He was a thoughtful and constant reader, and was therefore well informed on all the vital questions of his age. He was a genial companion and had endeared to himself a large circle of friends. Though never conspicuous in public life, he was deeply interested in everything that pertained to the welfare of the community.

He was a member of the Reformed church; loved her with sincere affection; shared with her his means in life and made generous mention of her in his last will. The REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER had few more interested or intelligent readers. He had read it from its first issue. A visit from his pastor meant for him to learn more of the church in her projects and prospects. He was a constant encouragement and stimulant to his pastor, by reason of kindly suggestions, and commendation where and when he thought it was deserved.

About two and a half years ago he had a paralytic attack, which deprived him of speech, and at the same time so disabled his right side that he could not write. It was a peculiarly trying affliction, but he submitted to it with Christian resignation. He could however still read and thus kept himself in touch with the world. His friends were always greeted with a genial smile; their words were listened to with appreciative interest; but he could only look and nod his response.

During these years of affliction his pastor always administered the Holy Communion to him in his home, immediately after the church service, for which he longed with eagerness of soul.

The last time he was dressed and in his parlor, was on Easter day. It was his strong will and earnest purpose that made this possible. As soon as this service was ended, he was assisted to his bed, which he never again left. The only partial exception to this statement was, that on last Whitsunday, he insisted on being again dressed, and thus supported in his bed, he partook for the last time of the Holy Communion. As soon as the service was ended he was disrobed, only to be similarly robed again in preparation for his burial.

After being confined to his bed, he ceased to read and took no further interest in current events. His mind was absorbed with spiritual meditations.

Through this long and unusual affliction he betrayed no impatience. Calmly and peacefully he waited till his change should come.

Every thing that kindly sympathy and affection could do for him was done by faithful hands, prompted by a loving and grateful heart.

After such services by his pastor as were fitting the occasion, his remains were borne to the spot he had chosen for himself, by the side of his kindred in the Reformed graveyard, where they await the resurrection of the just. E. R. E.

DIED.—In Leitersburg, Md., June 19th, Rebecca Bowers, aged 76 years, 3 months and 9 days.

She was an earnest Christian and a consistent member of the Reformed church at Leitersburg, regular in her attendance on the means of grace, and beloved by all who knew her, and was a good woman. "She is now resting from her labors," and may she rest in peace. S.

LAYING THE CORNER-STONE OF TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH, POTTSVILLE, PA.

The ceremony of laying the corner-stone of a new church in Pottsville was performed on Sunday, July 26th. It was a new epoch in the history of that congregation. The day was beautiful, the weather favorable, and the character of the service from beginning to end without a single jar to disturb the solemnities of the occasion. There was no gaudy display of waving banners, no din of martial music, no parade of worldly pomp, but everything was tinged and mellowed with the true spirit of worship, producing the most complete harmony with the sacredness of the holy day.

This day was set apart for the observance of the sacred solemnities of the occasion. The whole day was taken up with religious service, and the whole congregation was ready to enter with spirit into the worship. There was no hesitation or halting; no incompleteness of plan, or want of readiness; no jostling in the execution of a carefully arranged service; no fidgety nervousness on the part of the ministers or his officers, to the great mortification of the audience, in the performance of the crowded duties of an auspicious day.

There were, including that of the Sunday-school, five services during the day, but every part of each service was well-timed. There were no long speeches, no time consuming repetitions, but an onward steady progress in the worship, reaching its culmination in the benediction in the evening, at the closing service of that day. In carrying out the orderly arrangement of these special services extending through the whole day, there was a restfulness that was refreshing to the soul, constraining it to cry out, "Lord it is good to be here," and filling the heart and mind with an inspiration to do the noble work of erecting a tabernacle to the honor of His name.

The following ministers were present to assist the resident pastors in the joyous festivities of this happy occasion: Revs R. Duenger, D.D., Ashland; W. Donat, Schuylkill Haven; Calvin E. Bartholomew, Cressona; T. J. Bower, St. Clair; J. P. Stein, Millersville; M. H. Mishler, Pottsville; Prof. E. L. Kemp, President of Palatinate College of Myerstown. Ministers from other churches: Revs. Jacob Belville, D. D., First Presbyterian church of Pottsville; G. A. Hinterlitner, Trinity Lutheran, Pottsville; Theodore Stevens, Methodist Episcopal church, Pottsville; John Lynn, Second Presbyterian, Pottsville; J. C. Crouse, Zion's Evangelical church, Pottsville; D. W. Jones, student of theology.

The minister of the new Lutheran church at Pottsville being absent from home on a vacation, the consistory very kindly tendered the use of the church to Trinity Reformed congregation, which was thankfully accepted, and services held therein on three consecutive Sundays. Rev. Jno. P. Stein preached the sermon at the morning service from text recorded in Acts 4: 12. He was followed by Father Duenger in a touching and eloquent address in the German language.

At the afternoon services three brief addresses were delivered. Drs. Belville and Stevens very cordially, in well chosen words, commended the work so auspiciously begun, gently admonishing the faithful use of the means of grace and diligent service in the work of the Lord, so that each one may become a living stone in the spiritual temple of the Lord.

A brief historical address was delivered by a former pastor, wherein it was stated that "the laying of the corner-stone of a new church edifice for Trinity congregation forms a new epoch in the history of the Reformed church in the mountain city, in the county of Schuylkill.

"As a religious denomination, having under its care, in the earlier history, the German settlers that came from the Fatherland, the Reformed Church is not a stranger in the mining regions of the Keystone State.

"In fact a careful search of the annals of this county acquaint us with the fact, that it has been identified with the religious and educational interests of Pottsville at the very beginning of the present century. As far back as the year 1811, we are informed in the history of the county, that a log building was erected in the locality where Colonel N. B. Hyde's residence now stands, northeast of town, known as the Dutch church, and where the first school was taught in this region in the German tongue by an old soldier, who had served in the German cavalry in our national struggle for independence.

"In this the first school taught in this region we learn that Abraham Potts, who was related to the founders of this ancient borough, was a pupil.

"In the meagre accounts of the early pioneer life of the county all traces are lost of this German organization. Nothing definite presents itself in the history of the Reformed church until 1834, when conjointly with the Lutherans religious worship was maintained and a frame church was erected in 1837 on Third street, in the vicinity where the Trinity Lutheran church now stands.

"The pastor for the Reformed people then was Rev. Daniel Hassinger, whose name stands in connection with the church until 1847.

"In pursuing the history of the Reformed church, we notice that Rev. J. H. Reubelt was pastor in 1848. Rev. J. W. Hoffmeier in 1850 was the pastor, located at Orwigsburg, who attended to the interests of the Reformed congregation until 1852. At this period the Classis at Lebanon commissioned Rev. Dr. John Gantenbein as a missionary to attend to the interest of the Reformed congregation. He was followed in 1855 by Dr. I. E. Graeff, who was the last pastor that served this union congregation. At this period the Reformed congregation sold its interest in a former church erected at a cost of $2,000 for $950.

"In 1856 Rev. Samuel Miller became the pastor of the Reformed congregation, a new constitution was adopted and the congregation proceeded to the erection of the First Reformed church, at Market St. above Eighth.

"The corner stone was laid on the 17th of July, 1856, exactly thirty-five years ago, and the building was completed at a cost of $3,500. In 1864 Rev. Dr. J. C. Bucher, of Lewisburg, became pastor and served the congregation in both languages for a period of four years.

"On May 15, 1868, at a meeting of Lebanon Classis in Mahanoy City, after hearing the parochial report of Dr. Bucher the consistory of the aforesaid congregation was advised to effect a division on the basis of language. In the same year Trinity Reformed congregation was duly organized and the church previously owned by the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church, an organization then extinct, was bought from the Thompson estate for $5,200 and repaired at a cost of $3,000. In October of the same year Rev. Dr. John A. Hoffheins, now pastor at Martinsburg, W. Va., was called to be its first pastor.

"In 1871 Rev. Jno. P. Stein became pastor, who with a heroic self-denial, faithfully served the congregation for eleven years.

"In 1882 Rev. A. R. Bartholomew became its third pastor, who has labored with unremitting zeal for the upbuilding of the congregation up to the present time."

At 4 P.M. the whole congregation proceeded to the site where the new church is to be erected. After a short service on the ground in the open air, where no less than 2000 people were assembled, the ceremonial act of laying the corner-stone was performed.

The pastor read the inscription of the corner-stone: "Trinity Reformed Church rebuilt 1891." He named as he deposited the several articles in the following order: Copy of Holy Scripture, Heidelberg Catechism, Order of Worship and Hymns, Charter and Constitution of Trinity Reformed church, names of first and present consistory and pastors, list of members of the congregation, Sunday-school, choir, Missionary Society, Mite Society, Christian Endeavor, Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, name of the President of the United States and his Cabinet, Legislative directory with names of Governor, heads of departments and list of members of session 1891, names of judges of the county of Schuylkill, names of Pottsville government, names of Pottsville school board, order of service used at the corner-stone laying, names of clergymen present. The following copies of Reformed church papers, MESSENGER, Christian World and Hausfreund; copies of town papers, Miners' Journal, Evening Chronicle, Daily Republican, Jefferson Democrat, Amerikanischer Republikaner, coins of 1891, Schuylkill county soldier monument medals, name of architect of the church, a number of coins and relics. The above were enclosed in a copper box presented by Messrs. Wilhelm and Kennedy. The box with its contents was then placed within the opening of the stone.

The pastor, placing his hand upon the stone, said: "I here lay the corner-stone of a house to be erected under the name of Trinity Reformed church, and to be devoted to the worship of Almighty God. In the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen."

The congregation here joined in the Apostles' Creed, after which prayer was offered. The hymn, "Oh Lord of Hosts whose Glory Fills," was rendered by the audience and the impressive ceremonies were concluded with the benediction.

Rev. Prof. E. L. Kemp, President of Palatinate College, preached the sermon at the evening service from the text 1 Cor. 16: 13, "Quit you, like men, be strong." In an easy and graceful style he developed an instructive sermon, full of admonition, to the young and old properly to fit themselves for the great work, which they are expected to perform in the erection of a house of worship to the glory of God.

The new church will be built of Philadelphia pressed brick with Indiana sand stone trimmings. The front will have a height of 50 feet and a tower on the south west corner 90 feet high. There will be two entrances, making the audience-room easy of access. The Sunday-school room will have all modern conveniences. The infant room will be front between the towers. The senior department will be 50x35 feet and in the rear of the building there will be three class rooms besides the library. The structure will present an imposing appearance and when completed it will be one of the finest in the interior of the State. The plans were drawn by J. S. D'Orsay, of New York.

The erection of this church will cost no less than $10,000. The growing congregation is in need of a larger house of worship. The work is undertaken in good faith. The church will be an ornament to the town when completed. The success which has attended the nine years of his pastorate with the confidence of his people and the practical sympathy of the community warrants the prediction that in the near future, to the beautiful churches of Pottsville another will be added to which every citizen as well as the church at large can look with becoming pride.

Bro. Bartholomew is well calculated to carry forward this work. He possesses the necessary requisites of success. The community in which he lives recognizes this fact. My friend, Mr. Frank Carter, Land Agent of Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, calls him a "hustler," and said that on account of special qualification the business men of Pottsville were seriously debating the subject of electing him as President of the Board of Trade. To this, however, his brethren in the ministry would seriously object, and would respectfully suggest the kindly co-operation in the way of financial aid in the important work in which he is at present engaged. In faith the

URSINUS COLLEGE LETTER.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of Ursinus College, held at the collegiate buildings on Tuesday, 21st ult., the personnel of the Faculty and the departments of instruction for the year 1891–92 were finally adjusted. It is the aim of the Board to increase the efficiency of the institution whenever required to make changes in the teaching force, by a wiser distribution and division of labor, and by the addition of thoroughly trained men to the Faculty.

The vacancy in the Presidency of the college created by the withdrawal of the Rev. H. W. Super, D.D., LL.D., from active service was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. Williard as Acting President. He will continue to teach Ethics in the College and Apologetics in the Theological Department.

The Rev. James I. Good, D.D., has been assigned to the Professorship of Church History, Symbolics and Practical Theology. To make the theological department more effective it has been placed under a separate organization with him as Dean at its head.

In the College the department of Mathematics, Physics and Astronomy will be in charge of Prof. Chas. H. Wheeler, Ph.B. This gentleman is a graduate of Syracuse University, New York. He has done Observatory work in astronomy and field work in civil engineering, and has had two years' experience in teaching.

Prof. J. Shelly Weinberger, A.M., will continue at the head of the department of Greek. He will give more attention to advanced Greek in the Junior and Senior years, and the beginners in the language will be trained according to the inductive method under the drill of Prof. George Stibitz.

English language and literature under the instruction of Prof. Samuel Vernon Ruby, Esq., A.M., Ph.D., will hereafter be obligatory.

Robert G. Magee, A.B., a special student under Elocutionist Roberts of Philadelphia, will give lessons in Voice Culture, and Public Reading and Speaking.

Prof. M. Peters, A.M., B.D., is making special investigation in the department of Natural Science, and is his purpose to equip the new laboratories of the college second to none. He will give students laboratory practice in chemistry during the latter part of the year. Prof. Peters will also teach New Testament Greek, N. T. Theology and Exegesis in the Theological Department.

Prof. George Stibitz, A.M., Ph.D., is one of the best younger Hebrew teachers in the country. He uses the inductive method, and is unsurpassed in drill and force in instruction. He also gives the Junior class in college a course in the English Bible, studying it as history and literature, and analyzing its contents by books and chapters. Advanced Latin will also remain in his hands.

The inductive method is also used by Prof. N. M. Balliet, A.M., in teaching Latin. He will increase his work in History in the junior year and in Latin for admission to college.

Prof. Alcide Reichenbach, A.M., has relinquished the Principalship of the Academic Department, and will devote himself to French, German, Pedagogy, and Academic English.

Prof. Balliet will hereafter be Principal of the Academic Department. The instruction in this department is nearly all given by the College Professors. Prof. A. L. Cutter, M.E., will teach the common branches.

The Board of Directors has also elected Mr. Samuel Shumaker, of York, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. This will be a new college officer, who will devote all his time and attention to the care and management of the property.

The artesian well on the college grounds has been sunk to a depth of 241 feet. The apparatus used for testing it yielded a steady stream of 27 gallons a minute, all that the engine used had power to pump, and with greater pumping capacity the indications were that the supply might be found again as great.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.

Brethren of the Reformed Church: The mission in this growing and prominent city of the west is a worthy plant of our Reformed Zion. Much in the way of material progress has been made, and much more remains to be done. A well located lot has been secured, and it is now desired to erect thereon a suitable church building, costing from six to eight thousand dollars. For this sum a suitable and sufficiently large building can be erected. The membership cannot do this of themselves, therefore, in this public way we enter a plea for aid. The arrangement with the Board of Missions is such that happen what may, nothing can be lost to the church at large in a financial way.

The membership is by no means wealthy. As usually is the case, the Reformed church began work at too late a date to control the wealth of Reformed church material, which has formed a church home in the other denominations.

The material of the mission, however, is good and very commendable, but financially too weak to build the church alone. With thousands of people out of all church relations, a city of nearly sixty thousand souls, and that the capital of the State, and hence the gateway to all other cities and points in Nebraska, this mission is highly important to our western Reformed church interests. Will the churches, Sunday-schools, Missionary Societies, Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, and individuals who love the Reformed church at heart, hear our prayer? As missionary pastor we lay this important matter before you. If you cannot give money, you can at least pray for us. Our heart is saddened to look upon what has been neglected and lost to the Reformed church in this city and surrounding community. By God's help, we will save that which is left, recover much that has been lost, and seek the conversion of many out of Christ.

Our temporary chapel can at best only serve us until winter sets in. We desire to, at least, close in and finish the Sunday-school room of our new church this fall, then complete the remainder of the building next spring. This done, and the success of the mission is assured. To do this we will receive as much aid as possible in the city, but as we are one of five mission churches now desiring to build, we cannot secure as much as we otherwise would, hence the greater our need of help from abroad. It is our purpose to dedicate the church unencumbered. Shall it be done?

We have regular Lord's Day services, a good Sunday-school, weekly prayer meetings, and monthly contributions to the cause of missions. To the latter must be added, quarterly communion contributions. There is also a Ladies' Missionary Society, that is doing effective work. Through all these channels the mission will do all within its power to complete the contemplated building. Our building fund is divided into ten dollar shares.

Dear Christian friends, how many shares will you have in this work for Christ? If you cannot take at least one share, then take any fraction thereof. We also have a one dollar fund, a half dollar fund, and a twenty-five cent fund. Send all monies to the missionary pastor, Box 806, Lincoln, Neb., or to Kieffer E. Rice, care of Raymond Bros., Lincoln, Neb. All funds received will be promptly acknowledged in the church papers by the committee on funds.

Why is the mission in Lincoln so important? There is Reformed church material (both from the Dutch and German), constantly coming into the city, all of which will be lost to the Reformed church unless we erect a suitable church home in which to receive this material. The city is the capital of the State; a great commercial metropolis; has state institutions valued at nearly $2,000,000; four libraries containing over 50,000 volumes; has three universities, the University of Nebraska having about 600 students; has four colleges; one conservatory of music, and other public institutions worthy of note. All of these, both directly and indirectly, make the building of the Reformed church a necessity to further ingathering throughout the State and West. With such opportunities, as above mentioned, at our very door, by which a knowledge of the Reformed church can be diffused, through organized church work in this city, we cannot afford to allow this mission to struggle in a weak condition, but must put it on a firm basis as early as possible.

Dear brethren: In this brief communication we have humbly and fairly presented to you our appeal, as well as such a statement of facts concerning the importance of the field to the Reformed church, as we deem necessary and just to all concerned. Now, in the name of the Lord, we ask a prayerful consideration of our plea for aid.

Help us when help is needed.

T. F. STAUFFER.

CORNER-STONE LAYING.

Thursday, July 2, 1891, was a day to be remembered by the pastor, Rev. R. F. Gass, and the people of Trinity Reformed church, Oak Ridge, Pa. The old church, a frame structure, built some forty years ago, had been torn down to be replaced by a more commodious and modern edifice. The old church stood upon a most beautiful site near a natural grove and the new church is to be placed upon this spot hallowed by sacred memories. The foundation walls were almost completed and the day above mentioned was appointed for the laying of the corner-stone. Providence smiled upon us in granting us delightful weather. A large audience had assembled to join in the service and witness the laying of the corner-stone. The writer preached in a beautiful natural grove near by the church grounds. The theme of the discourse was "The Spiritual Temple," based on Eph. 2: 20.

After the sermon a liberal collection was taken and the pastor proceeded to lay the corner-stone, using the impressive service found in the "Directory of Worship for the Reformed Church," placing the usual articles within the stone.

The church to be erected is to be a frame structure, Gothic style, slate roof, 60x40 feet, with an additional room 40x20 feet, separated from main room by sliding partition. The cost of this church will be about $3500.

This is the third new church built in this charge during the present pastorate, and only one of the many evidences of the success of the pastor. May the Lord continue to bless the work among this interesting people.

ORDINATION AND INSTALLATION.

The ordination and installation of Rev. W. J. Muir took place in the Reformed church, Tremont, on Monday evening, 20th ult. Prior to the services, Schuylkill Classis convened in special session for the purpose of receiving Lic. Muir from the Classis of Lehigh, and making provision for his ordination and installation as pastor of the Tremont charge. The services proper opened after Classis had adjourned, the ministers present and participating being Revs. C. S. Gerhard, D D., G. B. Walbert, T. J. Bower, C. E. Bartholomew, David Scheirer, Jr.

The ordination service was conducted by Rev. Walbert, but all the ministers present joined in the ceremony of laying on of hands. The installation service was conducted by Dr. Gerhard and was concluded by the congregation kneeling and invoking God's gracious benediction on the newly formed pastoral relation.

Rev. Walbert addressed the congregation taking for his theme, "The Church." Dr. Gerhard next gave an interesting talk on the relation of the congregation to the pastor, explaining the succession of the ministry, and the import of ordination and installation.

The service was one of deep, solemn significance to both pastor and people. No doubt the newly ordained man will never forget the impressiveness of the occasion, while the good people of the charge will have learned to love and esteem their pastor highly because of the vows he has assumed.

There were present large delegations from Donaldson and from the Clouser congregations, and all these, in connection with the members of Tremont, joined in a general handshaking with their new pastor, and extended congratulations and best wishes for success in his high calling.

Hominy Gems.

BY MRS. D. A. LINCOLN,
Author Boston Cook Book.

Mix 2 table-sp. fine, uncooked hominy, ½ tea sp. salt, 1 table-sp. butter, and ½ cup boiling water. Place this over the tea kettle until the hominy absorbs all the water. Pour 1 cup boiling milk on 1 scant cup fine yellow corn meal; add 2 table-sp. sugar and the hominy. Let it cool slightly, then add the yolks of 2 eggs beaten to a light froth, then the whites beaten stiff. Stir in 1 level tea sp. Cleveland's baking powder and bake at once in hot buttered gem pans, about 20 minutes. A scant cup of cold boiled hominy may be used instead of the fresh hominy. It should be sifted through a squash strainer, to free it from lumps.—(Copyright, 1891, by Cleveland Baking Powder Co.)

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

REUNION AT IDLEWILD.

The great annual harvest home reunion of the Reformed congregations contiguous to the P. R. R., from Pittsburgh to Altoona, will be held at Idlewild, Pa., Thursday, August 13th. The thousands who have spent pleasant days at the former reunions will be agreeably surprised this year. Idlewild has been wonderfully changed and beautified by the expenditure of large sums of money. To add to the comfort of all who can attend, the magnificent new dining hall and kitchen, with all their modern conveniences, will be left open and free to the public on this festive day, and refreshments served in the old dining hall and stands for the accommodation of all who do not wish to be encumbered with baskets. No pains and expense will be spared to make this reunion fully sustain the reputation which the Reformed reunions have established for their timely addresses, excellent music and unbounded social cheer. Several excellent bands of music will be in attendance and speakers of National fame will deliver addresses. Some of the best choirs of the county will render anthems, and the Welch Choir, which delighted all who heard it last year, will again render some excellent music.

Do not fail to make your arrangements to enjoy this festive occasion, for it will do you good to meet with the thousands of merry picknickers who will assemble from far and near. Come, bring your friends with you. Let new ties of friendship be formed and the old strengthened, then the Reformed Reunion of 1891 will live long in the memory of all who enjoy its social and intellectual feast.

INSTALLATION.

On Sunday, July 26th, in the Reformed church at Huntingdon, Pa., Rev. Wm. C. Schaeffer, Ph.D., was installed as pastor of Huntingdon charge, by a committee appointed by Juniata Classis, consisting of Revs. C. U. Heilman, C. H. Reiter and L. E. Coblentz. Brother Coblentz was absent.

The opening services were conducted by Rev. C. H. Reiter, and followed with a very appropriate sermon by Rev. C. U. Heilman, from 1 Cor. 9: 9, 10. The charge was then delivered to the pastor and people by Rev. C. H. Reiter.

Dr. Schaeffer enters upon the duties of his office in this charge with bright and encouraging prospects of a successful pastorate. The people are to be congratulated on their securing the services of a pastor whose ability and efficiency are well known.

PENNSYLVANIA.

East Vincent and Pikeland.—Rev. J. Calvin Fisher. The quarterly communions in the East Vincent and Pikeland charge, Chester county, Pa., have just been brought to a close. The attendance as well as the number of communicants was very large, but a small per cent. of the members not communing. At East Vincent there was an addition of six members, four by confirmation and two by certificate; at Pikeland an addition of four by confirmation.

Waynesboro.—Revs. Motter and Stofflet, with Elder Samuel Hoeflich, held educational meetings in the interest of Mercersburg College, at Grindstone Hill and Marion congregations on Sunday, July 26th. The interest in behalf of the college is increasing, and we look forward to the cancelling of the debt by the meeting of the Synod in the fall.

Grindstone Hill.—Licientiate I. Beaver has accepted a call to this charge and has already entered upon his duties. Mr. Beaver is a recent graduate of Theological Seminary, Tiffin, O. His address is Chambersburg, Pa.

Du Bois.—During a storm on the night of July 14th the steeple of St. Peter's Reformed church of this place was struck by lightning. It will cost probably $300 to repair the damage. Fortunately the church was insured.

Newmanstown.—A reunion of catechumens was held at this place on Sunday, 25th ult., Rev. A. J. Bachman. During his pastorate of thirteen years he confirmed 111—seven of whom died and three were dismissed elsewhere. Of those still members, 101, fifty-three were present.

Royer's Ford.—Licentiate Ernest Clapp was duly ordained to the holy ministry on the 22d ult., and installed pastor of the new mission at Royer's Ford, Pa., by a committee of Goshenhoppen Classis, of whom Revs. S. M. K. Huber and C. M. Herbst were present. On the 26th ult. Rev. Clapp preached his introductory sermon to a full house. He also performed his first baptism—an infant. At their first communion it is expected a large number will be added to the congregation. The interest is very promising. Rev. Clapp supplied this people whilst pursuing his studies at Ursinus College, and its present encouraging condition is mainly due to his labors there previous to his entering fully upon his pastorate.

INDIANA.

Pittsburgh.—Rev. Albert Klinger was ordained July 8th to the Gospel ministry and installed pastor of the New Pittsburgh charge, by a committee of Miami Classis, Revs. H. Herman, D.D., and A. E. Baichley being present. Dr. Herman preached the sermon. Rev. W. E. Ludwick was also present, who assisted in the services.

PERSONAL.

On Friday evening, July 24th, when Rev. R. E. Crum and family returned from a short vacation, they found the parsonage occupied by a few of the lady members of St. Peter's congregation, and an excellent supper awaiting them. After supper other members came in groups until the house was quite well filled. All came to welcome the pastor and his family back to Du Bois, and a very pleasant evening was spent together. De parting they left behind them tokens of their good will, in the way of gifts and articles for the table, etc., making the pastor and his family not only happier, but richer also for their coming. It is blessed to give. It is also pleasant to receive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The golden wedding of Mr. John Badger and wife of Mifflinburg, Pa., was celebrated at their residence on Saturday evening, July 18th. Friends and well-wishers of the aged couple thronged their home to the number of two hundred during the evening. In a substantial manner a further manifestation of their high regard for them was made by the presentation of a purse containing $121, mostly in gold. The presentation was made by Rev. L. D. Steckel, their pastor. This was followed by the presentation of a comfortable arm chair to Mr. Badger from his fellow members of the I. O. of O. F., Mr. E. Hoffman making the speech for the Order. Refreshments followed, which were provided by their friends. It was a happy and delightful occasion. The MESSENGER unites with them in extending congratulations to Mr. Badger and his good wife and hopes with them that many more years of wedded life may be theirs to enjoy.

Change of Address.

Rev. George J. Lisberger's address is Bath, Northampton county, not Northumberland, Pa., as was given in a late issue.

NOTICE.

The cause of Hungarian Missions demands your immediate attention. General Synod directed its Board of Home Missions to at once make provision for the spiritual wants of the Hungarians now in this country, many of whom belong to our Church. In obedience to instruction we have gone forward. Rev. G. Jurany, was brought to this country and located at Cleveland Ohio, and vicinity, where he is doing well.

A second missionary, Rev. J. Rovaisz, was selected on the best of credentials and sent for. He and his wife have arrived, and are located at 1415 Bluff St., Pittsburgh, Pa. He has been directed to take charge of the work at Pittsburgh, and the coke regions in its vicinity. He has made a good impression upon all who have met him, and has commenced his work. Services, for the present, are held in Grace Reformed church, Pittsburgh, through the courtesy of the congregations at such hours as their church is not otherwise in use. The beginning is full of promise, and the need for this particular work is imperative.

Rev. Rovaisz and wife, have come to us upon our invitation, with the assurance that their necessary traveling expenses would be paid, and that so long as he was in our service, he should have a living support. These expenses must now be paid, and his salary as missionary has commenced. The Board is acting for the Church, and in obedience to her instructions. This is special work, for which special funds must be provided. Synod has sent down a special apportionment for each, the Hungarian and Harbor Missions, but as yet only a small amount has come into our treasury. That treasury is now overdrawn to pay for these two special objects. This is not just, and the amount must be repaid.

We are satisfied that the Church only needs to know these facts, to correct this matter. It can be easily done. Spread the information, and give everybody an opportunity to make a special offering. Besides, pay promptly into the treasury the amounts apportioned for these purposes. What shall hinder this being done? He who has the will, can make a way to do it. It is right and just that it should be done—it is a privilege as well as a duty—it is your work as much as ours.

Editorial Notes.

—From a notice in this issue it will be learned that the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, Pa., will open its fall session, September 3d, next, 10 A.M. The prospects for a large increase in the number of students in this Seminary are very good. It is to be hoped that pastors and others will seek out young men who should prepare themselves for the holy ministry and see that they enter the institutions of the Church for that purpose.

—In the article "A Day of Pleasure," in our last issue, the types were made to say, "In seven houses they secured 22 names" of subscribers for the Missionary Guardian, etc., when it should have been seven hours.

—At the Mt. Gretna Farmer's Encampment which meets at Mt. Gretna, Lebanon Co., from the 6th to the 22d of this month, opening services will be held on Sunday 16th, 3 P.M., which will be conducted by Rev. Charles F. Deems, D.D., LL.D., of New York City, and Rev. J. Spangler Kieffer, D.D., of Hagerstown, Md. A regular order of service has been prepared by a committee of which S. P. Heilman, M.D., of Heilman Dale, Pa., is a member.

—As the time for the meeting of the several District Synods is approaching it is well to reiterate the importance of their giving attention to the requirements of the Constitution in ascertaining the votes of the Classes within their respective bounds upon the Hymnal which was sent down to them for rejection or adoption. The Constitution is plain upon the subject; a careful study of Articles 80 and 81 and amendments to the same on page 61 will confirm this. The District Synods must record the result of the vote upon an ordinance by the Classes, and through that record the General Synod ascertains the general result and makes its declaration.

—The friends of A. K. Stauffer, Esq., of Reading, Pa., will be saddened to learn of the death of his beloved wife, Mrs. Mary High Keim, which sad event took place on the 2d inst., at her residence, Hill Road, Reading. Mrs. Stauffer was of the old Keim family of Berks county, and by her mother was a descendant of the Randolphs of Virginia. She was a woman of remarkable culture, and was a great reader and a writer of articles in a number of papers devoted to art and in needle work of all kinds, and was an authority upon such. Besides this she was an accomplished musician, having won a distinction in both vocal and instrumental music. Mrs. Stauffer was a life-long member of the Episcopal Church, and was an earnest worker in and supporter of different charities in the community and church. She will be greatly missed in all the spheres in which she was accustomed to move. A devoted husband and five children mourn her departure. Her funeral took place on the 6th inst. The writer extends his hearty sympathy to his classmate in this his sore bereavement.

—The Fresh Air Funds of the different cities of the country are a kind of noble charity that commends itself to the sympathy and support of the charitable. Their object is to give to the poor children of our large cities an outing in the country for a week or two. Families are solicited to receive one or more children and entertain them for the time designated. It is not hard to imagine what a beneficial effect and great delight it would be to children of the crowded cities to pass two weeks in the country, where they might breathe fresh air and enjoy the wholesome food they would find upon the tables of the good people who take them into their homes. The sickly and weak in body would, after their stay in the country, return invigorated and with much to tell and think of, for many days to come. To afford these children this great pleasure is surely a work of love that will bring its happy return in more ways than one, and all engaged in it, and who contributed towards it in money, time, and labor, will receive their reward.

—We are led to speak of the above from the interesting account we have read in the local papers of Bedford county, this State, of the reception of a number of children from New York city, that arrived at Bedford on Wednesday, the 29th ult. Mr. Wm. Mann Irvine, a native of Bedford, and a member of the Senior Ciass of the Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., has been for several years Special Agent for the Fresh Air Fund of the New York Tribune. It has been one of his duties to visit different parts of the country to enlist the services of persons in localities to secure homes for the children the Fund will send out for the two weeks. In Bedford Co., he happily enlisted the services of Rev. R. Leighton Gerhart, pastor at Bedford, Rev. J. B. Stonesifer, Schellsburg, and Rev. A. S. Glessner, Mann's Choice, who, with others we cannot name, worked most energetically, particularly the first named, in stirring up an interest among their members and others, and were successful in finding many willing to open their homes to the children. The three named ministers went to New York and accompanied the children to Bedford. On their arrival there, the children were most heartily welcomed, and the persons in waiting received their little guests with great delight, and at once took them to their homes. The two weeks will be a time of pleasure and happiness to the little ones as well to their kind hosts and hostesses. From the interest manifested it is safe to say that double the number of children will be asked for in the future.

—An "outing" to the jaded, weary and ever-toiling ones is a pleasure and a profit, to body and soul. The day it is taken is truly a bright period in the journey of life, and the occasion itself leaves an indelible impression upon the memory. Taken in genial company it is all the more enjoyed and is fruitful of more beneficial effects. In returning from a day's "outing," the body may be weary and tired, but the rest that follows will drive all that far away, and the memory of the pleasure had will remain, and compensate for the time and energy spent.

—In keeping with the above we would tell of a pleasant "outing" which we, with others, had during the past week. We had for some time been wishing to take a day at sailing and fishing upon the beautiful Barnegat Bay, N. J. Not until the past week were we able to get together a sufficient number of congenial ones to indulge in this pleasure. Early on the morning of the day, Tuesday, 4th inst., our party of ten were upon the train on our way to Sea-side Park, the point where we were to start upon our sail. After a ride of an hour or so, we found ourselves at the above named place. The captain of the yacht Anna was in waiting for us. It took but little time for us to get on board of the yacht, and with sail in place we were soon off for the fishing grounds, some twelve or thirteen miles down the bay. It was a cloudy morning. "Old Sol" in vain tried to shine, and a stiff breeze was blowing; all in our favor for a good day upon the water, and possibly for fishing. Speeding through the water, with sail stretched to its fullest extent, we in a short time arrived at the fishing grounds, where we found others already there and at work. Seeing them now and then successfully catching fish, made us all the more eager for the fray. Taking in our sail and casting anchor, we soon had our rods out, hooks baited, and lines in the water. With anxiety all awaited to see who would catch the first fish. Each one of the ten felt sure he or she would secure that honor. The suspense is soon broken, and an elderly gentleman, Mr. V., landed safely the first fish, a weak fish. Thus the sport began, and the success of one made the others eager to follow in his wake. Others succeeded in landing now, and then, one, whilst a few becoming discouraged at their ill luck, threw down rod and line and indulged in the comforts of the little cabin. The labors of the morning made keen the appetite, and when noon arrived, if the bites of the fish grew less, there was every evidence that a more vigorous biting would be made at the contents of the well-filled lunch baskets which were then drawn out of their hiding place. To these full justice was done, and with the inner man well supplied, the rods and lines were taken up again, and the seeking of bites from fish was renewed with fresh vigor, but disappointment was our luck, and we concluded to seek other grounds, but meeting with no better success, resolved to return to the wharf and go home. By 5 P.M. we were under our home roofs, and enjoyed later, around the tea-table, a feast upon the fruits of our day's "outing." The venerable Secretary of our Board of Foreign Missions, Rev. Dr. H. of Allentown, Rev. S. with his two daughters, Mr. S., his son-in-law, two friends, of Easton, and the writer with his eldest daughter, will not soon forget their day's "outing" on Barnegat Bay.

Poetry.

THE LORD BLESS THEE AND KEEP THEE.

(Numbers 6 : 24.)

How shall He bless thee?
Not with earth's vain, empty blessing,
Joys that fade in the possessing;
Not with earth's poor, fleeting treasure,
Not with earth's mean, scanty measure—
But with the blessing of Him,
Whose light cannot fade or dim;
Whose boundless store
Yields ever more and more;
Whose mighty strength
Knows neither shortness nor length;
Whose wondrous love
Out-spans the heavens above;
With the gladness that knoweth no decay,
With the riches that cannot pass away,
With the sunshine that makes an endless day;
Thus may He bless thee.

How shall He keep thee?
Not with earth's poor, feeble keeping,
Eyes that cannot stay from sleeping;
Not with earth's fast tiring power,
Strength too weak for trouble's hour;
But with the keeping of Him,
Whose eye cannot grow dim,
Whose potent arm
Can ward off each alarm;
Whose untiring zeal,
No weariness can feel;
Whose tender care
Sends just what we can bear;
With the all-covering shadow of His wings,
With the strong love that guards from evil things,
With the sure power that safe to glory brings,
Will He keep thee.

THE SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE.

We wish to tell the readers of the MESSENGER something about the late meeting of the Assembly for Spiritual Conference of Reformed Ministers and Elders. It was held in buildings on the College campus at Lancaster, Pa., July 29 to August 4, 1891. The meeting was well attended and it was a very pleasant one. We think that there was but one sentiment with respect to the refreshing enjoyment which came to all who were present. The weather and the landscape were in their glory, too, and the few mild showers were welcomed as in harmony with the loveliness of the surroundings and the generous, gentle temper which pervaded the occasion.

When we wrote for these columns a few weeks ago a notice of the Commencement of that excellent school for our daughters, the Allentown Female College, we said that three things of special interest met us there. Respecting the Spiritual Conference this year at Lancaster we must say that four things of special interest arrested attention and made a strong impression. We will name them in their order, in answer to the probable question, How do ministers and elders spend the times? Or, What kind of a Conference is it? What was done?

1. From 8 to 9 A.M. there was a daily Bible study. The new professor in the Theological Seminary, Rev. J. C. Bowman, presided. St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians was the text. Every one was supposed to have a Bible in hand, generally the original, or else a commentary on the Epistle. The Epistle was then gone over critically, it is true, but also with resulting edification. There was some learning brought to bear as it comes from books, and as well likewise that wisdom which comes by the experience and the thought of the active ministerial life. Such a study is not dry and wearisome, but alive and stimulating. Mind acts on mind and heart gives impulse to heart, the large number of persons participating adding to the general effect. It is a feature of the Conference, highly to be commended, and one which by itself would make it worthy of favor; a feature not likely to be abandoned in the future.

2. Papers read. It has become a habit in our time that at all literary, scientific and religious gatherings there must be papers read on special subjects. In the case of the Conference the executive committee names the subjects and engages the writers in advance, so as to give them ample time to prepare. Five such papers were read on the present occasion. Following the reading, criticism, a free expression of opinion, both on the paper read and on the subject of it, was in order. This expression of thought, open and unhampered, from many intelligent persons and thus from many points of view, was one of the particularly interesting features. It was often the friction of thought against thought, and the additional lamp brought to add to the strength of the common light. The attendance during these special sessions, when living questions of the day were discussed, was always good, and the considerate spirit which prevailed among the members commendable. The opening sermon by Dr. Callender on Wednesday evening, the preparatory sermon by Rev. A. M. Schmidt and the communion sermon by Dr. Staley on Sunday, were in the nature of essays spoken, inasmuch as each one treated his subject in the sense of giving a complete statement, a very picture of it.

3. The devotional element. Every day from 4 to 5 o'clock, P.M., there was evening devotion. It was a most delightful characteristic of the Conference. It was led in turn by different brethren, and song constituted a prominent part of it. Many of the brethren are good singers, and they were ably led by Rev. A. P. Horn at the organ. Prominence was given throughout to this devotional service. In this connection we must not forget to mention the solemn preparatory service on Saturday and the inspiring communion on Sunday. For once ministers had the privilege of being the congregation and thus be in the position in which their members at other times find themselves. We can assure the people that ministers love to be the people when they can, and not have to take the part of being the officiating pastor. The writer must say that he cannot now call to mind an occasion when he enjoyed the worship connected with the eucharistic service as much as he did in this instance. At classical meetings we are generally too much overworked.

4. One thing becomes possible at such an assembly which does not often come into our way. We mean the having of a thoroughly good social time. That we had, and under conditions of the most desirable sort. At the Hall where the majority of the members of the assembly lodged and boarded there were from thirty to forty congregated when the attendance was at flood tide. Rev. Dr. Santee, one of the most genial spirits whom we have the pleasure of knowing, remarked during one of the sessions, that he appreciated greatly the social characteristic which appeared so prominently, and he gave expression, we doubt not, to the general sentiment. There were a number of spare hours during the day and the long evenings, made as long as they would bear, to be spent in this way. They were not allowed to pass unused. Old friendships were renewed, college days lived over again, the varied experiences of life, now sad and then mirthful, told. Often extremes in close juxtaposition; serious and anon roaring with laughter. Well, well, it was pleasant, and no question about it.

By and by, some more about the Conference.

"LORD, TO WHOM SHALL WE GO?"

BY REV. AMBROSE M. SCHMIDT.

Quoting from "The Interior," under "Points from Pulpit and Press," "The Independent" says, "We have never seen so many invitations on the part of the secular press to ministers to come out of the churches. If a man does not find himself built to fit the regulation size of denominational clothes to an inch, he gets an order from the devil outside to come out." If this is true, would it not be well for the Christian ministry to stand squarely on two feet long enough to ask in all seriousness, "Lord, to whom shall we go?"

That there is a spirit of unrest abroad in the Church, is a truth that requires no "proof texts" to compel its acceptance by the most orthodox. I use the term "Church" advisedly, for this unrest has pervaded every family of Christian life throughout the civilized world.

Romanism, chameleon-like, is striving to change the color of her robe. Theoretically she is laying aside the "Purple" and donning "The Stars and The Stripes." To-day she poses as the ever-zealous defender of freedom of thought, individual liberty and the promoter of liberal education. The Greek Church is striving to "compel men to come in," not through the power of love but by threatening persecution and exile. Protestantism is lopping off many old and dead branches, using the pruning knife on creeds and confessions and striving to shake off the many chains of dogmatism welded by the giants of theology of former generations. The times, we are told, demand revised methods, the Christian Church must keep in step with the music of the present age and unless this be done Christianity will lose her prestige while scepticism and agnosticism will reign supreme.

Surely there must be theological flax burning somewhere, else the cloud of smoke darkening our ecclesiastical atmosphere would be less dense than it appears to be at the present moment. With this unrest in the Church there is a corresponding unrest observed among the ministry.

Some, not a few, have found themselves built not "to fit the regulation size of denominational clothes." There are square men and round holes, round men and square holes. Some have found holes shaped after the manner of their frames and have crawled into them. Others have been driven forth as black sheep unworthy of association with their immaculate brethren, (e. g. the five ministers expelled from the Reformed Presbyterian Church). Still others are troubled in mind and spirit and are asking themselves questions such as these, "Where will it all end?" "Whither shall we go?" "Where can we find a form of religious life in harmony with our present apprehension of the truth?"

While these are racking their intellectual and spiritual understanding, seeking for answers, let us ask a few other questions pertinent to the same general subject. Have they who have leaped the fence or donned another denominational robe, found their environments thoroughly congenial? Have they gained what they were seeking? Are they satisfied, or if now satisfied will they continue in this happy frame of mind?

On the other hand, is it honorable, is it the act of a brave man to run away as soon as the first cry of fire is made? Dare we say or dare we believe that mere chance has placed us in the communion wherein we are serving the Master? That every man is free to leap the fence and affiliate with the laborers of another vineyard where the vines seem to be better kept, and the environments appear more pleasing to the eye? Surely the Lord of the vineyard cannot look upon desertion, such as this, with pleasure. He has assigned special fields to special men, and when man undertakes to choose his own vine or fig tree, the will of man cannot be in harmony with the will of the Master.

Undoubtedly many of the leaps have only been made after much prayer and meditation, yet is there not great danger in praying for what we want and then taking it without listening or waiting the Lord's answer to the prayer?

Again, are these recruits of real value to the denomination that receives them? A rector of one of the largest parishes of this city, said to me, "Those who come to us from other denominations are the men who give us the most trouble. They are the ones who insist upon the fences being built higher and stronger. Of course they would not acknowledge that you of the Protestant ministry are 'in the orders.' They call you laymen. We who are 'to the manor born' are less radical and many of us at least, are ready to take you by the hand and call you 'Brethren.'" Union is in the air, but does that mean that we shall have no special love for our own Christian family? The husband who loves not his own household above all others is not fit to be the head of any household, the minister of Christ who loves not his own communion "more than all these" is not worthy to break the bread of life in any other communion.

Let us as brethren "be all like-minded," but let us remember that the union of Christendom will not be effected by deserting Paul to labor with Barnabas. Let us rather remain where the Lord has placed us and in His strength labor to mould the life of our several communions more and more after the pattern of Him whose servants we are.

Is there any remedy at hand, a cure for this spirit of unrest? Perhaps no specific is to be offered, yet a panacea is available. Waste less time in the study of cultus, polity, ecclesiastical government and confessional differences. Devote more energy and labor in searching out the great truths of our Christian religion. Live in closer communion with Christ. Evidence more zeal in seeking and saving the shepherdless sheep. Show more courage in fighting sin and the devil. Do this, and the spirit of unrest will perish from inanition; the clouds of formalism and doctrinal differences will be dissipated and the light of God's own truth will brighten our way and at last lead us to Him who is "The Way, the Truth and the Life."

FOR SUMMER READING.—III.

The higher criticism of the Bible has been of some service in destroying the disposition to use it as a magical vade mecum. Taught to weigh and consider its statements as those of other books, it loses nothing for us as a rule of faith, but the very process of thought which leads us to examine and study its contents unfits us to use it in a superstitious way.

You will not find close and earnest students of the Scriptures led astray by such vagaries as Christian science. They may be enthusiastic students, professing great love for the Bible and claiming to have found hidden truths far beyond what the letter reveals, but critical students they are not. Ever ready to read something into the Scriptures, consciously or unconsciously to themselves, they endeavor to lead, rather than be led by the Word. It was Zwingli's critical study of the Word which led him to free himself from superstition, and the faith-cures and Christian pilgrimages to the shrine of the Virgin were destroyed.

It is singular to find extremes meet among the cultured and intelligent gentlemen and ladies of our land on the one hand, and the unlettered ploughman on the other, in the way of superstition. Some of the zealous and enthusiastic lady Christians of a certain city in our State paid a good round sum to be taught the science of faith-cure by a woman lecturer who held forth in a public hall on a Sunday. These were Bible students and Bible-readers; they loved to talk of "the Book;" they could see every moral movement of the age as clearly defined in it as some men can see the Pope in the Book of Revelation; they were ready to instruct their pastors, and all others, but they were not critical students. They were superstitious. Hence, when the woman lecturer talked sweetly, and revealed "such a beautiful faith," they were ready to follow the new light and lift up their hands in holy horror at a sensible lady of the Reformed Church who declared she did not believe her theories. Their eyes were opened, but it cost some of them fifty dollars apiece before they saw that they had been following a blind guide. Higher criticism might have shocked them for a season, but it never would have damaged their faith as much as these superstitious fancies have done.

We have the same false use of the Scriptures among the less intelligent, at whom these ladies would laugh if they were held up as Bible Christians. And yet it seems to me the balance of favor is on the side of the lowly who, while they use the Scriptures in a wrong way, lay not so much stress upon their use of it as to set themselves up as the teachers of others. They believe that they have a gift, and by inheritance or communication have received this gift to be used for the welfare of others.

Some years ago in what is called the Dutch-corner in Bedford county there lived an old lady by the name of, we shall call her Blank. She was a member of the Lutheran Church, and as far as we could learn was a good, peaceable neighbor and faithful to her Church duties, so far as her numerous patients and visitors would allow. We never heard anything against her—and this is saying a great deal. This woman was believed to have the power of curing babies of the op-nehem—the taking-off. I suppose she believed herself to have the power. I am sure she could have gotten as many testimonials from people within a radius of twenty miles of her ability in this direction, as Mishler ever got for his bitters. The process of cure was something as follows: The baby was taken to her home, if at all possible. In extreme cases she consented to visit the sick. The child was given a warm drink of herbs, then taken to a heated oven—one of the good, old-fashioned brick ovens—and passed in three times, the priestess of op-nehme repeating certain words of Scripture. This operation was repeated three times, all of which leads one to suppose that the names of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity were used in this magical formula.

One Sunday when I passed her house, I saw so many vehicles hitched to the fence that I thought there was a funeral on hand. I afterwards learned that in the several buggies and spring-wagons, afflicted babes had been brought, some from twenty-miles distant, to be cured of the taking-off. Some of these cured babies I have tossed in my arms—others who were not cured I have buried. The cures were remembered—the failures were forgotten. Some of my good people who were willing to accept the teaching of the Heidelberg Catechism, drew the line at old mother Blank. I was never fortunate enough to draw the old lady out in the way of giving me her views, except to get from her the statement, "there are more things in the Bible than some people know." Verily, thou speakest the truth, thought I.

Since Mrs. Blank used hot teas and a heated oven—a bath of hot air—one can readily see that these cures, if effected at all, were effected by outward means. But she professed, and those who applied for the use of her power believed, that the children were cured by the Word of God. Just as a good lady whom I knew believed there was a charm in the baptismal water. After I had baptized the child, I noticed that she gave it a drink from the baptismal bowl. (It was a private baptism.) When asked why she had done so, she evaded my question, but when pressed, said "it will keep off the whooping cough." No one of proper wisdom and regard for his fellow-men will ridicule persons for such views. But I could not help wishing for her sake that the child would get the whooping-cough. I kept my eye upon it and rejoiced to see that in due time the sickness came.

When one beholds these weeds of superstition growing up in the garden of the human heart, which at the same time bears the fragrant flowers of reverent trust and pious devotion, much as he may feel like using the sledge-hammer blows of a destructive criticism, he falls back upon a more gentle mode of dealing with such foolish fancies. Those who affect to despise such beliefs in others are often under the power of them themselves.

I was once asked by a woman if my children had the whooping-cough, and when I answered no, she said, "Well, if they take it just send them to me. I'll give them some bread and they'll get over it." After some further questioning, her husband, a Kentuckian, said, "Oh! she's got a foolish Pennsylvania superstition that because she married a man with the same name she had before she was married, she can cure the sickness by giving the child something to eat." Pausing a moment he added, "Blamed if she don't do it, too!" Murder will out.

Easily as we may dispose of all such cases, and smile at a belief which is childish rather than childlike, we must lament the misuse of the Divine Word under the dominion of ignorance and sometimes of a trust which seems to come from the lower regions. But a case more difficult of explanation may do for a summer's day reading, which shall be given in our next. E. N. K.

THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF THE REFORMED CHURCH, LANCASTER, PA.

ITS NEED OF A NEW BUILDING.

This, the oldest educational institution in the Church, first opened its doors in Carlisle, March 11, 1825. Beginning without an adequate financial support, and being called to confront many difficulties and to endure sore trials, it required courage and patience to secure for it a fixed abiding place.

In the valuable books entitled "Beginnings of the Theological Seminary," and "Recollections of College Life," by Dr. Theo. Appel, the reader will become more fully acquainted with the nature and character of the conflict that presented itself in the earlier history of these literary institutions.

The surroundings at Carlisle seemed not to be favorable to the Seminary, neither were they congenial to the professors, nor to the students. Its very life being endangered by querilous and ambitious friends, the Synod at Lebanon in 1829 gave direction for its removal to York, Pa., where, in connection with a High School, it maintained itself for an interval of several years in a flourishing condition. In 1834, at the Synod of Pittsburgh, action was taken with the view of securing suitable buildings for these institutions. In response to this action, Mercersburg, a country village, containing 1200 inhabitants, stepped to the front and pledged itself for $10,000 in cash free from all legal incumbrances, for the erection of the necessary buildings. This liberal offer was accepted by the Church, and in the year 1836 the High School—and later on the Theological Seminary, raised their stakes at York, folded their tents and took up their line of march, leaving Mt. Carmel to the right, and encamped in what is historically known as its "Beautiful Mountain Home" at Mercersberg. Here, amid the delightful surroundings of its rural home, the Theological Seminary, in connection with the High School, now known as Marshall College, began to grow and flourish. The intellectual vigor and the theological ability of an excellent corps of teachers, including the names of Rauch, Nevin and Schaff, gave to these institutions an honorable name, which was heralded far and wide. Here in its quiet mountain home at Mercersburg for nearly thirty-four years, the Theological Seminary was doing a grand and noble work, to which the Reformed Church can ever point with just and becoming pride. The necessary work which these institutions were called to do for the Church, earnestly called for stronger support in the form of financial aid. In the union of Marshall College with Franklin College at Lancaster in 1853, the interests of this literary institution were permanently secured by what was then considered an ample endowment. In the removal of Marshall College from Mercersburg, the Theological Seminary was made to feel its peculiar isolation. The students became restless, and even the professors themselves became impatient in the confinement of their mountain home.

This impatient restlessness became more manifest, immediately after the close of the late civil war. Then the whole nation throbbed with the impulse of a new life. The tendency of the age was centralization, revealing itself in powerful combinations in the social, intellectual and financial world.

These tendencies acted as goads upon the Church, teaching her to forecast her future, and to combine her influence so as to secure for her Theological Seminary the highest degree of success. It was by influences akin to these, that induced the Synod at Hagerstown in 1868 to instruct the trustees of the Theological Seminary to secure through an agent $50,000 for the establishment of a permanent home for the Theological Seminary at Lancaster. An agent was secured, who canvassed three of the Classes belonging to the Eastern Synod and a portion of Maryland Classis now belonging to Synod of Potomac, which resulted during the first year in securing in cash and notes for removal and endowment $16,900. To hasten this movement, the trustees of Franklin and Marshall College donated five acres of ground, valued at $5000, as a location for the erection of suitable Semianary buildings. In addition to this a contribution of $5000 for removal was given by Elder Jno. C. Kunkel (deceased), of Harrisburg, Pa. In view of this partial success attained in a limited field, the Synod at Mechanicsburg in 1870 was brought to a direct vote resulting in 69 yeas against 13 nays for an immediate removal of the Seminary to Lancaster.

The trustees of the Theological Seminary were instructed to proceed in the erection of suitable buildings, and in accordance with this direction, two dwelling-houses for the use of the professors engaged in the Seminary were put up at a cost of $15,000 on the ground donated by the trustees of Franklin and Marshall College. The authorities of the College having offered the use of the recitation rooms in the College building gratuitously for the temporary use of the professors and students of the Seminary, its removal was accomplished and its first session was opened in September, 1871, in the College building at Lancaster.

In 1884, at the Synod of Pottstown, action was taken to secure a larger endowment and additional professorships for the Theological Seminary. The work was given into the hands of a committee that labored without remuneration, securing $10,000, an amount adequate to fully endow the third professorship—namely, that of Hebrew and Old Testament Theology. During the celebration of the Centennial and Semi-centennial of Franklin and Marshall College an effort was made to enlarge its endowment fund, which resulted in securing $30,000 for the complete endowment of the Presidency of the institution. While this work was being done for the College the interests of the Theological Seminary were held in abeyance.

For twenty years the College has served the Seminary in the use of its rooms for its lectures and recitations. Notwithstanding its hampered condition, the interests of the Seminary have been wisely cared for and the attendance at the School of the Prophets has been largely increased.

The Seminary building at Mercersburg, together with the two professors' houses, which were leased to the Board of Regents of Mercersburg College for a nominal sum, was in accordance with the action of the Synod of Bellefonte in 1882, transferred by the trustees of the Theological Seminary to the trustees of the Synod of the Potomac and their successors in office, for educational and religious purposes under the control of the Reformed Church.

This gift of the Theological Seminary could not have been more wisely bestowed. A thriving literary institution has been nobly maintained under the patronage of the Potomac Synod. In a laudable manner has she carried forward her educational work. In addition to this, she has in grateful response endowed the Chair of New Testament Exegesis in the Theological Seminary at Lancaster, thus adding another honor to her many laurels. Her illustrious example is carrying with it an influence that is urging on her fair sister—the Synod of Pittsburgh—to the performance of a similar work, which, when completed, will bring to the Synods of the East additional joy.

The three English Synods, namely, the Eastern, Pittsburgh and Potomac together with the German Synod of the East constitute the mother Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States without division until 1871. The history of the Theological Seminary and the Synodical action taken in regard to it up to that time is a unit. To this history these Synods are the legitimate heirs—share and share alike. Each one shares an equal claim in the Theological Seminary, founded in great self-denial and earnest toil by the prayers and tears of a pious ancestry. And now, while under the fostering care of a kind heavenly Father, the sphere of her usefulness is greatly enlarged, earnestly demanding a suitable home to do her God-given work, is it not right and eminently befitting that these Synods should unitedly rally in erecting for her a home that will meet the demands in her present history?

It should be a home ample in its accomodations, one that will be in keeping with the architectural taste of our growing cities, like that of Lancaster. The Seminary has for more than 60 years been honored with a corps of faithful teachers, who have nobly defended the spirit and genius of the Reformed Church to the admiration of the theological world, at home and abroad. The grateful tribute of those who sat at their feet would be to infuse, by word and example, a generous enthusiasm throughout the whole Church, in favor of the erection of a beautiful and substantial building for the use of its Theological Seminary. Such a work as this can be accomplished by the prayers and offerings of the Church—and it is to be nothing less than this—that can be a fitting memorial to the fidelity and heroism of a faithful and God-fearing ministry and an honor worthy of the Reformed Church to be accomplished in the closing of the nineteenth century.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The Anniversary and Bethany Day will be celebrated on Thursday, August 27th. The question is constantly being asked, What is the date of the Anniversary? The date has been given every week in this column for the last six weeks and we hope that no one will miss the occasion for want of a knowledge of the date.

Again, to all readers of the Church papers, to congregations, Sunday-schools, friends of the Home and Reformed people in general, we extend a cordial invitation to spend the day (August 27,) on the church grounds at the Home at Womelsdorf. This day is not only the occasion of the Anniversary of the Home but it is also "Bethany Day," intended for a general gathering of Reformed people of Eastern Pa.

The former inmates will have a meeting in the chapel as early in the day as possible, not later than eleven o'clock.

At twelve o'clock there will be a meeting in the chapel of all those interested in the matter of holding "Bethany Day" celebrations in the future.

Dinner will be served from 11 A.M., to 2 P.M.

Our Philadelphia friends will please consult Rev. J. H. Sechler concerning a special excursion, at special rates, to be run from the city. Rev. Sechler's address is No. 714 N. 15th St., Phila., Pa.

Look for final notices next week, concerning Anniversary.

THE FOREIGN WORK IN JAPAN.

SENDAI, Japan, June 22, 1891.

Rev. S. N. Callender, D. D.—Dear Brother: A sentence in one of your paragraphs in the June Missionary Guardian, has suggested to me the writing of some personalities in connection with young women and girls educated in the Mission Schools, which I thought might prove interesting to the readers of the papers and perhaps, induce some noncontributors to assist in furthering this work. The sentence above referred to, was to the effect that one girl is good for her influence upon at least four men, viz: father, brother, husband and son. The following incidents are intended to show how soon, how willingly and how faithfully these girls attempt to exercise that influence for good.

One may listen to an address before any assembly of women and girls, in the country, and the burden is almost sure to be the necessity of Japanese women's doing something. In the quaint phraseology of the girls it is: "We girl students are the reformers of Japan," "We must work for our country," or "We must not neglect to sacrifice our bodies for our country." Some time ago a Missionary lady said to me, 'Everybody is nagging these poor women and urging them to do something,—that tremendous responsibility rests upon them, etc., but very few point out the way to do something, or where or how to begin." And just here the mission schools come to the aid of these beset women and girls. It is the mission school that drops the vague phrases and instead of saying, do something, says, do this. It is the Mission school that points out to its students the duty that lies nearest and shows how and helps to do it.

We have in our school, just now, a number of girls from the families of unbelievers, whose every energy is bent upon benefiting their families spiritually. One of these has brought a younger brother to this place from his home in the north, takes the entire care of his washing and mending, etc., sends him to church and Sunday-school, has him come here twice a week for Bible instruction and in every way possible, is trying to make of him a true Christian scholar. At the same time she keeps up her own standing at the head of her class. I am happy to say, that from what I see of the little fellow, a boy of fourteen or fifteen, I think his sister's influence upon him is very telling. Another girl is helping both her younger brother and sister to an education.

One of our former teachers, a graduate of Ferris Seminary, with her sister, contribute half their salary to the education of their brother for the ministry. One of our present teachers has two brothers, one of whom she, quite unassisted by her father (able but unwilling), is educating at Aoyama, Tokyo. The father is a distiller, and the second boy was intended to succeed in the business, but the sister feeling, that would be the ruination of the boy, has put him in the way of learning silk culture instead, and in the many ways a sister can, looks after his well-being.

These girls of whom I speak, are all young and unmarried, and if they do as much as this now, there is no reason to suspose they will do less when older.

For one of our girls, Yoshida Micawo San, this is the last year. She has been in school eight years, six in Graham Seminary, Tokyo, and two, with us. From the middle of July she will be employed as Mrs. Hoy's Bible worker.

Sincerely yours, LIZZIE R. POORBAUGH.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

SYSTEMATIC GETTING.

A writer in the Kirchenzeitung calls attention to the following action of the last General Synod :

Resolved, That this Synod strongly urges the Synods to direct the Classes, and the Classes to direct the Consistories, to so bring as far as practicable the cause of missions to the individual member, that he may have the same advantage which the Synod, the Classis and the charge have in knowing the amount of money needed, and have a definite knowledge of his proportion of the amount to be raised ; and that the Classes be and hereby are instructed to adopt some systematic plan of getting monthly or quarterly offerings to the Lord in behalf of this cause,—and then adds that the German Board of the West, long before the action of the General Synod, urged the German Synods to ask for an average offering of 25 cents a member for home missions ; and that the last Synod of the Northwest approved the suggestion and sent it down to the Classes, with the further request that the Classes make earnest effort during the year by systematic getting to secure the aforesaid reasonable average ; and also that the Central Synod requested the pastors and Consistories to do all in their power to secure an offering from every member, according to his ability, so that the 25 cent average might be reached, and requested the Classes to discuss the subject of systematic benevolence and to formulate and lay before the Synod resolutions on the subject. (The Synod also directed that in all its congregations thank offerings at Easter should be made for home missions.)

The writer then says that they have taken just that course (only in advance) which the General Synod pointed out. The German Board is grateful, he says, for the action of the Synods, and appeals to the pastors and Consistories to carry out the action in good faith, especially at Easter in both congregations and Sunday-schools.

WHY MAKE IT HARD FOR THEM?

Many people of means do not know how much pain they give the servants of God who must ask them for money to carry on His work. When a special work is to be done, a church built, an emergency to be met, an endowment to be gathered, a great financial gap of any kind to be filled, of course we naturally and rightly turn to people of means for help ; but how painfully one must often turn away, even if successful !

And how do these people give this pain? Sometimes by what they say, and often by the heartless manner in which they say it. Their words are sharp, and the tone is severe, as if they had been asked to do the servant of God a personal favor. Often there is an empty excuse, which is no compliment to even a dull servant. "Not to-day. Call some other time," they say, forgetting what is written in Pro. 3 : 28. Often the gift is so pitifully small that it means, "I wish to be rid of you ; take this and go." Some will assume great dignity, and give with an air of condescension, or perhaps refuse with a lofty manner that means, "You are making very free with us big men."

Oh dear people of means, you who speak and act, keep well in mind that you are only stewards, and that you have no right thus to deal curtly, and severely and cruelly with the servants of God. All this is against you before Him. It is not gentleness, meekness, brotherly kindness. This whole spirit and habit is not from above. If you can help the work ask carefully and kindly about it, and then give your offering. If you cannot do what is asked, or cannot approve the work, put no thorn in the flesh of God's anointed, but send him away with words and tone that are kind.

The Religious Press.

THE work among the Chinese in America has a very important bearing on the evangelization of China. The number of Chinamen converted in this country who go back to extend Gospel influences in their native land is surprisingly large. They are valued helpers in the stations of both the Presbyterian and American Board Missions, and some of the strongest churches have been founded by Chinamen who have been converted while living in California. In four or five cities natives who are either now residents of the United States, or who have sojourned there, are providing the funds for evangelistic enterprises. There is said to be less opposition to the Gospel in those sections from which there has been emigration to America. These facts should urge us to greater activity in behalf of the Orientals now among us.—The Southern Presbyterian.

THE bishops and other prominent officials of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States recently met in Chicago. They composed a dignified and intelligent body. In a welcoming address these bishops were told that they had led the Church from three bishops, a few ministers and 53,000 members, to the point where it can report eleven bishops, 5,000 ministers, 4,000 churches and 500,000 members—which was certainly a remarkable exhibit. But this does not indicate all the work of this Church since the emancipation of the negro. It has several flourishing educational institutions, with about 1,200 students. One of the bishops, in reply to the welcoming address, talked remarkably sound sense when, emphasizing the importance of self-reliance on the part of the "colored" people, he said that the negro of the past was what two hundred and forty-two years of slavery made him ; the negro of the present is what twenty-six years of quarreling and legislation have made him ; the negro of the future will be what he makes himself.—The Presbyterian.

THE Christian (London) says : A splendid note of triumph was sounded at the recent meeting in Belfast of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, in regard to the progress which is being made in China. The Rev. Mr. Mackenzie, himself a missionary in South China, said : During the past thirty years 2,000 converts had been received in Swatow. There were there forty preachers and two pastors. Thirty years ago there were no congregational schools, now there were several, all doing special work among the young. The Rev. Mr. Webster, a missionary, added : In 1843 there were only seven converts, in 1868 there were 5,743, in 1887 there were 32,360, in 1888 there were 34,555, and last year over 40,000, and these subscribed $47,000 per annum towards the support of their own ordinances . . . In Manchuria, during the last ten years, about 1,500 had been baptized. . . . . The most hopeful part of the work was that of the natives themselves, and they had several large centers from which the natives carried the Gospel all around. The outlook was exceedingly bright.

WE come out of nothingness into being, and find ourselves nestled upon the bosom of a mother whose love for us yearns for a stronger expression than she can bestow—and under the protection of a father who would place his life between us and harm. It is thus that we come into the world. We shall go out of it alone. We shall try the realities of the unknown companionless. Human love can follow us to the brink, but no further. We shall part with those we love and trust—shall we meet with those we love and trust? or shall we be strangers with none to know or recognize or care for us? Here we have shelter from the sun and from the cold and the storms—shall we have shelter there? Let us provide ourselves—under the shadow of the wings of Him who is the Almighty. Close to His warm, cherishing heart here, we shall be so forever. We can be cast upon no shore where He is not. No storm can fall and no wind can blow where that covert is not nigh. There is no realm where His friendship is not more cheering than all human friendships. In no part of the universe will we be away from the shelter of our Home, nor away from the companionship and smile of our loving Father, and the cherishing love of our Elder Brother. Let us enter God's family, where we are more than welcome—where our entrance will give joy even to the angels. There we shall never be from home, never shelterless, never companionless. The clasping hands of the good-bye here will only be released that the hands of the joyful welcome may be given. We shall take our hands from the clinging hold, reluctant to release us, only that we may lay them in the warm palm of the King. We shall be pressed to more than a mother's bosom. We shall have the strong arm of our Heavenly Father between us and harm. Our infancy in the new life will be a conscious infancy, our safety a conscious safety. This is what Christ means in calling to us : "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—The Interior.

"BEHOLD, I HAVE TOLD YOU BEFORE."

Matt. 24: 25.

BY LILIAN E. MAXWELL.

How precious the words our Redeemer hath spoken,
As He walked through this valley of shadows and tears;
Not a precept hath failed or a promise been broken,
Through the centuries' flight or the lapse of the years.

How deep are the thoughts that in silence lie hidden,
In life's sunny hours or its moments of haste,
Till in beauty celestial they come forth unbidden,
Like stars o'er the sea, or the desert's wild waste.

How oft in the gloom of this world's desolation,
When the terrors of darkness encompass the soul,
That tossed on the billows of deep tribulation,
Would sink 'neath the sorrows that over it roll,

Were it not for the form of the One who is waiting
To rescue His own from the tempest's wild roar,
The storm to command and its fury abating,
To whisper, "Behold, I have told you before."

Take heed, my Redeemed, to the words I have spoken,
Hold fast as anchor whatever betide:
And he who all-trusting receives the blest token,
The wreck shall escape and the storm shall outride.

O Saviour Divine! Thy transcendent fulfilling
As Prophet no less than as Priest we adore;
May Thy chosen, their hearts with the loved accents thrilling,
Remember the words, "I have told you before."

CAUGHT BY THE TIDE.

"Just see me pop that hat!"

"Where?"

"Beyond that stone-wall! Somebody traveling along as if going to a funeral. Why, Job, it is ridiculous! Oh, here is an apple on the ground! Now, I will just take that comical hat off quick as a flash!"

"Oh stop, Jerry!" As he spoke, Job Cowles laid a restraining hand on Jerry Dove's arm.

"W-w-why not?" asked Jerry, temper flushing his face. Job did not tell him he had made a resolution the first of the year to treat everybody respectfully and kindly. He only said, "Because we ought to behave, and treat folks decently. It is not polite by any means. And I say, let's make a friend when we can. We may be glad of the man's friendship before long. Anything, let's do the right thing."

"That is just the way you always talk. You don't see any fun in anything."

"I don't in this thing."

"I am going to throw—"

"No, you hold on! I want to ask him a question. Mister, mister!" Job now shouted, running toward the man.

"There!" exclaimed Jerry, angrily. "He has spoiled all the fun. I was going to pop that hat over, and then drop behind this stone-wall. Now he has spoiled everything. He was bound to upset my plans. I see through it all."

Job's strategy was successful. The hat was a conspicuous target, and Job knew Jerry too well not to conclude that the apple would have been hurled toward the farmer if Job Cowles had not prevented it by his strategy.

"Good morning!" said Job pleasantly, courteously, to the tired, but kindly old face under the queer-shaped hat. "I live back a few miles, and came down to these rocks here to do a little fishing. You don't know of any better place?"

"Mornin'," said the old farmer, nodding in response to Job's polite salutation. "Guess you've hit on the right place where you are. Only, if down on the beach, look out for the tide. Tide comes in quick and ketches people. Say!"

"What, sir?"

"Where you live, you don't know of any doctor I could get handy? I'm in a peck of trouble this mornin', and it is one of the pecks that are big as a bushel. My darter Jane was taken sick last night, and can't get no relief, and our doctor down here was called away this mornin'. I'm in a great hurry, you see, and my darter Jane is an awful good girl, and—and—I hate to have—anything—happen—to—to—"

Here the eyes looked moist as blue waves along the shore, while his voice trembled, and then stuck in his throat.

"Why, yes, sir; our doctor is down on the rocks there, one of our fishing party. I'll run and get him, sir! Where do you live?"

"You're awful good! Right there in that black house, over there. 'Tain't more than an eighth of a mile, right across the field. Paint is worn off, but the welcome ain't worn off for the like of you—my, if he isn't gone already! Now that's the kind of a boy wuth havin'!"

Yes, Job was springing away across the shore, and had lost the closing sentence of the old man's remarks. He quickly brought Doctor Janvrin from the rocks where he was fishing, and then led him to the farm-house, where he rendered very prompt and efficient aid. "My darter Jane" was quickly on her feet again.

That afternoon the members of the fishing party, save Jerry, strayed down the shore. They left Jerry on the sands near the rocks from which they had diligently fished.

"I like this," said Jerry, welcoming the view across the wide, wind-swept ocean. He saw the ships slowly sailing away, dwindling to tufts of white vapor on the horizon, then vanishing. "Stagg's Head" was a rocky cliff stretching along the shore for an eighth of a mile. It sank away to the right and the left, coming down to the sea in two long, projecting points named "Eastern" and "Western," made a kind of bay, where the storm-waves broke against the cliff savagely. There might be greater danger, though, on calm, peaceful days, when the rocks running out like arms might, with the incoming tide, give a fatal embrace to any belated wanderer on the beach.

Jerry, pulling out a book from his pocket, took his seat on a rocky shelf at the foot of the cliff, and read a long while. He had previously noticed that the tide was coming in fast, but absorbed in his book, he gave the sea no further attention. Chancing to change his position, he allowed his book to fall from his hands. Then he looked about him. Then he cried out in alarm. The tide, sweeping in from the sea, had risen so high on either side of him that he was in a trap, cut off from all chance of retreat along the sands, and was for climbing up the face of "Stagg's Head," Who had ever done it?

"What can I do?" wondered Jerry. "All the party gone—O dear! Well, I can holler! Don't know as anybody will hear me, but somebody may be on the cliff."

He raised his voice: "Help!"

A queer looking object was thrust over the edge of the cliff, an oddly-shaped hat! It was the old farmer's comical head-piece. This time Jerry did not have the least inclination in the world to throw anything at it. O what a relief it was to see that old hat! It was the most beautiful object in the world now. Jerry could have kissed it. Under it was a most benevolent, pitying face.

"That you, down there?" called the farmer.

"Yes, sir! Caught by the tide. Can't you get a rope—something—"

"Sartin! Now don't worry, mind ye! I'll be back soon!"

Very soon his face, red and perspiring after a hasty run, appeared again. Near him was another face, that of Job, who shouted: "Rope coming!" That rope; O it was precious! If it had been of gold and studded with diamonds it could not have looked more handsome as it dangled over the edge of the cliff, and then swiftly descended.

"Tie her well under your arms! Grip good now! Tell us when you are ready!" sang out the farmer.

"Ready!" shouted Jerry.

Up, up, up he came, and was safely landed high above the tide, and in the midst of friends, for all of the fishing party had now returned just in time to welcome this arrival from the ocean, though Job was alone in season to lay hands on that rope and give a friendly haul.

"I am so much obliged to you, sir," Jerry was saying to the farmer.

"No thanks! When I saw your friend here this morning, and he told me about a doctor for my darter, I felt that I could do anything in return. 'Spect I looked pretty concerned then, and a-wearin', too, my old hat! Jane says it is a scarecrow."

Scarecrow! In Jerry's eyes it was now a symbol beloved, a sign revered. Nothing could have induced him to say a word against it, much less to send a missile at it.—New York Observer.

THE RANGE OF THE BIBLE.

Let us look at the vast range of the Bible; let us realize in the sacred history of the discipline of the world the largeness of the mode of God's action; let us ponder the manifestations of His love, of His patience, of His long-suffering, sometimes even startling to our eyes; let us trace, if with aching sight, how He makes man minister to man, and race to race, and generation to generation; let us notice how He accepts in compassion varieties of service according to the state and means of those who render it; how He turns to a source of blessing what appears to our eyes simple misery and ruin; and hope will rise upon us whichwe often sorely want; a hope which will not cover with a dull, colorless cloud of indifference the religious positions of men, but on the contrary make us feel, since we have received a priceless heritage, what is perilled in our energy, what we owe and what we render to others who are heirs with us of a common salvation—Canon Westcott.

HOME LIFE.

If the woman sets up her ideal that an establishment is indispensable to married life, she is not fit for a wife. If she must step from the elegantly appointed home of her parents to a similar abode without the experience of self-denial and toil that leads to it, she is only a dead weight to her husband. The knowledge of this opinion held by young ladies has prevented many young men from entering married life. They cannot gratify this desire, and so they do not marry. It has become fashionable for many young couples to board; they thus enjoy a luxury and leisure they could not command in a home of their own, but it utterly unfits them for the duties and divine sanctions of the family. However elegant the home and ample the income, the mistress should know by experience and practice how to manage it. If she does not, it results in a wicked waste of money, disorderly and impudent service, and she is unable to take that prominent and commanding position in benevolent work which her leisure and life otherwise would allow her. The American family has not yet begun to know the secrets of elegant economy.—Domestic Monthly.

Bad temper is its own scourge. Few things are bitterer than to feel bitter. A man's venom poisons himself more than its victim.—Charles Buxton.

SEWING SONG.

BY MARY J. JACQUES.

I have a little servant
With a single eye,
She always does my bidding
Very faithfully;
But she eats me no meat,
And she drinks me no drink,
A very clever servant, as you well may think.

Another little servant
On my finger sits,
She the one eyed little servant
Very neatly fits;
But she eats me no meat,
And she drinks me no drink,
A very clever servant, as you well may think.

Now, one more little servant,
Through the single eye,
Does the other's bidding
Very faithfully;
But she eats me no meat,
And she drinks me no drink,
A very clever servant, as you well may think.

A needle and a thimble,
And a spool of thread,
Without the fingers nimble,
And the knowing head,
They would never make out
If they tried the whole day
To sew a square of patchwork, as you well may say.

"JUST A MINUTE."

BY MRS. FANNIE H. GALLAGHER.

It was a perfect night. The moon shone full, the leaves just quivered in the light breeze,—a warm, delightful evening for September.

"I don't believe there ever was such a night before," thought Joe Newton, as he looked longingly out into the moonlight. "It's cruel in mother to send me to bed!"

He could hear her singing to baby Bess; her good-night kiss was warm on his lips. Still he lingered on the doorstep.

"I'll step out just for a minute, to cool off," he thought.

There swung the hammock, where it had swung all day, in the shadow of the trees; but not one thought had the busy boy given it. Now he flung himself into it, "just a minute."

"How queer the moon looks when a fellow lies on his back right under it! How she pushes those clouds out of her way! Much obliged to you, old lady moon, for giving me so good a chance to watch you. I wonder if the moon is a dead world, as they say. I wonder"—

Nine o'clock struck; ten o'clock. The front door opened.

"All in, mother?" asked Mr. Newton, as he hung his hat. "Then I'll lock up."

And in five minutes the house was securely fastened for the night.

Baby Bess was wakeful, so Mrs. Newton did not go, as usual, to her son's room, to assure herself he was comfortable; and Joe's absence was unnoticed.

About one o'clock, the wind changed, clouds darkened the face of the moon, and a gentle rain began to fall. The first drops did not waken the sleeping boy out in the hammock, for the trees caught them; but soon he felt the cold drops on his face.

He stared out into the darkness bewildered; then, as objects near him began to grow visible, he remembered where he was. The house under whose roof he ought to have been sleeping loomed up before him as a great black form, indifferent to him, nay, cruel, not to cheer him by even one ray of light from a window; the trees seemed to touch him with their long, dark arms; the still voice of the night frightened him, and he shook with fear and the cold.

What should he do? His mother was not well, and to ring the bell, or knock, would frighten her. And what would his father say? There was not a window, Joe knew, that was not securely fastened.

"I'll have to sleep in the barn," he thought, as his teeth chattered and the rain came faster.

Like a guilty creature he ran swiftly down the carriage drive, which had never seemed so long before, toward that other great black form looming up in the darkness.

Not daring to look behind, he climbed to an upper window he knew to be unfastened. A low growl reached his ears, and he shook again with a new fright. Then a glad thrill ran through him as he recognized Bruno's voice.

"Bruno! Good fellow! Don't you know me?" he cried softly, as the dog bounded toward him in the darkness.

Holding on to this one friend, Joe felt his way to the carriage, seized a blanket, then crawled up with Bruno into the hay-loft. The horse whinnied softly, hearing his voice; but the boy was too frightened to respond, and, wrapping himself in the blanket, nestled down by the great, shaggy dog, and pulled the hay over them both.

It was very dark and still,—all but the heavy breathing of Bruno at his side. Joe, too, tried to sleep, but the cold at first kept him awake; then, as the warmth of his bed and of his sleeping companion began to be felt, his thoughts would not let him rest.

A new fear tormented him. What if he should be missed! What if father or mother should be sick in the night, and needed him to care for baby Bess, as had happened once before!

Did you ever stand before a mirror, boys and girls, and see lines and expressions in your face you had never see before? Well, as Joe Newton lay there in the darkness alone, thinking as he had never thought till then, it seemed as though a mirror were held before his soul, as he saw himself in a new light.

Instead of a good-natured, affectionate, obedient boy he had always believed himself to be, he saw a boy selfish, heedless, forgetful. His mother's words, spoken a few days before, came back to him:

"I can't depend on you, my son. You do not mean to forget, but you do not mean not to."

Joe saw it all now, that he himself was the one for whom he had lived, planning for foot-ball, tennis and boating first always, satisfied if his necessary duties were done well enough for him to escape reproof for neglect, satisfied if his plans could be carried out, if his will were not crossed. It was a sad picture the mirror showed him, and he turned from it in shame and sorrow.

But now the warmth of his bed and the boy's own weariness began to make him sleepy. For one moment the old careless feeling came back.

"I'll go to sleep and forget it all. To-morrow will soon come, then I'll be myself again."

But it was "just for a minute," when a better thought raised him up out of his soft bed.

"I'll not go to sleep and forget. God helping me, I'll decide now to be a different boy."

He listened; it almost seemed as though there in the darkness he heard a voice tender as his mother's that whispered, "My son, my son!"

When he awoke it was early morning. Bruno was shaking the hay off from both, and Jones' voice could be heard below as he groomed Biack Beauty.

How the whites of that person's eyes expanded as he beheld Joe coming down stairs dragging the blanket after him, while wisps of hay clung to hair and garments.

"It's all right, Massa Joe. I'll neber tell nobody, and you just run right up to your own room. I left de back door open. Nobody will catch you."

"I shall have to tell them myself, Jones, and I'll go now. Give Bruno a good breakfast; he was good to me last night."

"You are up early this morning, my son," said his mother affectionately, as, coming down for Bess' early cup of milk, she met her boy in the dining-room.

Though her cheek paled at hearing of the darkness and danger to which her twelve-year-old boy had been exposed alone, the color came back to it, and a new joy beamed in her eye, as he stammered out all the night had taught him.

"I don't know just what happened out there in the dark, mother, but I feel as though I'd been made over. I want to be a different boy. I don't want to do wrong even for 'just a minute.' How can I keep from it?"

"Ask God to keep you 'just a minute;' ask Him again and again as the minutes go by, and the days, and the weeks and the years will teach you the blessedness of those who abide in Him."—Sunday School Times.

"PAYING OFF MOTHER."

"Mother," said a little black-eyed boy of seven years, "when you get old and want some one to read to you, I will pay you off."

Little Alexander's mother had been in the habit of reading to him a good deal, and on this Sabbath-day she read to him for a long time out of the Bible and a Sabbath-school book. The child was just able to read a little himself, and the progress he was making doubtless suggested to him how he might, at some future time, return in kind, all his mother's care. "I will pay you off, mother," said he, looking up into her face with childish satisfaction, as if a new thought from heaven had been sent down to light up the little world of his soul. His mother pressed him to her heart with a delight that seemed to say: "My dear son, I am more than paid off already."

But, children, you can never pay off your mother. Her thoughts of love and acts of affection are more in number than the days of life. How often has she nourished you, dressed you, kissed you, rocked you on her knee and in the cradle, carried you in her tender arms, watched over you in sleep, guided your infant steps, corrected at times your misdemeanors, thought of you in absence, and guarded your life in the unvarying remembrance of a mother's solicitude, and the free-will offerings of a mother's devotion! Ah, dear child, you can never "pay off mother."

Yes, there is one—there is one way in which you can more than pay off mother. It is by loving Jesus Christ and His work, and preparing for heaven. There Jesus dwells in glory, which He communicates to the saints of all generations; that same Jesus who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Come, little children, come to Jesus Christ! Come, my child, and pay off mother, by praising God with her in heaven.—Christian Guardian.

Pleasantries.

It is an oddity of Scotch humor that it plays continually around the severest religious faith in the world. Any reader of Dean Ramsay is prepared to believe the story that this notice was lately posted in the vestibule of a kirk in Scotland: "The person who stole 'Songs of the Sanctuary' from pew No. 32, should improve the opportunity of singing them here, as he will have no occasion to sing them hereafter."

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1891.

THE question is sometimes asked, "Which of the two methods of observing the Lord's Day is to prevail in this country, the English Puritan, or what is sometimes called the Continental or European? We reply that it is not likely that either the one or the other is destined to carry off the palm of victory, but that there is good reason for believing that something better and higher, a truly Christian Sabbath, will come in to take their place and drive them into the background. We are still living, to a certain extent, under certain influences and old prejudices in religion and theology, which were transplanted from Europe to this country at an early day. They need a critical examination, a vigorous sifting, so that the chaff may be separated from the wheat, the gold from the dross. And so it must needs be with the Sabbath question. We need a higher and more Scriptural or spiritual idea of the Lord's Day, and this we believe we will arrive at in the process of a true Christian development, that is, in proportion as the Church, with all that is included or implied in it, puts on its strength and its beautiful garments. In the meantime, however, it is our duty to watch, and pray, and work, and not allow foreigners with their excesses to destroy our confidence or to become stumbling-blocks to us in our Christian course, in the race set before us.

HUGUENOTIC AND DUTCH.

At the recent meeting of the Summer Assembly of Reformed ministers at Lancaster there were at least five of the number who bore French names and were of Huguenotic ancestry, Santee, Sangaree, Truxal and the two Levans. There are many others in the ministry or the membership in the Church who belong to the same class. This is manifestly the case with those who are called by the name of Lefevre, Jannet, De Lyre, Kefauver, Motter or Matter, Mickly, Meckley, Meckel, De Long, Deforme, De Turk, Hayett, Pearson (in French, Personne), Merle, Lambert, Forney, Fordney, Fortney and many others of the same kind. We know of not a few names, which we believe are of French origin, but they have either been translated into German or become so much Germanized that we do not feel at liberty to pronounce them Huguenotic without further information. Further, some of our people manifestly bear Dutch names whose ancestors came from Holland, such as the Vandersloots and the Van Dykes. In some of our ancient country graveyards we have stood by the graves of the Vanderbilts or the Van Burens, and deciphered their names on their old tombstones. From this it would appear that our Reformed Church is not so purely German as we perhaps have sometimes imagined. The infusion of Gallic and Hollandic blood into our veins, has, moreover, been of immense advantage to us as a people. The French and Dutch among us came from ancestors who died for the Reformed faith and their descend ants have remained faithful to the same faith. In fact they very likely have been useful to us in stirring up our German sluggishness. It has therefore occurred to us that it would be well if some attention were paid to the subject, and as many French and Dutch names as possible were searched out and identified. If this were done, they might be put on record in some suitable place for reference. The display would be an interesting one and might be made serviceable in throwing light upon the history of the Church.

THE GENTILES.

The separation of the Jews from the Gentiles in ancient times was in harmony with the laws of human history no less than with the Divine Will. The two could not fraternize nor live in peace with each other. Divine truth was too precious to fall into superstitious hands. In the course of events the alienation became more and more intense, much more so than it was in the days of Moses or David; and the supercilious contempt of the Jews for the Gentiles, whom they regarded as no better than dogs, has scarcely its parallel in all history. But what had been allowed to exist for a temporary purpose, assumed a fixed character, as unchangeable in the mind of the Jew as the moral law itself. When, therefore, the time arrived for the breaking down of this middle wall of partition, for the abrogation of what were regarded as prescriptive rights, the difficulties in the way seemed to be insurmountable. But the work had to be done, the revolution had to be effected, and a beginning was made at once, visions of what was to be were seen by Zacharias and Elizabeth, the Virgin Mary, Simeon and Anna the prophetess, but the first step in the advance was made when the Wise Men of the East, the most honored and best specimens of the Gentile world, were invited by a mysterious star to come and see the new-born King of the Jews at Bethlehem. This was the first proclamation of the universal emancipation of mankind, from which all other proclamations of like character, that have since then been sent out into the world, had their origin. It announced the fact that all men were equal in the sight of God, and equally entitled to the blessings of His Providence and grace—"where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all." Col. 3: 11.

The edict did not go into operation, at once, by any means. We know how the first Christians were afraid of it, and that Peter, the Rock of Stone, was at times wavering in his conduct with regard to it. It was left to Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, who had the courage and faith, to give it binding force and ecumenical authority in the Christian Church. In its utmost, far-reaching significance, in asserting the true fraternity of men, it has been resisted more or less in the Church as well as the State. Priests and Levites still pass by the poor traveler lying half-dead on the road-side; but we have now many good Samaritans who are ever ready and willing to bind up the wounds of all such. The prejudice of caste is passing away even in India; Africa with its wild bushmen and pigmies is being invited to come into the fraternity of nations, and of the Christian Church. The presumption of rulers is being curbed by the common voice of the Christian people; and the autocrat in the smaller circles of society is rebuked by the growing intelligence around him, and made to feel to some extent at least that his occupation is gone. For all these things, and innumerable other blessings, the world is indebted to the decrees that went forth long ago through the Star of the East, that God is no respecter of persons, that Christ is all, and in all.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

The Reformers at the time of the Reformation sought to eliminate the false elements both of Judaism and Heathenism, which had crept into the Church during previous ages. Luther predominantly attacked the former and Zwingli the latter. They, however, were not successful in driving them out of the old Church nor in keeping them entirely out of the new Church that was to be. This we see at the present day in the conceptions which are held in regard to the Sabbath. We have what may be called a Jewish and a heathen Sabbath. In the old world, and in this country also, the Lord's Day has in many directions been reduced to a mere heathen holiday, in which in whole or in part it has been devoted to mere sensual or animal enjoyment, deprived altogether of the character of a Christian festival. As a reaction against such profanity and desecration, many very earnest Christians have been driven to the opposite extreme, so as to reduce a truly spiritual festival to something of the nature of a dark and gloomy day of fasting and prayer. The literal or legalistic element involved in this kind of observance has been carried out among the Puritans of the old and the new world, nearly, if not quite, as far as it was in the caseof the ancient Jews, who refused to defend Jerusalem on the Sabbath when it was attacked by the Romans. Of course Christ set this aside when He said that the Sabbath was made for man, and Paul in his writings in like manner rebukes the Sabbatizers of his day. The tendency of literalism in all cases tends to contract and injure the free spirit of Christianity; and so it is where it rules in the manner of observing the Lord's day; sometimes it wounds tender consciences; sometimes it tends to self-righteousness or spiritual pride; and sometimes it leads a puritanic Christian to condemn his neighbors who may be better Christians than he is himself.

But what shall we say of the heathen method of observing the Sabbath, devoting it in part or altogether to worldly enjoyments? Nothing at all in its favor or justification. Where one portion of the day is given to the Church and the other to the world, to feasting, to drinking, to visiting, to carousing or mere earthly, anunal enjoyments, it is difficult to say which impression will predominate, the good or the bad. Most likely, we would say, the latter. What is here required of such as wish to be true Christians is that they should allow themselves, and others also, the exercise of a true Christian freedom in the manner they spend the Lord's Day. Aiways bearing in mind its memorial significance, its object as a day of rest for the body, in order to communion with Christ, we shall naturally and without any apparent effort of our own, avoid the two extremes already referred to, the Judaizing and heathenizing tendencies with the censorious legalism of the one, and the false freedom, in which there is excess, of the other. Our Sabbaths then will be quickening, days of all the week the best—just as we see in them the emblems of an eternal rest.

HANS MICHEL.

John Bull once coming to London heard some people on the streets talking about his brother Jonathan in America—that he had a large farm, with flocks and herds in abundance, and that he was getting rich. John did not like this and thought over it for a good while. He was afraid that he might some day become richer than he was. At length he caught up an idea and went to William Penn. He told him that he had a cousin somewhere in Germany, Hans Michel, and that it would be a good idea to send him across the sea to America, where he could get a fine farm for nothing. Penn took the hint, immediately went over to Germany, told Hans all about the rich land in Pennsylvania, where he could obtain farms for all the children of his numerous family. Hans with his quick perceptions in matters of this kind, saw through the matter at once; and it was not long before one ship after another unloaded his strong-minded sons and daughters at the wharves in Philadelphia; and in a comparatively short time these able-bodied settlers made the wildernes and the solitary place to bloom and blossom as the rose. Brother Jonathan in the far-off East heard of this, and he became anxious to know what kind of a neighbor he was to have, and especially to learn whether he had any kind of religion. He had been told that the Pennsylvania religion was no religion at all; but he thought he ought not to listen to mere rumor, and so he examined into the matter for himself. There were some things about Hans' faith which he did not like. He celebrated Christmas and Easter when they came round; and this seemed to Jonathan as a decidedly Romanizing tendency. He, however, observed that he was himself very devout and that some of his children were very religious; and so he gave him the hand of friendship and brotherhood. He also ascertained that he and his sons were patriotic, in favor of free institutions, and that if necessary, they, with their strong arms and broad shoulders could fight a good fight in order to secure their freedom. He, therefore, welcomed him to "the land of the free and the home of the brave." He continued to watch him in his religious tendencies, and discovered that the keeping of Good Friday and Ascension day did not lead him into the arms of the Pope. In fact he was intelligent enough to see that the Pennsylvania religion involved many important and valuable points in theology, of which he had not heard. He accordingly purchased German books, studied them and learned some things that he did know before. His children now take to organs, fine churches and responses, at least in the Sunday-school, and some are beginning to like the holy days. We would not, therefore, be surprised if some of them should begin to like the entire Church year. Hans, on the other hand, has in like manner been watching his quick-witted cousin, and learned more than one useful lesson from his books and superior intelligence, especially as it regards the proper observance of the Christian Sabbath and the use of cold water in harvest and hay-making as something better than whiskey or gin.

THE IMPOTENCE OF COMPLAINT.

Nothing is more natural than to complain. There are few of us with whom things are going as we would have them go. Difficulties encompass us; obstructions block our way; ever-recurring annoyances and vexations try our tempers. We would get on rapidly, and find ourselves forced to move slowly. We have an eager appetite for a large portion of success and prosperity, and are obliged to content ourselves with a bit of it both ludicrously and painfully small when compared with the appetite. The average merchant's customers are fewer than he could wish. The average physician has to wait long for the expected and desired increase in his practice. The average lawyer's clients are by no means a multitude which no man can number. The average minister is no exception to this rule. Perhaps (since men are less eager for spiritual than for material benefits, and slower to apply to the physician of the soul than to the physician of the body) he may have even more than his fair share of causes for dissatisfaction and complaint. He would reach many with that great, free Gospel which was meant to be preached to "all men." In point of fact, he reaches comparatively few. Round about him are hundreds whom he would fain bring to the place where the Gospel is preached, but they will not come. The attendance at church is never very large; sometimes it is distressingly and depressingly small. The average prayer-meeting is a standing cause of dissatisfaction; so few attend it. Indeed, there is almost nothing in the congregation that is going as it ought to go. In these circumstances, what is easier or more natural than to break out in petulant complainings?

What is easier; but what is, at the same time, more utterly impotent and futile? We do not mean that all complaint is unwarranted or ineffectual. There is a time and a place for complaint. There are grievances which may be and ought to be redressed, and complaint against them is the first step in the redressing process. There is a complaining that is large, dignified, noble, effectual. Our forefathers once made complaint against certain wrongs on the part of England; signal and momentous complaint, written down there in dignified and stately language; memorable, along with the action by which it was backed up, for more than a hundred years now, and likely to remain memorable for a few hundred years to come. But the particular complaining we are speaking of is not of this kind. It is a petty and petulant, an undignified and ineffectual complaining. It consists in the frequently reiterated, and often habitual, complaining of the pastor of a congregation, in public, to the assembled people, concerning the poor attendance at church, the neglect of the prayer-meeting, or congregational affairs in general. We are persuaded that it is a not uncommon fault; a fault which in many cases has become chronic. From the pulpit has gone forth continually the preaching of the sweet and gracious Gospel of Jesus Christ; but from the same pulpit, we fear, has gone forth no inconsiderable amount of what might, without exaggeration, be called scolding.

It does no good; scolding never does good. The spirit of reproach and condemnation is in its very nature an impotent spirit. No one's words are so little regarded, or so powerless to render help, as those of the habitual scold. We do not know an instance in which a genuine reform in the matter of church attendance could be traced to scolding from the pulpit as its cause. On the contrary, though incapable of doing any good, it may do much harm. It spoils the minister's temper. We venture to say that more than one temper, naturally sweet, has been changed into sourness by indulgence in this mischievous habit of complaining. It throws a pall over the beautiful services of God's house, and makes the church, which ought to be a place of prayer and praise, a place of complaint, reprimand and reproach. It tends to drive men away from church, instead of attracting them to it. But yesterday a lady told us how she was driven to forsake a particular church in a distant State, by the minister's habit of complaining of the people's non-attendance at divine service. "And who," said our friend, "had to hear these scoldings from Sunday to Sunday? It was the faithful few, who were always there." This last point is worthy of special consideration. Those who listen to these complainings are the very persons to whom they have no reference. There is something almost grotesque and ludicrous in this solemn laying upon the souls of the faithful few who are present, of afflictions which belong exclusively to the unfaithful many who are absent.

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."---Minutes of Synod, 1888.

The evils no doubt exist, and they are such as it is natural to complain of. But it is not thus that they are to be remedied. "Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis." Beware of complaint, and especially of chronic complaining; along that way lies no good. Let the people be frequently reminded of their duty; let them be faithfully and affectionately admonished as to any faults or shortcomings. But let not those who do come to church or prayer-meeting be habitually punished for the sins of those who do not. And let the line never be crossed which separates the faithful and affectionate admonition from irritable and petulant complaining. Let the minister rely upon the power of earnestness, industry and kindness. Let him apply himself, with all diligence of toil, to the proper work of his calling. Let him spare no pains, no self-discipline, no earnest study of God's Word, to render himself capable of preaching that Gospel which, as a rule, the human heart is glad to hear. Let him seek to make the services of God's house a source of inspiration and joy. Having done all this, let him, speaking no word of complaint, leave results to God; content, if need be, with little fruit; thankful to be able to preach Christ, even to a few;

> "Ready to give thanks and live
> On the least that Heaven may give."

This is a better way. It will save much bitterness both for the minister and for those who hear him. It will accomplish something, too. In proportion as people get something at church, they will learn to come there. Here, as everywhere else, it is by "sweetness and light," and not by sourness and gloom, that we shall eventually prevail. J. S. K.

—An Exchange very truthfully says:

"It is neither narrowness nor bigotry to love your own Church more than any other; to labor more earnestly for her extension and upbuilding than for any other; and to feel a deeper attachment to her principles and usages than to those of other denominations. That man who makes slighting remarks about his own Church, her principles or people; who magnifies her defects; who disparages her efforts to maintain the cause and advance the work entrusted to her, is usually one who would be of little use in any Church. We never could admire that boy who did not love his own mother, and who was everlastingly making invidious comparisons between her and the mothers of other boys."

—An exchange thus refers to a very important matter:

"Punctuality in church services is worth something. A minister is hardly treating his congregation with common civility when he opens ten or fifteen minutes after the announced hour. And upon business men, who have a high standard of exactness in these matters, the impression made by such slack methods is peculiarly unfortunate. Of course, absolute punctuality cannot always be secured; men do not secure it anywhere, and there is such a thing as tithing mint and anise, and neglecting weightier matters. But the minister, and choir, and officers of the church can teach the community a wholesome lesson, by commencing the Sunday services, at least, exactly on time."

Poetry.

WEEDS.

Have you seen the city-folk riding by,
With hungry glances at field and sky,
And exclamations of quick delight
At the sight of a meadow with daisies white?
They do not know
That a field of daisies should never grow;
And I envy them so!

Have you ever at eve of a midsummer's day,
When the air was sweet with scent of hay,
Felt a sweeter perfume upon you steal,
And strangely that perfume makes you feel
So sad, for you know
A field of thistles should never grow?
I am sorry 'tis so.

Have you heard of the distant desert land,
Where the cactus blooms in arid sand
So thick it blocks the traveller's way,
And no green on the lonely plain but they
Can live and grow?
So the cactus is only a weed, you know,
Though we prize it so!

Have you ever noted a field of wheat
As it waves in the summer breeze and heat,
With here and there in the yellow rows
A pretty pink blossom as red as a rose?
It will please you so!
But the weed ought not in the wheat to grow.
Still they can never weed it out, you know,
And I'm glad it's so.

But wheat would not be allowed to head
If it set its roots in an onion bed—
You'll find it so;
If a stalk of wheat in the garden grow,
It's a weed, you know.

From the daisied hay
And the thistle grain
The moral we draw
Is simple and plain
And cogent and brilliant
And lucid and clear—
A weed is a flower
Dropped out of its sphere.

Many and many an evil word and work would be avoided if Christian people would only remember that hope is a Christian duty, so high a duty that the Christian religion is pre-eminently a religion of hope; and the Christian life a life of hope. A hopeless Christian is no Christian, flatter himself as he may. The true Christian is resolutely hopeful; he hopes when other men despair; he does not know, and will not know, when he is beaten; and so it often comes to pass that he plucks victory from imminent defeat. His dutiful hopefulness is often his salvation, temporal as well as spiritual; he is "saved by hope."—The Churchman.

Science and Art.

The base of celluloid is common paper; by action of sulphuric and nitric acids it is changed to gun cotton, then dried, ground, and mixed with from twenty to forty per cent. of camphor, after which it is ground fine, colored with powder colors, cast in sheets, pressed very hard, and at last baked between sets of super-heated rollers.

True bony teeth are peculiar to animals which have backbones. The most elaborate dental apparatus belongs to the sea urchin, whose jaws are composed of forty pieces, moved by forty separate muscles. Snails have a sort of ribbon with which they rasp their food as with a file. Ant-eaters, though they are mammals, have no teeth at all; but they get there just the same, having no need to chew their prey. The whalebone whale is a mammal that has no teeth, its practice being to swallow the food whole.

It is well understood in these days that if the atmosphere were absolutely pure there would be no light. The dust in the atmosphere causes the refraction of the sun's rays and this results in light. It is not equally well known that it is variations in the quality or amount of dust that make sunset beauties variable. For a few days on a given spot we behold magnificent sunsets, and for a few days following we can describe the sunset in ordinary matter-of-fact language. The late Prof. Carville Lewis, who, as an authority on these subjects stood pre-eminent, believed that the influence of atmospheric dust or peculiarities of light extended for long distances. After careful investigation he found that peculiar dust which fell on the decks of vessels in Boston Harbor in the autumn and winter of 1882 came from the great volcanic eruption of Krakatoa, and that the grand sunsets of that period which have never been equaled in history, were due to this extra amount of atmospheric dust. It is this varying quantity and quality which affects the ordinary as well as extraordinary sunsets.

Last year the receipts of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions from the women and children exceeded the gifts from the churches—that is, there was received $346,780 from the churches, and $373,251 from the Woman's Boards and the Sabbath-schools.

Secret societies in China are causing much trouble. They have burned many mission houses and driven the missionaries away. The Chinese authorities, though willing, are unable to prevent the atrocities. The rioters are trying to cause a general insurrection.

Foreign missionaries resident in Japan are now granted passports to reside outside of foreign concessions, on the ground that they are "employed in church work"—a concession which has hitherto been given only to teachers. Coming at this time, it indicates a special appreciation on the part of the Japanese government of the beneficial influence of the missionaries.

A leading Mexican of great intelligence and refinement said to an American gentleman when asked about the various religions of Mexico: "There are two leading religions in Mexico, one is the Roman Catholic and the other is Freemasonry." The statement, which was made in the most matter of fact way, is a partial explanation of the fact that so few men are to be seen in the Roman Catholic churches.

Farm and Garden.

Insects on vines and rose leaves may be kept in check by sifting, at intervals, wood or coal ashes upon them as soon as the foliage begins to appear in the spring. Caution should be observed in using wood ashes in too great quantities, as it may thus injure or kill very tender plants.

Choice butter should always be wrapped in the parchment paper now made for this purpose. It is air-tight, clean, white and cheap. Butter properly put up is half sold, and if it tastes as well as it looks, a good customer is secured. When practicable, every dairy farm should sell its butter marked with its own brand.

Potato blight, or as it is sometimes called, potato rust, is one of the most common and destructive of plant diseases in Vermont, and the experiment station has issued a bulletin to again call the attention of potato growers to the following facts: First, that by spraying with the mixture of copper sulphate (blue vitriol) and lime, known as Bordeaux mixture, the blight or rust of the tops can be checked. Second, that by using this remedy to stop the blight on the tops, most of the dry rot of the tubers can be prevented.

Hints and Recipes.

An exchange says that borax water will instantly remove all soils and stains from the hands, and heal all scratches and chafes. To make it, put crude borax into a bottle and fill it with hot water. When the borax is dissolved, add more to the water, until at last the water can absorb no more, and a residuum remains at the bottom of the bottle. To the water in which the hands are to be washed, pour from this bottle to make it very soft. It is very cleansing, and by its use the hands will be kept in an excellent condition.

Apples baked in the following way make quite an attractive dish: Pare and core eight large, sweet apples, put in a well-buttered baking dish, and fill the cavities with sugar. Blend one half cup of butter and one large spoonful of flour; to this add enough boiling water to make a thick syrup, and with it cover each apple. Grate nutmeg over all, and bake slowly till done.

A fanciful and delicious dessert is made as follows: Pare and core as many fair, sweet apples as will cover the bottom of a large porcelain preserving kettle; fill the centers with sugar, adding to each a few drops of Royal vanilla flavor. Over all scatter a liberal allowance of grated or dessicated cocoanut, add only sufficient water to cover the bottom of the kettle; cover closely, cook slowly till soft. Remove to a glass dish without breaking, pile in regular pyramid form, and when cold cover all with frosting, made of the whites of three eggs and powdered sugar. Over all sprinkle finely shredded lemon peel, or dot all over with bits of colored jelly.

Eat all cold food slowly. Digestion will not begin till the temperature of the food has been raised by the heat of the stomach to ninety-eight degrees. Hence the more heat that can be imparted to it by slow mastication, the better. The precipitation of a large quantity of cold food into the stomach by fast eating may, and often does, cause discomfort and indigestion, and every occasion of this kind results in a measurable injury to the digestive function. Ice-water drunk with cold food of course increases the mischief. Hot drinks—hot water, weak tea, coffee, chocolate, etc.—will, on the contrary, help to prevent it. But eat slowly, any way.

DIED.—In Vernon township, Crawford county, Pa., July 11, 1891, David Brown, aged 61 years and 6 months.

The subject of this notice and a brother who preceded him to the grave a year and a half ago, were deaf and dumb all of their life. The "boys," David and Joseph, were very interesting people. They had been well educated in the schools for that afflicted class, were great readers of the church and other papers, and could converse with great fluency in their own way. Not being able to hear they would sometimes read the minister's sermons. They united with the Watson Run Reformed church in early life, and David renewed his profession some fifteen months prior to his death, and continued very regular in the discharge of church duties. The praises of the heavenly world will be all the sweeter to them for having been deprived of hearing the songs of the earthly sanctuary. *

DIED.—At Saegertown, Pa., July 17th, 1891, Deacon Henry Siverling, aged 61 years and 7 months.

This was the closing of a life that deserves more than a passing notice, for it was a life of deep interest and of hnmble though very energetic activity in the affairs of the church. Henry Siverling was born and reared in Crawford county, near Saegertown. When about 30 years of age he united with the Lutheran church, but later on he transferred his membership to the Reformed church.

His interest in the work of the church, and the worthiness of his Christian life, caused him to be selected as a deacon, first in the Lutheran church and afterwards in the Reformed church. We found him in this office when we first came to know him, and were at once impressed with the singular efficiency and strict fidelity with which he discharged the duties of that sacred trust. And this must be said not alone of that side of this office which relates to the finances of the church, but also with reference to the discharge of the duties of its more solemn side, which has special concern for the salvation of men. In him we were made to feel that we had a model example of a deacon who tried to uphold the hands of a pastor and render his work prosperous. If there were illness among the membership it was his early concern to see that the pastor came to know it. If there were a grievance of any kind, we were sure to have his valuable counsel. And not once did we feel that he came with any other motive than a charitable concern for the spiritual welfare of men. One could not look for anything like a serious difference of opinion in counseling with him, for his views were of that conservative nature and his manner of that amiable bearing which precludes dispute. In his personal attendance upon the means of grace in the sanctuary he has left a record that is simply blameless. As far back as we have recourse to the records of the church he is credited with having missed not a single communion, and we found him absent from no service, except when illness in his family or his own person kept him at his home. His death was caused by dropsy, superinduced by an attack of la grippe. For ten or more weeks he endured a severe trial, but throughout his bearing was most manly and Christian, calm, patient, and full of faith in the goodness of God. We were with him much from the beginning to the end, and helped to support him in the last painful, but very brief struggle, and not once was there a murmur of doubt or insubmission to the will of God.

We laid his body in the grave with a painful feeling that the church on earth has lost the service of a very worthy disciple, but with the fullest confidence that heaven has gained one more to cast a crown at the feet of Christ, and join in the endless song of redeeming love. *

DIED.—June 13, 1891, at State College, Pa., Mr. Jno. C. Krumrine, aged 75 years, 10 months and 18 days.

July 18, 1891, near State College, Pa., Mr. Benj. Corl, aged 86 years, 5 months and 6 days.

These two aged men were members of St. Peter's congregation of the Boalsburg charge, and were numbered with her first members, for they were among the early settlers of that part of Centre county. The ground where Pennsylvania State College now stands was in woods when these two men took possession of the land out of which they made fertile and productive farms.

During all the years they spent in this locality they were identified with and interested in the church of their choice. As long as health permitted, they were attentive to all her means of grace, and at last gladly received her ministrations in their respective homes.

Though the congregation of which they were members had her struggles, yet they were permitted to live to see their descendants provided with a house of worship which is an honor to any community.

Both of these fathers were blessed with a large number of descendants. Father Corl leaves behind forty-seven living grandchildren and thirty-seven great-grandchildren. May these emulate the good deeds of their forefathers' lives, and live and die in the same faith they enjoyed.

THE SPIRITUAL CONFERENCE.

The Assembly for Spiritual Conference of Ministers and Elders of the Reformed Church in the United States met in fifth annual sessions in the chapel of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., on Wednesday evening, July 29th, and closed at noon on Tuesday, August 4th. The opening sermon, on Wednesday evening, was preached by Rev. Dr. S. N. Callender.

The hour of Bible study was conducted each morning, commencing at 8.15, by Rev. Prof. J. C. Bowman, except the last morning, when Rev. A. S. Weber had charge of it.

The first paper was read on Thursday morning at 9.30 o'clock by Rev. Dr. John S. Stahr, President of Franklin and Marshall College, on the subject, "The Relation of Humanity to Divinity." The evening devotion at 4 o'clock was conducted by Rev. Dr. E. V. Gerhart.

On account of the unavoidable absence of Rev. Dr. Thos. C. Porter, who was to read on Friday morning, the committee asked Rev. Dr. Thos. G. Apple to serve as substitute. Although the Conference regretted the absence of Dr. Porter, to whom, if he had come, a very cordial welcome would have been extended, the brethren were very glad, as they always are, to hear from Dr. Apple, and he, although a brief time for preparation was allowed, read before the convention an excellent paper on the question, "What is the Bible?" The evening devotion was conducted at 4 o'clock by Rev. W. I. Stewart.

On Saturday morning Rev. John G. Noss read a paper on the subject, "Personal Consecration to Christ," and in the afternoon Rev. Ambrose M. Schmidt preached the preparatory sermon at 2 o'clock.

The communion sermon on Sunday morning was preached by Rev. Dr. Geo. L. Staley, and a song service was conducted at 4 o'clock by Rev. A. P. Horn.

The paper on Monday morning was read by Rev. A. E. Truxal, on the question, "Can we improve our Method of Placing Pastors?" The evening devotion, in the absence of Rev. W. F. More, was conducted by Rev. Dr. J. W. Santee.

The last paper was read on Tuesday morning by Rev. Dr. F. K. Levan on "Sunday Observing," and the closing devotions were conducted right after by Rev. A. S. Weber.

Following is a list of those who were present: Rev. Drs. Geo. L. Staley, S. N. Callender, Theodore Appel, Thos. G. Apple, J. W. Santee, J. S. Stahr, E. V. Gerhart, C. S. Gerhard, F. A. Gast, J. M. Titzel, J. A. Hoffheins, H. Mosser, A. B. Koplin, Geo. W. Aughinbaugh, F. K. Levan, J. H. Dubbs, and Revs. J. P. Stein, A. E. Truxal, A. M. Schmidt, Lewis Reiter, D. W. Gerhard, A. P. Horn, T. G. De Lyre, M. H. Sangree, C. S. Slagle, D. A. Souders, B. F. Bausman, H. Y. Stoner, N. Z. Snyder, L. D. Steckel, J. C. Bowman, J. A. Wickert, T. J. Hacker, A. C. Whitmer, W. I. Stewart, J. F. Moyer, J. G. Noss, A. S. Weber, W. F. Lichliter, T. J. Bowers, J. H. Pannebecker, George B. Seibel, C. W. E. Siegel, J. S. Hartman, S. M. Roeder, J. M. Souder, Lewis Robb, Z. A. Yearick, J. David Miller, C. W. Levan, M. M. Noacher, F. F. Bahner, W. J. Johnson, S. L. Krebs, Lic. T. A. Fenstermaker, and Theological Students Geo. K. Kaneko, H. K. Miller, H. H. Apple, H. H. Rauck, and Elders J. E. Kershner, Jacob Rauck, George W. Hensel, and Profs. J. B. Kieffer and W. W. More.

A few of these brethren were present only a day or part of a day, a few were present before Sunday and several after Sunday, but the greater part attended during the Conference.

The papers read treated subjects theological, Scriptural and practical. The discussions which followed the reading of papers, while they were earnest, were kind and brotherly without any exceptions, and moreover were suggestive and helpful. The social enjoyment—without even the thought of committee work as when one goes to Synod—was very refreshing. The devotional surely was not overlooked or crowded out. Every Bible lesson was commenced and closed with prayer. The reading of every paper was preceded by singing and prayer, followed by singing and the discussions closed with singing and prayer, while the evening devotion at 4 o'clock was particularly calculated to help the devotional spirit.

While this Conference provides a programme from year to year that ministers to the intellectual faculties it is well understood that we constitute an Assembly for Spiritual Conference—or in other words a Retreat— for rest, recreation, mutual improvement. It need hardly be said that the Conference is not in the interest of any party spirit, or particular institution. All who feel disposed to attend are heartily welcomed.

The Conference saw fit to re-elect the following officers, namely, Rev. M. H. Sangree, president; Rev. D. A. Souders, treasurer; Rev. D. W. Gerhard, secretary. These officers constitute an executive committee and are charged with fixing the time and place, and also arranging a programme for the next annual meeting. Lancaster and Mercersburg were the places mainly considered in connection with the next meeting.

Some of the older brethren in the ministry want to go to Mercersburg to renew former acquaintances, some of the younger brethren who have never been there want to see the mountain village made famous in the heroic days of the early struggles of our institutions, while on the other hand some of the brethren say at Lancaster we have conveniences we could not expect elsewhere. Harbaugh Hall is beginning to have associations, because there most of the brethren home while here, that makes them long to come again. Moreover here they see the Professors of our central and leading institutions and have the benefits of their counsels and advice.

However the committee may finally decide these questions the friends of the Conference can rest assured that they will have in view the objects of the association as expressed in the second article of its constitution; namely, "to afford its members opportunity to retire from their active labors for rest, and for mutual help in the study of the Bible and for the consideration of such topics as may fit them for the better discharge of their duties in the Master's vineyard."

D. W. GERHARD, Secretary.

A VISIT IN WEST PENNSYLVANIA.

In June three additional young men applied for aid as beneficiary students of Calvin College. One had been in college for three years, at his own expense, but found himself unable to continue supporting himself; the other had been in the preparatory department for some time, and had but lately become convinced of his call and duty to prepare for the ministry; the third had been a member of the students' mission and its catechetical class. All three were born in this country, of German parents. Being well acquainted with them, our Board felt anxious to assist them, and the writer of these lines gladly accepted an invitation of Dr. J. M. Schick in Greenville, to address two of his congregations on this subject.

So far there has been but very little intercourse between our German churches in Cleveland and the Reformed churches in Western Pennsylvania. We never knew that we were so near together, geographically and spiritually. But now a short ride of four hours brought us right amongst those with whom we were made to feel perfectly at home, and who could sympathize with us as we could with them. Their pastors generally take great pains to awaken and to develop their Christian life, not personal and congregational only, but also ecclesiastical, so as to interest them in the whole work of our church. And doing this perseveringly and patiently, the members are evidently growing in liberality and in all those Christian graces that spring from liberality.

But now a new object of benevolence is added, when it was thought that their liberality was already taxed to the limits of their means. The German immigrants claim their help, especially those who feel that they and their children need a closer fellowship with the American church, and who are interested in the education of suitable ministers. Naturally, some of our American people would be somewhat dismayed on the presentation of this new claim, but we are happy to say that Dr. Schick and his members fully realized its importance. They see that the future of our country as well as of our church will to a great extent depend upon what efforts we put forth in this direction, and what blessings God may be willing to bestow upon them.

We also visited some of the neighboring pastors, of whom Rev. Dan. H. Leader, in Saegerstown, and Rev. A. M. Keifer, in Greenville, promised to remember Calvin College in the near future.

As a background to the fraternal reception we received, the beautiful scenery and the pure air of Mercer county will continue to linger in our memory. It was a journey of pleasure and a social visit rather than a task. Many thanks!

H. J. RUETENIK.

NOTES ON THE MEETING OF CLASSIS OF EAST SUSQUEHANNA.

(CONCLUDED.)

The Missionary Guardian was referred to the Women's Classical Missionary Society.

This society met with Classis in an adjourned meeting at Sunbury, June 15th, and made provision to have one member of each congregation canvass for the Missionary Guardian. The members of Classis felt that the spread of missionary literature would tend to the enlightening of many with reference to our missions and the various Mission Boards, and with the needs and wants of the church.

No doubt many or all of the Classes have taken similar action; but the fruit of this Classical action may be of slow growth and much of it not ripe.

It is often stated that a demand for a certain article will cause its production. If there is a felt want and demand for this missionary literature independent of that which is noted in the MESSENGER, there will be a hearty response when this action of Classis is carried out. Upon close observation I find that it would be unkind and unfair to state that an individual has no missionary zeal or is illiberal when he fails to patronize all the periodicals of the church as soon as presented. There is life and growth in everything in our church. In doctrine and cultus. In numbers of Synods, Classes, congregations, ministers and members. Growth in benevolent contributions, in multiplication of church literature. So will there be a living growth—spiritual and intellectual development—when there will be a craving after these productions of the church, and will be accepted and appreciated. Better so than a Jonah's gourd.

The Woman's Classical Missionary Society is a tender plant of two years' growth. It was something of an experiment. It was planted at the meeting at Catawissa, but last year at Ashland it had attained to some growth. At the adjourned meeting of Classis at Sunbury the ladies, to whom this lovely plant had been entrusted, let their big brothers have a wee peep at its beauty, sweetness and loveliness. Classis took a recess and filed en masse to the basement of the church to have a square look at this Woman's Classical Missionary Meeting, and lend a helping hand. They were kindly, politely, yet firmly informed that they (this women's society) desired to be private. With firm step and dignified mien they returned to their Classical duties.

No intrusion was intended, but Classis only desired to redeem itself from the accusation that it planted this missionary plant and now leaves its fostering care to weak and inexperienced hands. We do not wish to pass criticism here, but in our judgment it would have been policy had the ladies accepted the well meant help and they might have profited by the wisdom and experience of Classis. However, the working of this society is now intrusted to their care and keeping—this tender plant is intrusted for its nurture to the fair hands of the daughters of our Classical Zion.

There is also a steady healthful growth in the benevolences of this Classis. Take the Synodical minutes from 1872, and mark the growth in liberality. It is true there is also an increase in membership, but not in proportion to the benevolences.

	Members.	Benev. Moneys.
1872	7,095	$1,774.83

1890	4,747	2,185.75
1891	4,969	2,821.00

It must be borne in mind that the membership and contributions of Wyoming Classis is counted in this table; because Wyoming Classis was a part of East Susquehanna Classis.

But the membership and contributions of Wyoming Classis is not counted in in the years 1890 and 1891. There was a division of Classis between the year 1885 and 1890. Take the period from 1872 to 1885 and the benevolent contributions were almost doubled. Then note again that after the division of Classis in 1890 and 1891, with a little more than half as many members as in 1880, ten years ago, this Classis raises almost again as much for benevolence. Wyoming Classis, which was a part of East Susquehanna Classis in 1880, increased in tts benevolences in like proportion. So that the same territory during this period of ten years almost trebled its benevolences.

This growth is very noticeable in congregations and charges during this period. A few examples will suffice without doing any injustice to any other charge. We cannot mention them all. Take Excepting Shamokin and Sunbury the rest are country charges. Besides this growth in benevolences there was a strong outflow through removal from these charges.

There is a steady healthy growth throughout the entire Classis. The charges are filled with men of earnestness and zeal in the prosecution of the Lord's work.

It was the custom of this Classis to convene its session on the third Wednesday evening in May and continue the meeting of Classis over the Sabbath. Classis decided to convene the third Monday evening in May with the intention of completing all classical work so that each pastor can spend the Sunday with his own people.

The Stated Clerk of Classis has already noted in outline the officers and some work of Classis. I will, therefore, avoid repetition. B.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Accompanying is a detailed acknowledgment of cash and pledges received for Grace Mission of Cleveland, O., as the result of a personal visit into various Reformed localities. Our reception as a rule was cordial and but for two reasons the results would have been still greater. One of these reasons was the very large number of our ministers and their people away from home at the time of the visit (July), and the other was a lack of time for a thorough canvass. The response to our errand from many was most liberal especially when the very great activity of our denomination in furthering the interests of the Reformed church is noted. Mark a few of those interests which met us. Ursinus College has just raised some $60,000 in the church at large for the Bomberger Memorial Hall; Franklin and Marshall has just been endowed with a $35,000 Seminary Professorship; Mercersburg is making demands on its friends; the East is being or just has been canvassed by Dr. Ruetenik for Calvin Institute, by Rev. Snyder, for Grace Mission of Philadelphia, Rev. Sangree for the Steelton (Pa.) Mission, Rev. Schwedes for Terre Haute, Ind., Rev. Reiter for Roanoke (Va.) Mission, Rev. Coblentz for the Altoona (Pa.) Mission; while interests at Wichita, Sioux City, Washington, Baltimore, Scranton, and a long catalogue of other points are engaging the attention and the money of the church. All this, remember (and very much that has not been mentioned), in addition to the regular home and foreign missionary work of the Reformed church through its Boards, the regular educational institution operations and surprising activity in church building by individual congregations. At times there were as many as three of us in the same congregation at the same time for money. But to the credit of our generous people be it said we all appeared to receive what we came for. Wherever the pastor fell into line with our work the people responded gladly and liberally. Brethren, we have lost much valuable time in the way of home mission work, but we are at it with a will now and let us not weary of this grand progress of the Reformed church. As for Cleveland, Grace Mission heartily thanks all the helping hands that are outstretched to it and we feel sure that a glance in on the work here would be ample reward to our benefactors.

A little more earnest faithful effort will give Cleveland, O., a prosperous English Reformed congregation worshiping in a creditable home—the result of considerable less than three years of home missionary effort. The acknowledgments follow:

Pot Pie Dumplings

BY MRS. DEARBORN,
Principal Boston Cooking School.

Mix and sift together 1 pint pastry flour, 1 heaping tea sp. Cleveland's Baking Powder and ½ tea sp. salt. Beat 1 egg until thick and light, add ½ cup cold water, stir this into the dry mixture, and enough more water to make a dough stiff enough to hold its shape when dropped from the spoon.

Drop the dumplings on a plate a little distance apart and cook in a closely covered steamer for fifteen minutes; or, drop them on top of the boiling stew and cook for the same length of time.

The secret of having them light and tender lies in their not being disturbed while cooking, and in not having much liquid around them, if cooked on top of the stew.—(Copyright, 1891, by Cleveland Baking Powder Co.)

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

INSTALLATION.

At a special meeting of Somerset Classis held in the Reformed church at Glencoe, Pa., Rev. A. C. Snyder was duly received from the Virginia Classis, a call to him from the Wills Creek charge confirmed, and the following committee appointed to install him pastor of the said charge—Revs. E. E. Weller, A. R. Kremer, D.D., and W. Rupp, D.D.

Classis then adjourned and the committee at once proceeded with the installation service. Dr. Kremer conducted the opening service, Dr. Rupp preached the sermon, and Rev. Weller, the chairman of the committee, performed the remaining part of the service.

Bro. Snyder enters upon this pastorate with every prospect of success. The charge has been vacant for a long while and the people are gratified to have a regular pastor settled amongst them once more. H.

A CARD.

To the Pastors and Members of the Reformed Church.

Please note: At the rate that contributions have been sent for several months past for the support of our Foreign Missions in Japan, we are not able to keep contract with our faithful missionaries. A little more activity on your part in behalf of this cause is needed just now.

The treasurer should not be expected to make himself personally responsible. Would you do it?

Faithfully yours,
JOS. L. LEMBERGER, Treas.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Easton.—Rev. T. O. Stem, pastor of St. Mark's church, Easton, Pa., on Sunday morning, 26th ult., preached his fifteenth anniversary sermon, from 1 Samuel 7: 12, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." After delivering an interesting discourse on this theme he gave the following statistics of the work accomplished during his pastorate which began in August, 1876: Number of members then, 120; added by confirmation, 247; by certificate and renewal, 177; total number added, 424. Lost by death, 46; by dismissal, 54; erased, 80; total, 180; leaving a present membership of 364. Baptized, adults, 16; infants, 517; total, 533. Funerals attended, 286; an average of 19 per year. Married, 144 couples. Sermons and Wednesday evening lectures delivered, 2,250. Catechetical lectures, 270. Visits made, about 6,000. Money raised during this period, $27,065, of which $19,500 were for current expenses, $2,250 for Sunday school purposes, and $3,566 for improvements and to pay on the church debt.

Millheim.—Church Dedication. The Reformed church at Millheim, Rev. Geo. E. Addams, pastor, will be dedicated on Sunday, the 16th of August, 1891, at 10 o'clock, A.M. There will be services on Saturday evening previous, at which time Rev. J. R. Brown, of Rebersburg, will preach the sermon. The dedicatory sermon on Sunday morning will be preached by Rev. D. M. Wolf, D.D., of Spring Mills, and on Sunday evening the sermon will be preached by Rev. Eisenberg, of Centre Hall, services to begin at 7.30 o'clock. The music will be rendered by the choir of Salem's church, under the direction of Prof. J. S. Meyer. The services we hope, will be interesting. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Lykens.—At a meeting of East Susquehanna Classis in May, petitions from Lykens and Tower City, Pa., were received, praying to have congregations organized at these two places. The Classis appointed Revs. Derr, Stauffer and Siegel as a committee on supply. This committee requested Andrew H. Smith, a student of the Theological Seminary at Lancaster to engage in the work during his vacation. Since June 12th he has been on the ground hunting up the Reformed people, and has held services every Sunday.

On Sunday, July 5th, a congregation was organized at Lykens, officers were elected and installed. This congregation started with seventy-one members. Others will join after the work is started. Quite a number signified their willingness to join a class of instruction in the catechism. There formerly was a Reformed church here, but unfortunately it was sold by the sheriff in 1879. Some of the old members connected with other churches, while others held off hoping to organize again a congregation. The prospects at Lykens are very encouraging. With a little help they will be able to build a small church, and together with Tower City and Johnstown will give good support to a pastor.

Services at Tower City have been held in a school-house and are well attended. Sunday, July 26th, a congregation was organized there with fifty-four members. There is a class of catechumens organized numbering forty two, many of which are heads of families. This place was without services for over twenty years. Although there is no church here, still there is plenty of ground which the congregation can use for their purposes. Eight acres were given about fifty years ago by an old member of the Reformed church, "for church and school purposes." Now there are two school-houses and three churches on it, but there is plenty ground for as many more. The congregation expect to erect a small chapel by next spring, and will be able, if encouraged by Classis or the Mission Board to push forward and became a self-supporting organization.

At Johnstown there is a union church, but the Reformed congregation has been neglected for at least nine years. Many of its members have dropped away or connected themselves with other denominations. The church organization went to nothing. It was organized on July 26th, and after doing considerable hard missionary work thirty-five members were found. A class numbering ten members is receiving catechetical instruction. This is a decidedly German valley, and requires German preaching. Mr. Smith is not able to preach German but by exchanging with other pastors has satisfied the German element. Most of the people are miners and work in the Lykens Valley coal mines. Lykens is a nice, clean and compactly built town, lying between the hills, and is on the Summit branch of the Pennsylvania R. R. Tower City is nine miles above Lykens and is on the P. & R. R. R. Brookside Colliery is near Tower City, while Johnstown lies one and a half miles south-east of Tower City in a rich farming district.

The people are anxious to engage a permanent pastor by the time Mr. Smith leaves for the Seminary on September 1st. The rich harvest in this valley is ripe indeed, and should not be neglected.

FOR THE TOILET

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, E. Pittston, Me., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair."

An address was also delivered by the pastor, Rev. A. Gonser. Rev. G. W. Henning also assisted in the services. The stone was then laid with due services by the pastor, the name upon the stone being Israel's Reformed Church.

ATTENTION SISTERS.

What have the women of the missionary societies and congregations of Wyoming Classis done to raise at least $10 each towards redeeming the pledges given by our Classical W. M. S., at its late meeting in Bloomsburg, Pa.?

Three societies have paid: Paradise, Turbotville and Zion's. Hazleton, Danville and Milton have promised to take favorable action. The rest, so far as known, have done nothing.

The new lady teacher for Japan has been appointed, and the money will be needed by October 1st.

Let each missionary society, and pastor of each congregation where no missionary society exists, appoint a committee of godly and devoted women to raise the ten dollars by a special effort, and the thing is done. What have the delegates been doing that assumed ten-dollar pledges in behalf of their societies and congregations? It is easy to vow, but not so easy to pay the vow. Or is it? And why should it not be?

BOVININE

A CONDENSED FOOD

EXTRACT from a paper on "Diet in Intestinal Diseases of Infants," by Dr. I. N. LOVE, St. Louis, Mo., Ex-President Mississippi Valley Medical Association, Consulting Physician, City Hospital:

"As an aid to the nutrition of the child, whatever be the form of food given, I have "found great satisfaction in the administration of the raw liquid meat food known as "BOVININE. In the most delicate conditions of the alimentary canal, in all stages "of nutrition, I have given the BOVININE in doses ranging from five drops to a "teaspoonful, diluted with five or six times the amount of water every two to four "hours, with marked benefit. We often have to discontinue all milk food, and in "such cases I have given the BOVININE for weeks at a time exclusively.

"I consider it an invaluable aid in these infantile cases, as well as in all forms of "wasting disease of adult life. I base my conclusions upon practical observation in "a large number of patients and favorable experience in my own family."

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA.—The original, most soluble.

Sir William Turner, of the University of Edinburgh, who has made a careful study of the whale, calculates that one eighty feet long, in order to attain a speed of twelve miles an hour, must exercise a propelling force of 145 horse power.

FOR OVER FIFTY YEARS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for over fifty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething, with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa. Sold by druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Among the curiosities exhibited Saturday in Fulton Market, New York, was a stingray. This fish was taken in a net off Elberon, and a merry time the fishermen had capturing it. It was 18 feet long and weighed 300 pounds. Its tail, heavily armored with sharp, bony knots, was 14 feet long, and tapered to the end like the lash of a bull whip.

A SURE CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I am delighted with my success selling soap. I cleared $6.00 the first day. Every person is anxious to buy, when they see how good and cheap it is. I have sold 300 pounds a day, easily; this makes me a profit of $6.00 a day, which is big wages for a girl. My brother-in-law is selling soap, and doing splendid. This is a grand chance to make money, as anyone can get 300 pounds of elegant soap by sending $5.00 to the Ohio Soap Co., New Concord, Ohio. Write them, and they will no doubt assist you as much as they have me, as they are very accommodating. This letter may seem foolish to you, but times are hard, and there may be hundreds of your readers glad as I was of a chance to make money; and every person can sell what every person wants to buy.

LADIES' BLAZERS.

It is a constant surprise to buyers that Blazers of such superior quality and workmanship can be afforded for so little money. Every garment is made in the best possible manner, and all are new, fresh goods, few having been in stock more than one or two days. All are the proper length, and in the latest styles.

Especial attention is called to the Blazers we are selling at $2.00. It seems almost incredible to those who examine them that these garments can actually be afforded for $2.00, as they are not goods reduced in price for any reason, but new, fresh, stylish, and most carefully-made garments.

Editorial Notes.

—We regret the delay in the appearance of the obituary of the late Rev. E. W. Reinecke, D. D., but it was unavoidable.

—We are in receipt of the Minutes of the Classis of Miami of the Synod of Ohio, published in pamphlet form. They are from the press of the Reformed Publishing Company.

—Writers of obituaries for the MESSENGER will please bear in mind that our new rule will go into effect with the first issue for the month of September, and govern themselves accordingly.

—Great preparations are being made for Bethany Day, at Womelsdorf, Pa., Thursday, the 27th, next. A pleasant and profitable time is promised all that will attend. Let there then be a grand rally of the Reformed people of Eastern Pennsylvania.

—The subscribers who have responded to our request either in these columns or by bills sent out, to remit us amounts due on their papers, and there has been a number of them, have our thanks. But many, many more thus far have been indifferent to our repeated requests to them to remit us, so that we may be able to meet our constantly accruing obligations. We ask them again to remit, as we must have what is due us.

—In the August number of the Bulletin of the American Academy of Medicine, a copy of which is on our table, is to be found the paper read before the 16th Annaul Meeting of that body by Hon. Lewis H. Steiner, M.D., LL.D., Litt.D., upon the subject: "Will a shortening of the College Curriculum conduce to better preparation for the study of medicine?" The Doctor ably discusses the subject, which is one of vast importance, and clearly shows the necessity as well as the advantage, of students of medicine taking a full college course before entering the Medical College. Would his views prevail and those of the Academy of Medicine, there would be less quacks and many more intelligent and thoroughly equipped physicians.

—The Acts and Proceedings of the General Synod which met in special session in First Reformed Church, this city, June 4-6, 1891, are out and are being sent out by the Stated Clerk, Rev. I. H. Reiter, D.D. They are of importance to the Church in that they preserve in permanent form the action of the Synod in reference to the Federal Union between the Reformed (Dutch) Church and our own. They are also from the press of the Reformed Publishing Company.

—As has already been announced in the MESSENGER, the Reformed people of Somerset and adjacent counties will hold a reunion at Rockwood, Somerset county, Pa., on Thursday the 20th, next. The following program has been arranged for the occasion: "The Reformed Church in Europe," by Rev. A. R. Kremer, D.D.; "The Reformed Church in America," by Rev. Wm. Rupp, D.D.; "The Reformed Church in Somerset Classis," by Rev. A. J. Heller, and "The Women of the Church and their Work," by Val. Hay, Esq.

—Rev. A. C. Whitmer, Superintendent of Missions, has prepared and published through the liberality of Deacon D. A. Dively, a neat little booklet of twenty-four pages, entitled OUR CHURCH-BUILDING FUNDS. Its object is to give facts which will be useful to the readers of it in regard to the meaning, the history and the helpfulness of the Church-Building Funds of the Board of Missions. It well meets its object and should be generally circulated. Superintendent Whitmer will gladly send a copy of this booklet to any one to whom it should be sent. As is known the Board of Missions has received a number of these funds, each $500 in amount, and they are doing good service in the work of missions, having been loaned to mission churches for the purpose of assisting them in erecting chapels or churches for their use. The Board is desirous of securing a number more. Any one able to, could do no better act than to found one of these Funds in memory of some departed one. Who will respond to the appeal made by the Board through this little booklet?

—It will also be noticed in the communication from Rev. D. S. Fouse, Superintendent of General Synod's Board of Missions, that an urgent appeal is made to the Church for $500 Building Funds for the use of that Board. Like the Bi-Synodic Board, it can make immediate use of many such funds and it is to be hoped that it will also receive a number.

—It is to be regretted that it is a difficult matter to supply the vacant charges within the bounds of the most western Classes of the Synod of the Interior and the Classis of North Carolina, Synod of the Potomac. This is in a great measure owing to the scarcity of ministers and the unwillingness of the same to settle in such remote portions of the Church; their preference being to remain nearer home. The efforts to secure pastors for their vacant charges proving often unsuccessful, very naturally discourages the people and they are at a loss what to do. This is particularly the case in North Carolina. As we have said before, there seems to be no other alternative, would these sections of the Church be supplied with pastors, than that Theological Seminaries be established in connection with the Colleges now in existence there. It might be said that the young men of these sections who might wish to prepare themselves for the ministry could attend the present Seminaries of the Church for that purpose, but the complaint is that the young men who do go, do not and are not willing to return to their native States to labor there. Receiving their training at home they would necessarily remain there. It might very properly, therefore, be a matter for the consideration of the Synod of the Interior and the Synod of the Potomac, whether it would not be well for all concerned, that there be established a Theologicai Seminary in connection with Wichita University in the former and Catawba College in the latter, and if advisable, to proceed in the regular constitutional way to equip them with professors when the means are provided for their maintenance. In this way men can be fitted for the work and the charges vacant supplied with pastors, and new interests opened up with men ready to take charge of them. This would certainly insure the growth of the Church in the sections referred to. Since writing the above we received the communication to be found in this issue from Rev. D. B. Shuey, upon the same subject.

—Whilst writing the above we were led to examine the Constitution of the Church upon the matter of establishing Theological Seminaries and the proper course to pursue in doing so. It is there plainly stated that they must be established by one of the Synods, and that the professors and other officers, Board of Trustees and Board of Visitors, shall be amenable to the Synod: see Article 62. In the choosing of professors, it is stated in Article 16: "As it is of the utmost importance that Professors of Theology be sound in the faith, have the requisite ability to teach, and possess the confidence of the Church, they shall, for the greater security, always be chosen by a majority of the votes of the Synod." The necessity of the safeguards the Constitution throws around the establishment of Seminaries and the election of Professors for the same, cannot help but be seen, and the strict adherence to them is beyond a doubt obligatory.

—It seems to be lost sight of, that according to the Constitution of the Church (Art. 3:) all students for the ministry are required, upon commencing their studies, to put themselves under the care of some Classis, whether receiving aid from that Classis or not, and submit a report to the same annually, just as pastors do, during their course of study, and when applying for licensure are to make application to that Classis for examination. In this way the Church through the Classis is in a position to be kept informed as to the progress of the students for the ministry and the students in turn know by whom they are to be examined for licensure. Were the Constitution more generally followed in this regard, there would be an absence of irregularities and want of courtesy that is due from one Classis to another. An applicant being refused for good and sufficient reasons by a Classis to refer his application for licensure to its proper committee, it is certainly not in keeping with good order and in accord with courtesy towards another Classis, having indeed knowledge of the reason why the sister Classis refused his application, to examine and license him. Besides this, on account of the sacredness of the office the applicant would enter, no blur or spot should be upon his entrance into it, which to some extent such an irregular and discourteous act would certainly cast upon it. Those in authority cannot, therefore, guard too carefully the door by which men would enter the ranks of the Holy Ministry. It is better to proceed properly, in all cases and then there will be no cause for criticism, complaint or regret.

Poetry.

"WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM."

1 John, iii. 2.

We shall be like Him, like the King immortal,
The Lamb enthroned in heaven,
Whene'er, to pass the bright celestial portal,
The summons shall be given.

Like Jesus, brightness of the Father's glory,
And see Him as He is!
O, who can comprehend the wondrous story
Or grasp th' unutterable bliss?

Not like the helpless child of Bethlehem's manger,
Denied the village inn;
Not like the sufferer here, a homeless stranger,
'Mid the abodes of sin.

Not like the Christ betrayed, by friends forsaken,
By foes condemned to die;
Insulted, mocked and scourged, to Calvary taken,
'Mid shouts of "Crucify."

But as He is—exalted, crowned forever,
In glory none can tell,
With saints and angels, heavenly hosts that never Refrain His praise to swell.

Ah, can it be, we shall our Lord resemble
When heaven's gate within,
While here, imperfect souls, we often tremble
At consciousness of sin?

O, promise great! confirmed by words of Jesus,
That fill with joy our hearts,
From sin His precious blood it is that frees us,
And purity imparts.

O, matchless grace of God! that gives us meekness
To be like Christ we love;
Pursue Thy work in us to grand completeness
For the bright word above.

GOING TO COLLEGE.

This vacation period of our schools generally is the time when young people make up their minds, or their parents do it for them, as to what higher institution they are to enter with the opening of the autumn term. It is well to think this matter over, and to be sure that one acts wisely. Need we say that for Reformed people their own colleges and seminaries, male and female, should have the preference. Let us call attention to several plain, strong reasons why this should be the case.

1. Everybody ought to stand by his own family. He ought to do this as a matter of obligation and principle. Not now and then, when nothing else is as convenient, but from the first and all the time, excepting only the instances in which he knows his family to be in the wrong. That is what we expect of a good father, mother, son, daughter.

In the same way we ought to stand by our Church and by our people. We ought to know where we belong, and where our obligations in the first place lie in this wider sense, and then as a matter of principle we ought to make it our business to fulfill them. Our work and our ability to do it will both be found there as nowhere else.

If these things be so, and probably no right-minded person doubts them, then it follows that in the matter of education, in the sense of the institutions which we call to our help for that purpose, we must look near at home. One's own family, to be sure, does not own colleges and seminaries, but one's own Church does, and they are the creatures of one's own people. They are very much of our own home and family, looked at in that light.

Let us stand by them. Let our first thoughts be after them. Let us be proud that we have them and can give them our patronage. They reflect credit upon our Church and upon our kind of people; and shall we not support them?

2. The Reformed Church has thoroughly good institutions of learning. They do not aim to teach every conceivable thing; but they do aim at thoroughness in whatever they profess to teach. For a complete Classical course we venture the opinion that few colleges in the land excel Franklin and Marshall. It furnishes all a student can learn in the four years given to the course. Because a dozen courses are taught at a certain institution, that is no reason why you should go there. You can only pursue one of them with profit. The attempt to do more defeats all true progress, just as the attempt to learn several trades at once would make you a bungler in all.

Our other colleges, Ursinus, Heidelberg and Catawba, aim at the same high grade which Franklin and Marshall has attained, and substantially pursue the same line as to their course of study.

And what a thorough school of learning for our girls the Church has in the Allentown Female College. Not an ordinary seminary, but an actual, fully equipped, well-managed College for young women. It stands near to us in every sense, and offers to us just what we want when we seek to educate our daughters.

Take the subject of theological education. The Theological Seminary at Lancaster, for example, has now four professors who devote their entire time to the instruction and training of the students for the ministry who attend there. Compare that with former times. We always have had eminent men there, and we have able men there now; instructors who could maintain their standing in any similar institution in the land. Who has put them there? The Church has put them there, and that because they were known to be qualified for the work assigned them. Let then our students go where the Church has made provision, and very liberal provision, for the education of its ministers. Or, if on account of location or for any other good reason some other theological training school be preferred, then let it be the one in connection with Ursinus College, or the one at Tiffin, or that at Sheboygan. Any of them, but for Reformed ministers let it be a Reformed seminary first and foremost.

3. Reformed institutions have a Reformed spirit dominant in them, and other institutions have the spirit of the bodies to which they belong dominant in them. Such is the case universally, and it cannot be otherwise, nor ought it to be. We all show our several family traits, and we are proud of the good ones; but proud or not we show them, and can not help it. Just so with the animus of colleges and seminaries. They must be true to their parentage, if they are to be worthy of respect at all, and if they are to answer the purpose for which they have been established. Now, while it is true that we can learn much in all good institutions, it is just as true that that institution is the best adapted for educating us which stands in life and spirit the nearest to us. Your own mother was the best mother for you; your own home the best home for you.

4. Sometimes it is thought that institutions of learning belonging to other people are cheaper than those which we have. Why such an opinion should exist we do not know. It has little foundation in fact. Reformed colleges and seminaries are managed with careful reference to keeping the expenses low and the occasions for spending limited. We may be sure that if a cheaper offer is made them than that which our own authorities can present, we will have to make up for it in some other way, or sustain a loss in the quality of what we get.

The conclusion of the whole matter is the same as the beginning; stand by your own first, and stand there steadily. WYOMING.

THE SELF-INTERPRETATION OF SCRIPTURE.

A great deal has been written and spoken in regard to some canon of authority for the interpretation of Scripture. The Scripture needs to be interpreted. In the hands of a heathen it would not be properly understood. If the Bible had been given to the Greeks or Romans, without a living Church or a living preacher to expound it, it would have been to a large extent a sealed book. The revelation it contains, whilst it is intended for the whole world, was given to the Church. It everywhere presupposes a Church, a chosen people, and, we may add, a certain inspiration in those to whom the revelation of divine truth it contains was made in order to understand and interpret it rightly. This fact, viz., the need of interpretation, has led to the searching for some canon of authority for such interpretation.

1. One such canon is that of the Roman Catholic theory, that the Church is the infallible interpreter of Scripture. This theory argues that an infallible revelation requires an infallible teacher, or interpreter, of such revelation. The Church, it says, existed before the Scripture, the Apostolic Church before a word of the New Testament was written. The Church determined the New Testament canon, drew the line between the inspired and the uninspired writings in its possession, and in the two African Synods, held in 393 at Hippo, and 397 at Carthage, gave the names of the inspired books that constitute the canon.

But the Church must express itself through some organ, such as Synod, Council, or Pope. The Roman Catholic theory finally settled down upon the theory that the Pope, in organic union and communication, with the bishops and theologians, the ecclesia docens, is the infallible interpreter of Scripture.

In reply to this theory we simply say at present, that the Apostolic Church was not in existence before the Word, though that Word was not at first written. We assert, moreover, without stopping to argue the point here, that the Church is not the infallible test or criterion of the interpretation of Scripture, but, vice versa, the inspired Word of God in holy Scripture is the infallible test, or criterion, for the Church.

2. A second canon of authority for the interpretation of Scripture has been placed in the natural reason. The Bible is given to man as his guide in matters of faith and practice, but of what practical use is such revelation if he cannot understand and interpret it. The Bible is written in human language, human language is the outward form of human thought, or reason, and man is able, therefore, to understand it in the exercise of his reason. The Bible, therefore, must be rational, must authenticate itself to reason, and whatever is contrary to reason must be rejected. This is the rationalistic canon of authority for the interpretation of Scripture, and it exalts the reason above Scripture, because it makes the reason to sit in judgment upon the revelation contained in holy Scripture.

3. A third canon is that of the inner-light, or of private inspiration, the theory of the Quakers, of the Anabaptists of the 16th century, and others. It holds that God gives the light of the Logos, or of the Holy Spirit, to every person to enable him to apprehend the mystery of divine revelation, and those who depend wholly, and in faith upon this guide will be infallibly led into the right understanding of revealed truth.

4. We may mention as a fourth canon of authority for interpreting Scripture the Swedenborgian theory. According to this theory Emanuel Swedenborg was illumined (they do not use the word inspired) to interpret the Word of God in Scripture, and that he gives the key to unlock the mysteries therein contained, without which holy Scripture cannot be properly understood.

Other theories might perhaps be formulated, but these are sufficient for the purpose before us, viz., to refer to such theories as find a canon of authority for the interpretation of Scripture outside of the Scripture itself. We have not named the theory, that Christian Consciousness is the ultimate test of the interpretation of Scripture, because it may be classed under the Roman Catholic theory in substance, both claiming that the Church is the authoritative interpreter, but differing in that one makes the Pope the organ of the Church for this purpose, whilst the other finds the expression of the Church in the general Christian Consciousness. So also we have not named the private judgment theory, because this may be classed either under the rationalistic canon, or that of private inspiration. All that we aim at now is to set forth the general position taken by all who find some canon of authority for interpreting the Scripture outside the Scripture itself, whereas we maintain that this canon of authority must be found in the Scripture itself, in other words, that the Scripture is its own interpreter.

This sounds so paradoxical at first view that the reader may think our argument must turn upon some mere play of words, for how can that which is to be interpreted, interpret itself? We ask attention, therefore, to what we regard as a most important thesis and argument on this vexed problem of the interpretation of the Bible.

Of course we allow that the Church, whether in its head the Pope, or in the consensus of Christian belief, is a necessary factor in interpreting Scripture, The same is true of reason, and of private inspiration, or of certain gifted individuals. Perhaps the nearest to our own theory is that which makes Christian Consciousness the ultimate test, or umpire in interpreting Scripture. But the question is not so much in regard to a factor, or an organ, in the interpretation of Scripture, as in reference to where the authority is lodged which is to determine whether our interpretation is right or not. We maintain that this authority is lodged in Scripture itself.

Let us take an analogous question, yea, a question that is perhaps substantially identical with the one we are considering, I mean the question in regard to conscience as the test, or umpire, of right and wrong. Is conscience the ultimate test of right and wrong for the individual? The individual must always obey his conscience, it is for him, for the time being, the only test, but it is not ultimate, nor infallible. The conscience (under which here we include the moral judgment, or consciousness) may be wrong, and the individual should always hold himself open to new light from the truth itself. When better enlightened his conscience may change, so that what he once called right he now regards as wrong, and what he once regarded as wrong he now considers right. Whence comes the correction, or whence the authority to which alone he bows? Some would answer, this authority must be found in the general conscience, or consciousness, of right and wrong. That which finally is accepted by all right-minded persons has more authority than the conscience of the individual alone.

But the general consciousness may become wrong also, just as in the case of an individual. The general apprehension of right is progressive and changeable. It is not something fixed. The right itself is unchangeable in substance, but its apprehension is progressive and gradual. The general consciousness may become prejudiced, warped, or blinded, for a time, and then correct itself. The general conscience, for instance, once justified slavery as a normal condition for a class of society, even supported their judgment by Scripture, but the time came when this general conscience changed, and now slavery is condemned.

Whence, now, comes the authority by which this change of judgment and conscience is wrought? Does it not come, after all, from conscience itself? Does not consciousness correct consciousness, so that ultimately this consciousness is its own test?

No, I reply, the correction, the authority for the correction, comes from the idea of right itself. There is an inherent power in the idea of right which works continually to bring the historical apprehension of right into more and more full agrement and harmony with the idea, or ideal right. Of course this implies that the idea of right is a living reality, not a mere abstraction, that it has an authenticating power in conscience, or the moral judgment, of men. The moral law and the moral judgment in men are homogeneous, the one is for the other. The moral law and the human will must harmonize, else there will be in men a sense of contradiction, and therefore no man can be happy so long as this condtradiction exists. He feels the contradiction and works to remove it. But the authority and power to work this harmony come from the moral law itself, or better perhaps, the light which is to enlighten the moral judgment and correct it of its errors, comes from within the idea of right itself.

Just here we find the principle of the science of Jurisprudence. The historical sense of right, which comes to expression in common and statute law, is one of the guides to the Jurist, but in developing the science of Jurisprudence he must make account also of the ideal right. This is the absolute standard. This, as a living authority and power, works upon his moral judgment and brings the historical apprehension of right up towards the ideal standard.

Now, the theory that makes Christian Consciousness the ultimate test of the right interpretation of Scripture occupies substantially the same position as the theory that the moral sense is the ultimate standard of right. Practically for us this moral judgment is the guide, or test, for the time, but it is not ultimate. The ultimate test or criterion is in the idea of right. But how are we to get at that test? How get an expression of it? That we shall consider further on.

Let us now apply our argument from analogy. The Word of God is for us in reference to supernatural revelation or supernatural truth, what the idea of right is for natural truth, i. e., the Word of God is the pure and perfect truth, it is the perfect standard of truth and right. The interpretations of Scripture as expressed from time to time to time in the creeds and confessions, are like the historical precedents and standards in Jurisprudence. These interpretations are imperfect, incomplete, and may be positively erroneous. What now is to correct these partial apprehensions of revealed truth? I answer, the Word of God itself. There is in this Word a self-authenticating power, and a self-interpreting power as well. So long as the Christian Consciousness is not in full harmony with the meaning of the Word of God, there will be a sense of unrest, and a struggle to get rid of this unrest. But which of these two is to be the test or standard? Is the word to be harmonized with Christian Consciousness? Or, is Christian Consciousness to be harmonized with the Word?

Oh, it may be said, we agree that the Word of God is the standard, and the Christian Consciousness must be harmonized with it, but in bringing about this harmony interpretation is required, new interpretation, and where, now, are we to find the guide to this new interpretation? I answer again, it is to be found in the Word of God itself. But the Word in the Bible cannot speak. It lies silent on the written or printed page. Yes, it can speak—it does speak. "The Word is living, energetic and sharper than a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner (judge or test) of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Yes, it judges, not only of the thoughts in man, but it judges whether these thoughts interpret it (the Word) aright. We may use another analogous illustration of the point we are discussing, viz., what are called the evidences of Christianity. In former times these evidences were sought for, either outside of Christianity, in reason, etc., or else in some particular feature of Christianity, such as miracles, prophecy, or the inspiration of the Scriptures. We have come to see now, however, that Christianity is its own best evidence. As well attempt to illustrate the sun by the light of a candle as to seek for the fullest and best evidence of the truth of Christianity outside of itself. It authenticates itself. So the right interpretation of Scripture authenticates itself. We must, of course, recognize the work of the Holy Spirit in the interpretation of Scripture, and the sanctified reason of the Church. What is called the Theopneusty of the inspired Word must be considered, and the way in which the interpretation comes to utterance. The consideration of these points will serve, we think, to shed still greater light upon the self-interpretation of Scripture.

LUTHERAN INFLUENCE IN THE BEGINNING OF THE REFORMATION.

It is interesting to trace the influence of the different tendencies as they originated and afterwards developed in the time of the Reformation, and to note how they assisted in shaping the religious condition of other people. An instance of this we have in the English Reformation. Early in this wonderful movement on German soil we have two distinctly marked tendencies, the real, true Lutheran, and the Melancthonian-Calvinistic. In the "Creeds of Christendom," by Dr. Schaff, this is clearly brought out. From the account given, it is very evident that the Lutheran influence in the beginning of the English Reformation and afterwards was very little indeed, but the principal influence was the Melancthonian-Calvinistic, or Reformed, which impressed itself firmly, as is seen in the Thirty-nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer, and instead of being called sometimes by Lutheran divines an Ecclesia Lutheranizans, it should of right be Ecclesia Reformed. In "Creeds, etc.," page 600, Dr. S. says:

"The Melancthonian Influence. . . . The writings of Luther were read with avidity by students in Oxford and Cambridge as early as 1527. Cranmer spent some time in Germany, and was connected with it by domestic ties. Henry VIII. never overcame his intense dislike of Luther, kindled by their unfortunate controversy on the seven sacraments and strengthened by Luther's breach with Erasmus: but he respected Melancthon for his learning and wisdom and invited him to assist in reforming the English Church. . . . But the peculiar views of Luther on the real presence and the ubiquity of Christ's body found no congenial soil in England. Cranmer himself abandoned them as early as December 14, 1548, when a public discussion was held in London on the Eucharist; and adopted, together with Ridley, the Calvinistic doctrine of a virtual presence and communication of Christ's glorified humanity." "Bishop Jewell, the final reviser of the Thirty-nine Articles, wrote to Peter Martyr (Reformed), at Zurich (February 7, 1562): 'As to matters of doctrine, we have pared everything away to the very quick, and do not differ from you by a nail's breadth; for as to the ubiquitarian (i. e., the Lutheran) there is no danger in this country. Opinions of that kind can only gain admittance where the stones have sense," page 603.

The Zwinglian and Calvinistic influence. "The doctrines of Zurich and Geneva began to spread in England under the reign of Edward VI. Calvin, whose books were published by Henry VIII. (in 1542), corresponded freely with the Duke of Somerset (October 22, 1548), Edward VI. and Cranmer, and urged a more thorough reformation of doctrine and discipline and a better education of the clergy, but left episcopacy untouched, . . . and his doctrine of the Eucharist gained ground more rapidly. Cranmer called to his aid prominent Reformed and Unionistic divines, such as Peter Martyr, Ochino, Laski, Bucer and Fagius, and gave them high positions in Oxford, Cambridge and London. It is characteristic of his catholicity of spirit, that in 1548 he conceived the plan of inviting Melancthon, of Wittenberg, Bullinger, of Zurich, Calvin, of Geneva, Bucer, of Strasburg, Peter Martyr, Laski and others to Lambeth, for the purpose of drawing up a union creed for all evangelical churches—John Hooper, who had resided two years at Zurich, was made Bishop of Gloucester (1551), although he went even beyond Bullinger and Calvin in matters of clerical vestments and ceremonies and may be called a forerunner of Puritanism. . . . Bullinger's 'Decades' were for some time the manual of the clergy, afterwards Calvin's 'Institutes' became the text-book of theology in Oxford and Cambridge. Even his catechism was ordered to be used by statute in the universities (1587). Next to him his friend and successor, Beza, was for many years the highest theological authority. The University of Cambridge, in thanking him for the valuable gift of the Codex D, of the New Testament, 1581, acknowledges its preference for him and John Calvin above any men that ever lived since the days of the Apostles. Beza's Editions of the Greek Testament: his elegant Latin translation and Exegetical Notes were in use in England during the reigns of Elizabeth and James, and were made the chief basis not only of the Geneva Bible (1560), but also of the revision of the Bishop's Bible under King James (1611).

"It is not too much to say that the ruling theology of the Church of England in the latter half of the XVIth and the beginning of the XVIIth century was Calvinistic. The best proof of this is furnished by the 'Zurich Letters,' extending over the whole period of the Reformation, the Elizabethan Articles, the Second Book of Homilies (chiefly composed by Bishop Jewell), the Lambeth Articles, the Irish Articles and the report of the delegation of King James to the Calvinistic Synod of Dort," pages 603 and 604, Vol. 1.

All this is interesting, and afterwards in the further history of this movement, this same Reformed tendency is clearly visible, and if history shows anything it clearly shows that there was little, if any, influence of Lutheranism impressed on this movement, but it was the Calvinistic, as may be gathered from the Thirty-nine Articles, where you see no trace of Luther. If the history of this wonderful movement of the XVIth century will be re-written, which unquestionably at some future day will be done, it will be found that the Reformed element, as seen in the Melancthonian-Calvinistic, was the chief force and that it influenced both the civil and the religious spheres of the life and in which was embodied germs for free, constitutional liberty which developed themselves for us as a nation, into our Independence. M. ERNEST RENAN.

An English writer in the Quarterly Review describes M. Renan as incomparably the greatest intellectual force in France at this moment. And he adds, "it would be difficult to mention any living man of letters whose influence in the civilized world is more diffused, more penetrating, and more effective."

The same writer offers the information that, when M. Renan made Theology and Biblical Exegesis his chief study, he became more and more convinced that "investigate as you will you will never find that a miracle has been wrought under conditions where it could be observed and verified." If this growing conviction is to be taken as an indication of the superior intellectual force and broad-minded scholarly grasp of this brilliant champion of modern skepticism, then there is very good reason for thinking that both his natural ability and the breadth of his intellectual culture are largely overestimated. That he is a man of great power is a clear case, but when he acts on the assumption that the miracles of the Bible, and especially those of Jesus, have not been properly observed and verified, he shows plainly that with all his genius he is still a victim of blind prejudice and of unpardonable ignorance. He does not understand the first principles of the civilization of which we are told he is a master-spirit. The creative force of our modern life is Christian, and it is this in the proper Biblical sense of the word. It is not the historic product of a speculative mysticism like that preached by Voltaire and Renan. The creed and custom, which gave character and historic force to the life and manners of European nations, rested all along on that miracle of miracles, the life of Jesus. This life Renan uses all his splendid powers of imagination and intellect to drag down to the level of mere manhood, and then opens the flood-gates of his superb French diction to persuade and to convince this intelligent generation that the miraculous portion of Bible history is without satisfactory evidence and proof. It is no doubt true that much of the sentimental idealism of the day is quite willing to be led by such a poetic solution of the sense of Christian civilization, and especially will this be the case among a people that have for centuries been under the sway of debasing superstition, on the one hand, and of wild, tumultuous, fanatical, hatred to all religion, on the other. But nations and peoples, who have made it a business to make themselves practically familiar with the life and spirit of the Gospel, and who have fully studied its origin and its growth in the world, will not be so ready to abandon the New Testament history of the life of Christ and put in the place of it that of M. Renan.

His "Vie de Jesus," we are told, took the world by storm. In France alone 300,000 copies of it were sold. It was bitterly attacked, and criticised and condemned, but remained master of the situation. Although it may not be called "an epoch making book," it is claimed that savants had to reckon with it. Not even the most orthodox commentators, we are assured, wrote after this book appeared as they did before it was published.

Well, let all this be admitted, for the sake of cutting the matter short and doing full square justice to every interest involved. So gifted a writer, as this living Frenchman is, would hardly produce so popular a book on so vital a subject without bringing about some good effects. Orthodox writers on the sacred text are not expected to adopt infallible methods, and it is by no means taken as the universal rule of orthodox Christendom that such writers dare not be constrained to mend their ways by the attacks of skeptical critics. But the question at issue is not one of methods, but of historic facts. Is the life of Jesus a myth, or the history of a mere man; or is it what the orthodox Christian world has always taken it to be, the life of the Son of God and Saviour of men? France may follow Renan and be satisfied with the kind of Jesus and Saviour he holds up to their view, but the more matter of fact civilization and common sense of the Germanic stock, now fully in the lead of modern thought, will likely hold on to the Pauline Gospel of the second headship of Christ to mankind, and deal with evangelical piety as an organized sacramental force of society, rather than as a speculative poetical fancy which can be enforced simply as a mythical intellectual dream. If this central argument of the Christian faith stands, all the talk about the impossibility of miracles, as we find these in the Holy Scriptures, is clearly a waste of breath.

REFORMED REUNION.

August 13th was a great day at Pen-Mar for the pastors and members of the Reformed Church in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and Southern Pennsylvania. The excursionists came in from the States by carloads, carriage-loads and wagon-loads, until fully 5,000 picnickers wandered under the trees. Of these, fully 4,500 came to meet their friends from the neighboring States for the second annual reunion of the Church. Besides the large Baltimore contingent, there were twenty-five charges from Maryland represented, six from Virginia, three from Hanover, one from Gettysburg, and others from Cumberland county, including Mechanicsburg, Carlisle, Shippensburg, Chambersburg, Mercersburg, Greencastle and Waynesboro.

An impressive open-air meeting was held with the old pavilion as a platform and rustic seats under the trees as an auditorium. The opening anthem, "Te Deum," was sung by the choir of Zion church, Hagerstown, C. E. Heard, director, F. E. Cook and Miss Emma Staley as organists. Rev. A. H. Kremer, D. D., delivered the prayer. Stirring hymns were joined in by all the multitude gathered about the stand and aroused every one. Rev. F. F. Bahner delivered the address of greeting, and short speeches were made by Rev. Conrad Clever, Rev. S. L. Whitmore and Rev. H. F. Dittmar. A prayer was made by Rev. G. W. Aughinbaugh, D. D., and the benediction was given by Rev. S. N. Callender, D. D., closing the religious exercises.

A short business meeting was held, in which Rev. J. B. Shontz suggested that a permanent organization be formed, to be known as the Pen-Mar Reformed Re-union, with regular officers and executive committee. The suggestion was favorably received and resulted in the adoption of the title mentioned and the election of the following officers: Rev. Dr. J. H. Hoffheins, of Martinsburg, President; Rev. F. F. Bahner, Vice-President; Secretary, Rev. J B. Shontz, of Chambersburg; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. E. R. Deatrick, of Woodberry, and Treasurer, Edward Shafer, of Baltimore.

Among the Maryland clergymen present at the reunion were Revs. Dr. J. S. Keifer, G. A. Snyder, of Hagerstown; Dr. J. H. Hoffheins, of Martinsburg; C. S. Slagle, Westminster; U. H. Heilman, of Emmitsburg; George Whitmore, of Mechanicstown; M. L. Firor, now of Union Bridge; S. L. Whitmore, Adamstown; T. F. Hoffmeier, of Middletown; J. Marion Mickley, of Burkettsville; George W. Snyder, of Boonsboro; B. R. Carnahan, of Keedysville, Wm. Goodrich, of Clearspring; Henry Ditzler, of Taneytown; J. R. Lewis, Sabillasville.

From the churches in the Cumberland Valley were Revs. Dr S. N. Callender, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions; Wm. F. Stewart, Dr. A. H. Kremer, T. R. Dietz, J. B. Shontz, F. F. Bahner, Jacob Hassler, Cyrus Cort, and Dr. George W. Aughinbaugh.

Among the pastors from Gettysburg Valley churches were Revs. T. J. Barkley, A. C. Geary, George B. Resser, Walter Krebs, B. F. Bausman, J. O. Balliet, A. K. Kline, and George G. Everhart, were among the Virginia pastors present. Among the visitors from other Synods were Revs. George H. Johnston, of Philadelphia, and C. F. McCauley, D. D., of Reading.—Hagerstown Globe.

MISSIONS.

While we were busily at work on the annual report of the Board to the Synods, we received a letter from our worthy Treasurer, Charles Santee. As we had received a letter from him only a few days before, we wondered what kind of news was in store for us now. On opening the letter we were told that a good pastor in Pennsylvania had made a donation to the Board of $500 for the purpose of creating a Church-building Fund to be known as "A Pastor's Offering" Church-building Fund.

We were rejoiced beyond what we can here express on receiving this news. It seems to us to be the beginning of a movement which will bring to the Board a fund that will immeasurably advance the work of Church extension. The Church is beginning to realize as never before the importance of such a fund. The people are becoming awake to the importance of the work and are paying more liberally towards it. We are glad here to announce that since the first of last January nearly five of these special funds of $500 each have been contributed for the use of the General Board. We regard this as an exceedingly favorable start for the formation of a large fund with which to do the future mission work of the Church. To gather these funds requires a good deal of work—but we have come to realize that the people are willing to contribute of their means for this object, if only they are properly approached on the subject. May we not hope that during the ensuing Synodical year this work will be pushed by the churches with greater vigor than ever?

And here let us speak a few words to those who are blessed with abundance of earthly means. Do such realize the needs of the Church? Do they appreciate the fact that a fund of $500 just at this time would be a great help to the Board? Now is the time when these funds are needed. In ten years hence we are sure that this fund will be high up into the tens of thousands, and then, dear reader, your help will not be needed as much as to-day, when as yet the fund is small. Are there not others who can do as this pastor did and give us $500? From every prominent city east and west comes the appeal for the organization of congregations. Who is calling? The people? Yes, but through them God is calling. To go into these cities we must have these Building Funds. Men of means will you help us? Shall we not very soon have the pleasure of adding others to the list of those who contributed $500 to this good cause? We hope so.

The Religious Press.

THE German theologians have had their rationalistic voyages, and now they are all heading home for the old harbor of divine revelation. We might say that orthodoxy is becoming the fashion over there, but that would be stating it too lightly. They are tired of barren theorizing and are becoming hungry for something more satisfying to the soul—so they are turning to the old Bible.—The Interior.

Dr. Schaff, says:—

"Calvin was intolerant of any dissent, either papal or heretical, and his early followers in Europe and America abhorred religious toleration (in the sense of indifference) as a pestiferous error; nevertheless, in their conflict with re-actionary Romanism and political despotism, they became the chief promoters of civil and religious liberty based upon respect for God's laws and authority. The solution of the apparent inconsistency lies in the fact that Calvinists fear God and nothing else. In their eyes God alone is great, man is but a shadow. The fear of God makes them fearless of earthly despots. It humbles man before God, it exalts them before men. The fear of God is the basis of moral self-government, and self-government is the basis of true freedom.

"The moral discipline which Calvin introduced reflects the severity of his theology, and savors more of the spirit of the Old than the spirit of the New Testament. As a system it has long since disappeared, but its best results remain in the vigorous and high-toned morality which distinguishes Calvinistic communities."—The Independent.

HIGHER SALARIES FOR SUPERIOR PROFESSORS.

Colleges of the first rank and theological seminaries of the first grade must increase the salaries of their professors if they would command the best. To be prepared to fill a professor's chair in such institutions requires many years of study, costly in time, support, travel, books and apparatus. Sectarian discriminations are being overlooked more and more. The finest institutions bid for the best men regardless of creed. The trustees of such institutions should understand the situation. There are professors to-day in Methodist Episcopal institutions who command double the amount in non-denominational institutions. To our knowledge some great institutions have been making earnest efforts to get some of our best men by offering them large increase of salary, and some of our institutions have had the good sense to make a suitable increase to retain men in such demand, and some professors have had the magnanimity to say: "We will not ask as much as we are offered; only such an increase as will justify the sacrifice of the rest of the difference."—Christian Advocate.

FROM GERMAN INTO ENGLISH.

Slowly but surely the logic of events in the United States translates individuals and communities "from German into English." And this fact may as well be remembered first as last; for though hindsight may be good—there are some who cannot even see the completed lessons of history—foresight is better. Isolated individual Germans are quickly absorbed; in communities and neighborhoods the process may be more slow, but none the less is it sure; and the part of wisdom is to see to it that the absorption is effected without any ill-feeling. The language of the United States is English. The survival of other tongues is the exception, not the rule. It is a strange phenomenon, however, that what people submit to without objection in matters of business they will oppose in matters of religion. If they must speak English in order to sell their wheat, or corn, or cattle, they will manage to speak English; they will endure to be spoken to in English; they will submit to receiving a check or draft in English phraseology. But, at least occasionally, these very men will object to the holding of English services for their children, who, growing up in this English-speaking land, prefer to hear English. Then comes a crucial test for "the powers that be" in such a congregation. There have been so many cases examined and tested among Lutherans, Reformed (Dutch and German), Evangelicals, and in our Church, that the question is lifted out of the domain of the perhaps, and the scientific fact is established that the only way to secure peace and harmony and lasting good is to respect the rights of the younger members, and to let them have services in English to a reasonable extent. Both John Hus and Martin Luther contended for the right of the common people to hear the Gospel in their own tongue, and the XXIVth Article of Religion of the Church of England as by law established, declares that "it is a thing plainly repugnant to the word of God, and the custom of the Primitive Church, to have public prayer in the church or to minister the sacraments, in a tongue not understanded of the people." Though in these cases the protest was against the Latin tongue, the principle is the same against the German tongue in the United states, and as it would be against the English tongue in Germany.—The Moravian.

RECOMPENSE.

BY ADELAIDE ALLISON.

Through the long, toilsome day she went
With quiet sweetness, everywhere;
I watched her tender, tireless hands,
Caressing here, relieving there;
No recompense, no answering smile,
No words of cheer were hers the while.

"Tell me, thou patient one," I cried,
"What secret hope sustains thy heart,
That through a thankless ministry
So gentle unto all thou art?"
She turned on me her soft eyes' light:
"I heed them not. He comes to-night."

Behold an all-repaying love!
What matters, when the day is past,
The burdens others on her laid,
If in His arms she rests at last?
The darkest way to her is bright,
Since He who loves her comes to-night.

O soul, whose hope is high as heaven,
Cease thine unprofitable plaint!
A watcher, waiting for thy Lord,
How can'st thou grieve, how dar'st thou faint?
Work on, rejoice, while yet 'tis light,
Thy Bridegroom's voice may call to-night.

A day of toil—what matters it?
So short this life of tears and pain.
Lift up thy face! What dost thou fear?
Thou hast not given thine all in vain.
Soon thou shalt walk with Him in white,
Who knoweth? It may be to-night.

THE WISH-RING.

(Translated from the German, by J. P. B.)

There was once a young farmer who being unable to make great strides in tilling the soil, sat upon his plough and rested a moment to wipe the sweat off his brow. Just then an old witch came hobbling along and called out to him:

"Why do you plague yourself and yet accomplish nothing? Go forth straight for two days until you come to a big fir-tree, which stands free in the forest and towers above all other trees; when you fell this, then your fortune is made."

The farmer did not let her repeat this, but took his hatchet and went upon the journey. After two days he found the fir-tree. Instantly he began to cut it down and just at the time when it fell and hit the ground with force, a nest with two eggs in it fell out of its topmost branches. The eggs rolled upon the ground and broke, and when they broke, a young eagle emerged from the one and a little gold ring fell out of the other. The eagle grew perceptibly until he was half as high as a man, shook his wings as if he wished to try them, lifted himself somewhat into the air and then cried out: "You have redeemed me! Take the ring which fell out of the other egg as an acknowldgement. It is a Wish-Ring. When you turn it around on your finger and at the same time express a wish it will soon be fulfilled. But there is only one single wish in the ring; when this is fulfilled, then the ring has lost all further power, and is just exactly like a common ring. On this account consider well what wish you make, so that you will not regret it afterwards." Upon this the eagle lifted himself high up into the sky, sailed around in large circles above the head of the farmer for a long time, and then shot towards the East (Orient) like an arrow.

The farmer took the ring, put it on his finger, and then retraced his steps homeward. When evening came he arrived at a city. Here a goldsmith stood behind his counter and had many costly rings for sale. Then the farmer showed him his ring and asked him what it was worth.

"Not anything!" answered the goldsmith.

Then the farmer laughed out loud and told him that it was a Wish-Ring and worth more than all the rings which he prized so very highly. But the goldsmith was of a morose and intriguing character. He invited the farmer to remain with him over night and said: "To entertain such a man as you are, with such treasures, brings success. Stay with me!"

He welcomed him in the nicest way possible, with wine and polished words; and that night, when he slept, he pulled the ring off his finger, so that he did not find it out, and put in its place a very common ring, which, however, looked exactly like the Wish-Ring.

The next morning the goldsmith could hardly wait until the farmer was on his journey. He awoke him already early in the morning and said: "You have yet a great journey before you. It is advisable that you should start early."

As soon as the farmer was gone, he hurried into his room, locked the shutters so that nobody might perceive anything, bolted the door behind him, placed himself in the middle of the room, turned the ring around and said: "I desire immediately a hundred thousand dollars." Scarcely had he said this, when it commenced to rain dollars, hard, bare dollars, as if it were pouring out of tubs; and the dollars hit him on the head, shoulders and arms. He began to cry out mournfully, and tried to run for the door, but before he could reach and unlock it, he fell down upon the floor, bleeding profusely. But the dollar-shower was not yet over and soon the floor broke down from the pressure, and the goldsmith, together with the money fell down into the deep cellar. But it still continued to rain on top of this, until the hundred thousand dollars were all down; and finally the goldsmith lay dead in the cellar with the heap of money upon him. On account of this alarm, the neighbors rushed hurriedly in, and when they found the goldsmith lying dead beneath the money, they said: "It is truly a great calamity, when blessings come so bountifully." Then the heirs came also and divided.

During all this time the farmer went homeward contentedly and showed the ring to his wife. "Now, a failure is impossible to us, beloved wife," he said. "Our fortune is made. Let us only well consider what the wish shall be."

But at the same time the wife had a good advice. "What say you," "said she, if we should wish to have a few more acres? We have, indeed, so few. Here lies a portion exactly between our acres; let us but wish it."

"This would be worth working for," answered the husband. If we work very hard for an entire year, and have some success, perhaps we will be able to buy it." Upon this the husband and wife labored a whole year with all their power, and when the next harvest arrived, there never before were such abundant crops as at this time, so that they were able to buy the piece of land and had money left besides.

"Do you see," said the husband, "we have the piece of land, and the Wish is still good?

Then the wife thought that it were well if they should wish for another cow and also a horse.

"Wife" again the husband replied, at the same time rattling the money, which was left, in his pockets, "why shall we, on account of such a trifle, give up our wish? The horse and cow we will get also." And, as was said, after another year had passed the horse and cow were more than earned.

The husband rubbed his hands contentedly, and said: "Again have we spared the Wish for another year, and yet we have everything that we could desire. Indeed, we have success!"

Yet the wife pleaded earnestly with her husband that he should some day, finally, make the "Wish." "I cannot understand you any more," she said angrily. "Before this time you always complained and lamented, and wished everything possible; but now, where you could have it as you might wish, you plague and skin-strip yourself, are satisfied with everything, and let the best years pass by. King, Count, Emperor, a big stout farmer you could be, and have every chest full of gold—and yet you are unable to decide what you wish to have."

"Do but cease your constant pressing and driving," replied the farmer. "We both are yet young and life is long. Only one Wish is in the ring and this is soon done away with. Who knows what may once happen to us where we may need the ring? Is there anything wanting to our happiness? Have we not, since we have had the ring, succeeded so well that the whole world is astonished? Then be reasonable. You can indeed all the while consider what we might wish for ourselves."

With this the affair ended for the time being. And it really appeared as if the entire happiness had come into the home with this ring; for barns and chambers became fuller and fuller from year to year, and after a longer series of years, the poor, little, farmer had become thick and stout—a man who worked and labored with his servants throughout the day, as if he wished to earn the entire world; but at evening he sat before the house-door, satisfied and content, and let the passers-by bid him "Good-evening."

So year after year passed by. Now and then, when they were entirely alone and nobody heard it, the wife, it is true, continually reminded the husband about the ring and made all kinds of propositions to him. But since he always replied that there was still plenty of time, and that the best things always come to one last, she did it less and less, and at last it seldom happened that anything was said concerning the ring. It is true the farmer himself turned the ring around on his finger about twenty times daily and examined it, but at the same time he feared to express a wish.

Thirty and forty years passed by, and the farmer and his wife had become old and snow-white, but the Wish was not yet made. Then God bestowed a favor upon them and permitted them both to die happy in a single night. Children and grandchildren surrounded both their coffins and wept; and when one of them wanted to take off the ring and preserve it, the eldest son said: "Let father take his ring with him into his grave. During all his life he has had his secret with it. It is indeed a dear keep-sake. And mother, too, examined the ring many a time—in truth, she presented it to father in her young days."

Then the old farmer was buried with the ring, which was to be a "Wish-Ring," but was none; and yet had brought so much happiness into the home, as anyone might wish. For it is a singular thing with that which is wrong—an evil thing in a good hand is ever yet worth much more than a good thing in a bad one.

THANK THE CHILDREN.

They run on our errands, upstairs for our books and slippers, our thimbles, our new magazines; down stairs to tell the servants this thing or that; over the way to carry our parcels; to the post-office with our letters.

They leave their work or play a dozen times in a morning, to do something to oblige us who are grown up bigger, and liable to be less absorbingly occupied than they are.

No game of politics or business in after life will ever be so important to the man as the ball and the top to the little lad; and no future enjoyment of the little girl will ever be greater in degree and kind than her present in her dolls and play-house; yet Johnnie and Jennie fly at our bidding, arresting themselves in mid-career of the play which is their present work, and alas! half the time we quite overlook our own obligation to be grateful. We do not say, "I thank you." And because we do not say it, we make it difficult for them to be as polite, as simple, courteous, as otherwise they would be by nature, and the imitation which is second nature to all children.—The Household.

A DISASTROUS RIDE.

Some little Drops of Water
Whose home was in the sea,
To go upon a journey
Once happened to agree.

A cloud they had for carriage,
They drove a playful breeze,
And over town and country
They rode along at ease.

But oh, there were so many
At last the carriage broke,
And to the ground came tumbling
These frightened little folk.

And through the moss and grasses,
They were compelled to roam,
Until a brooklet found them
And carried them all home.

WITH SUCH THINGS AS YE HAVE.

"Oh, how I wish that I could have such a beautiful dress as Lena Welton's is. It is just lovely, and so becoming." Netta Nichols said this to her cousin May who was visiting her.

"Yes, her dress is pretty, but I admire her hat the most, for that is elegant, to say the least," May answered.

"The hat matches the dress, so of course it is pretty. If I could have dresses as nice as some of Lena's old ones, I should be satisfied. But I cannot, so what is the use talking about the matter?" And Netta's voice revealed something like discontent and envy.

"I suppose that Mr. Welton is able to dress his daughter nicely," May answered.

"Yes, and so of course it is right for him to do so, and everybody ought to dress nicely, if it is possible," Netta added quickly.

"I think that there are other things that are more needful than fine clothes," said the practical cousin.

What are they?" was the inquiry.

"Food and common clothes with the nice left off; and I think that there are a great many exceptions to the rule, that people may dress nicely if they are able to do so."

"Please give an instance where it is not right for people to dress nicely, if one has the means to do so, Cousin May. I know that you can reason quite logically, and generally find something below the surface—quite out of sight of common eyes—that you can draw up to 'clinch the argument with,' as brother Jim says."

The discontented expression passed from Netta's face as she said this, and a pleasant smile came in its place. The young girl appeared much fairer and sweeter, after the change of expression.

May smiled too, but as she never allowed the look of discontent to deform her face, the smile did not make such a contrast of expression.

"Well, Netta, dear," she began, "if every one could wear nice clothes, it might not be a sin if all wore them, but as they cannot, a part, of course, feel their degradation more, by seeing the other part dressed so much better than themselves. It creates unrest and discontent, and they often resort to sin in order to dress like others. Then those that are 'arrayed in purple and linen' generally think that they are better than others, and look with contempt upon those that cannot dress as well as themselves. But the strongest argument against wearing fine clothes is, that the whole world might be comfortably fed and clothed if the favored portion of it would give up just the luxuries to furnish the needy ones with the plain necessities of life. Is not this a good argument, Netta?"

"Splendid, taken in a general sense, but as long as all will not be governed by this great golden rule or law, has not the single individual that is able to dress well a right to do so?"

"Yes, in a certain sense—and in another, no. Lena Welton has a right in one sense to dress just as she does, but you see that she makes others unhappy, and awakens a spirit of discontent in them. Then as she professes to be a Christian, would it not have been better to have taken that elegant dress and hat, and given it to the poor family that has been sick so long, just around the corner? The price of that dress and hat would no doubt have kept that family for a month in food. This is not wholly my argument, for I heard my mamma and another lady talking the matter over."

"I am very sorry for poor Mrs. Lester and her sick children," Netta said, breaking May off suddenly.

"I have often been there to carry food that mamma sent, and I have felt so sorry for poor little Anna. She is so sweet and patient that one cannot help loving her. Yes, May, I would give up a dress as nice as Lena Welton's, if I could give the price of it to this poor family."

In spite of Netta's love for nice clothes, she possessed a warm, sympathetic soul, and her cousin May touched the golden key when she spoke of poor Mrs. Lester.

"Yes, May, I think it might have been much better, if Lena Welton would have done this, and she might, for her papa does just as she wishes him to. But I suppose she never once thought of Mrs. Lester, or anyone else when she purchased that beautiful dress. I guess that it does make people selfish to indulge their pride," and Netta spoke slowly and thoughtfully.

"Only this morning mamma read for our Scripture: 'Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with such things as ye have, for he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.' I always commit to memory one verse of our morning Scripture lesson, and I selected this one from it to-day. Then mamma talked about the subject of contentment, and this is how I happened to be so well prepared to express my thoughts, or rather mamma's thoughts upon it," May acknowledged.

"Your mamma is always right, as well as mine," Netta said, with the old smile returning after the earnest talk.

"Be content with such things as ye have——such—things—as ye have," she repeated. "And Christ Himself said, 'and why take ye thought for raiment,' for I learned that also," May replied.

"And I will commit both of those verses to memory also," Netta promised.

WHY WAS SHE SO HAPPY?

I was calling on a friend the other evening, and just as I stepped into the sitting-room, I heard her say to her little daughter: "It is your bed-time, dear; my little girl must go to bed early, and then she will be bright for her lessons to-morrow."

The little girl was sitting in her papa's easy-chair, holding in her lap a very large doll. As I sat down, I saw she was very busy brushing its hair, and smoothing its clothes, looking it over very carefully, to see that everything was just as it should be.

"What a dear little dollie! How pretty her hair is, and how becomingly she is dressed," I said.

The little girl was pleased that I should notice her baby, and began to tell me all about her.

"Not to-night, little one," I said. "Didn't I hear mamma say it was her little girl's bed-time?"

The mother very quietly began talking to me, while the little girl went on fixing dollie for the night. Only for a few moments, however; then the little maiden slid very slowly out of the big chair, gave her mamma three long, sweet kisses, with a pleasant good-night for us all, and with dollie hugged tightly in her arms, went soberly away upstairs. But in a very few moments we heard her singing a soft little lullaby to her baby. Very likely the little girl could not have told what made her feel like singing, but I know. It was because, instead of fretting and pouting over not being allowed to sit up longer, she had cheerfully obeyed her mother's wishes.—Child's Hour.

TOMMY'S MAY-BASKET.

"No, ma'am, Miss Nelly, that basket isn't for Minnie Godon. Don't care if she is the prettiest girl in school. That basket is just particularly for Aunt 'Liza, and nobody else.

"Course, Minnie's a nice little girl. She's well enough for some kinds of plays. But for real, solid good times I'd rather go to Aunt 'Liza's. She always asks some other boys to come when I do—real, first-rate ones—and she don't care how much noise we make. She never calls us rough or horrid. She isn't 'fraid of the least speck of dirt. She wouldn't run or squeal if she saw a little mouse. She doesn't frizzle her hair into her eyes tryin' to look pretty.

"But I'll tell you what she does. She puts on a big, long apron, and gets out her corn-popper, and sauce-pan and molasses-jug, and rolls up her sleeves, and shoves her spectacles to the top of her head,—and then you'd better believe, there's fun right along! And we all help shell the corn and shake the popper and make the balls and pull the candy, and you never tasted anything so good in your life. You know how 'tis, don't you, sis? You go there just as often as I do.

"Jo Martin will hang a May-basket for Minnie, I guess. Well, he can if he wants to, but I'd rather send mine to Aunt 'Liza!"—Youth's Companion.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 1891.

ACCORDING to the Scripture God is our Father. He it was who in the beginning begat man, and He it is who now "hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." This is the statement of a fact which is enough for the great mass of men, the millions upon millions, to know, that they may attain unto eternal life. God is the Creator and we men are His creatures. Such a line of demarkation is sufficient to place us in a proper saving, objective relation to God, which is the main thing so far as each individual is concerned. On this account it is that Christ teaches us to address God in the incomparable prayer which He has taught us as Our Father which art in heaven. Looking up to Him as occupying this relation to us, even if we have been sinful, disobedient children, we feel that we are not without hope. Confidence is inspired, parental affection is awakened, and through the power of Christ we are truly begotten again unto a lively hope.

IT is one thing to be begotten again of God, and quite another to understand the nature of the process by which we are brought back from death to life. The two are often confounded, and some theologians, who are dogmatic in more senses than one, seem to lay more stress on their own subjective opinions or speculations regarding the new birth than on the fact itself. Man is a curious and interesting compound. He will think, and speculate, also, often prying into the deepest and profoundest mysteries, no matter what barriers are laid in his way. The trouble here is that he is too prone to lean upon his own understanding and to sit in judgment on the facts of divine revelation, which are historically true, thus reducing the Bible to an old story book, made up of myths or fables, like many other old heathen books. Hence we have rationalism from the mildest to the darkest, and the most diabolical Mephistophelian character; and it becomes necessary for Christian scholars to enter the field of warfare, to expose the fallacies of the rationalists and their confreres. Some are successful, at least for the time being; some set forth infallible and invincible argument in favor of the scriptural record, and some may miss the mark altogether; but these apologetics and defenders of the Truth, taken altogether, however imperfect their apologies, are doing a good work in their day and generation.

But apart from the necessity that we should have those who can be set for the defence of the Gospel, it is right, proper, and edifying for us to think, reflect and ourselves speculate on the mysteries of redemption, on the nature of the incarnation, and the wonderful union of God with our humanity, provided we do so reverently, with docility and love for the truth. To this St. Paul himself does not object. He, in fact, encourages it. He says that he could speak of wisdom also among such as were perfect, not the wisdom or philosophy of this world, but the philosophy of God, which had been hidden from men but was now revealed to them by the Spirit. See 1 Cor. ii.

THE AGED—THEIR VALUE.

As far as we know we have always endeavored to honor and respect age. In many ways it has afforded us much pleasure to be in the company of aged people, to listen to their conversation. But it is only of late years, as one after another of them has passed away, that we have been made to feel the value of their society, and how much we lost by not appreciating our opportunities as fully as we certainly now would, if we had them as near to us as we once had. Questions come up bearing upon the history of the Church or the State, of things in former times, that father such a one could answer or explain better than any one else; but that father is no longer here; both he and his generation for the most part, have left us. With such authorities much valuable information and knowledge have passed away and been lost. The moral of all this is that we should appreciate the value of our grandfathers, our grandmothers, and our great-grandparents, if they are still alive, and honor them also more than we perhaps now do, and get all the treasures from them that we can whilst they are still with us.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

A writer in the August number of the Review of Reviews says, that fifty years ago, when the Prince of Wales was born, "the English-speaking world was two-thirds monarchical and one-third republican. To-day it is two-thirds republican and only one-third monarchical." The writer knows whereof he speaks. This immense change of sentiment must have taken place in Great Britain and its colonies, of course not here in the United States. Taking it for granted that the increase of votes from one side of the house to the other in favor of the republic is to continue at the same rate in the future, the question might be asked, Where will the monarchy stand "in the English-speaking world," at the end of the next fifty years? The recent scandal attached to the Prince of Wales may help to hasten the answer or denouement, but such occurrences, regarded by some persons as unfortunate, by others, as fortunate, are slight as compared with the under current of history carrying nations forward towards a higher plane of freedom, liberty and independence, or free institutions—of course involving the old principle of law, derived from monarchy, as we may hope.

CREEDS.

The Apostles' Creed, as it is called, has been honored and reverenced in all ages of the Church as the universal faith of Christendom. Within short limits which is sometimes significant, it contains all the truths or facts, which it is necessary for theChristian to believe in order that enjoying true comfort he may live and die happy. Like every thing else that is good, it has, however, often been perverted or employed to favor the interests of error. A somewhat eccentric Episcopal clergyman, who of late has been making considerable noise in New York, professes apparently strong faith in the Apostolic and Nicene Creeds. As he alleges, they are sufficient for him, and he wishes to be bound by no other.

If he were willing to submit to their spirit or true meaning he in fact would need no other; but then he thinks—if the papers report him correctly—that he is at liberty to preach on all points, such as miracles, the resurrection of Christ and future rewards and punishments, according to his own understanding of such matters, where the creeds do not manifestly condemn his views; and that if his conclusions should come in conflict with the standards of his own denomination so much the worse for them. The English Episcopalians have always made much account of the creeds and confessions of the early Church, more so than other Evangelical Christians, and sometimes excessively so; but here they are challenged by Mr. Newton, one of their own children, to give up their Protestant characteristic in the interests of rationalism. Will they do that? It is not likely that, with all their reverence for antiquity and the ancient Church, they will commit ecclesiastical suicide.

From this single instance, as well as from some other revelations of the day, it is evident that creeds springing up from time to time, have been useful and necessary to ward off real heresy as well as to promote the normal growth of the Church. For the most part they have been constructed for the purpose of protesting against error, to serve as a barrier to prevent it from spreading and to hold up the barrier of truth to the Church and the world. They all have the elements of truth in them, and if they are begotten at times amidst angry controversies and are sometimes narrow, imperfect or one-sided, they nevertheless show that they embody an earnest Christian feeling and desire to uphold the truth of the Bible. They may have outlived their day and need revision, as is the case with all human productions; but when the wood, hay or stubble are eliminated, some pure grains of gold will remain behind. They are in fact worthy of study, both to the layman and the theologian, as a part of Church history. Such is the case with the Formula of Concord and the Westminster Confession certainly, whatever we may think of portions of their contents. This remark is true even of the canons of the Council of Trent, which form a learned treatise on theology, notwithstanding its anathemas, its gratuitous assertions and heresies, which John Calvin in his day amply exposed and confuted. The old creeds ought not to become idols or fetiches, as may be the case with some people who wish to pose in the heights of orthodoxy, but then they ought not to be irreverently denounced as evils, bad things or mischief-makers, as is too often done in our secular papers and sometimes also in professedly religious organs.

"BETHANY DAY" OF THE REFORMED CHURCH OF EASTERN PENNA., AT WOMELSDORF, PA., AUG. 27, 1891.

For years past Bethany Orphans' Home, at Womelsdorf, Pa., has held its Anniversary occasions; these Anniversaries were red-letter days in the calendar of the Home, and the many who availed themselves of the opportunity always enjoyed the trip to Womelsdorf.

At the last Anniversary of the Home it was resolved that the scope of the day as heretofore observed should be broadened and thus afford an opportunity to the members of the Reformed Church in Eastern Penna., to come together for social and religious enjoyment. Other sections of the Reformed Church have their occasions for bringing the people together—the Potomac Synod at Pen Mar, the Pittsburgh Synod at Idlewild; and now it is proposed to the Church in Eastern Penna., to have an annual gathering or reunion of Reformed people at Womelsdorf, and the day of such reunions is to be known by the name of "Bethany Day."

A committee of ministers and laymen from different sections of the Church were appointed to carry out the idea in a practical manner and as a result of their work we are now ready to say that the First "Bethany Day" of the Reformed Church in Eastern Penna., will be held at Womelsdorf, Pa., on Thursday, August 27, 1891.

The Programme for the "Day" will comprise at least three addresses by able and prominent men, impromptu speeches, together with exercises by the children of the Home, interspersed with vocal and instrumental music; a grand Union Choir being a special feature.

The Phila. and Reading R. R. Co. will sell Excursion tickets for the day from all stations along its lines and branches, thus affording cheap transportation to all who may wish to attend and parties of 100 or over can obtain special rates by applying to the nearest ticket agent.

Ample accommodations are being prepared for the comfortable accommodation of all who come; in regard to the item of refreshments, parties can bring their lunch with them and dine a la Picnic, or coffee and lunch can be procured at the lunch counter, or a regular dinner can be had in the dining hall of the Home at a reasonable place; all profits accruing from the sale of lunch or dinner tickets will accrue to the benefit of the Home. Ample and bountiful provision will be made by the Ladies' Auxiliary Committee of the Home and all will be well served.

Persons intending to come to Womelsdorf on "Bethany Day" will please send the name of the congregation they represent and its location (as per example St. Paul's, Reading, Pa., or St. Peters, Bucks Co., Pa.,) to Rev. Thos. M. Yundt, Womelsdorf, Pa., on or before Aug. 20, in order that they may be suitably inscribed upon Banners made for the occasion; these banners will be placed in the large auditorium in the grove and may be taken home by the parties as mementos of the day and the occasion.

This is confidently expected to be the largest gathering of Reformed people ever held in Eastern Penna.; large delegations are expected from Reading, Allentown, Bethlehem, Easton, Pottstown, Philadelphia, Lebanon, Harrisburg, Lancaster, Pottsville, and other places; from one alone we have every evidence that 1000 persons will attend.

Will you not be one to enlist others in the project in order to the greater success?

The Committee together with the Supt. and Board of Managers of the Home will do all in their power to make this the First "Bethany Day" a day long to be remembered because of its rich feast of social, intellectual and religious enjoyment. A most kind and cordial invitation is herewith extended to you and your friends to come up to a feast of good things and enjoy the day and the occasion with others of the same household of Faith. Yours very kindly,

Rev. J. H. Sechler, President, Philada.,
Rev. T. J. Hacker, Secretary, Allentown,
J. Z. Gerhard, M. D., Harrisburg.
J. B. Fricker, Reading.
Jos. Lemberger, Lebanon.
Jacob Rader, Easton.
W. R. Lawfer, Allentown.

It is desired that every Congregation in Eastern Pennsylvania should be represented, and while the occasion being "Bethany Day" of the Reformed Church, the Committee however in the name of the Church do herewith extend a cordial invitation to All Friends of the Church and Orphans' Cause to join with us in making the "Day" all the more pleasant.

☞ Applications for circulars should be made to Rev. T. J. Hacker, Allentown, Pa.

—The Tennessee Methodist gives the following advice which it would be well for all to adopt:

"A religious paper in every family in every charge, ought to be the motto of every preacher and every officer in the church. Let this motto be adopted. Let every pulpit be heard on the necessities of a pure, clean literature for our homes. Let meetings be held in the interest of Christian literature and let the work be organized, and committees appointed to push the movement until the goal is reached—a religious paper in every family in the charge."

IN MEMORIAM.

REV. ERNST WILLIAM REINECKE.

Ernst William, son of Rev. John Reinecke and wife Fredricka, was born December 9, 1822, at Helmarshausen, Electorate of Hessen, Germany. At the age of 13 his parents emigrated to this country and settled at Frederick city, Maryland. Through the pious instruction of godly parents and association with men like the late Dr. Zacharias, his thoughts were early directed towards the ministry, and when 17 years of age, he earnestly began his preparation for his holy calling at Mercersburg College, graduating from the Classical Department in 1843, and three years later receiving his diploma from the Seminary. The two years following he was privileged to continue his College associations, having been appointed tutor by the faculty, and then began a long and active ministerial career with the acceptance of a call from the Millersville congregation. His work here continued very satisfactorily to himself and people for four or five years, but was then interrupted by the necessity he felt to aid his father, whose health would no longer enable him to bear all the work of a large ministerial charge at Shrewsbury, York Co., Pa. Filial duty kept him here until his father's resignation, and then a change of occupation being necessary on account of his own failure of health, he taught for one year at Norristown Academy. Being again able to resume ministerial work, he accepted a call to Frederick city, Maryland, and labored in his old home until 1858, when called to the Plainfield charge. In the following spring the care of the Forks church was combined with that of Plainfield, and having married about the same time, he settled down to the long career of work which was only closed by his resignation in November, 1890. In July of the same year he was prostrated with a stroke of paralysis, and after a long and painful illness of ten months, he breathed his last on Friday, May 8th, at 4 P.M., aged 68 years, 4 months and 29 days. He leaves a widow, 10 children and 5 grandchildren to mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father, one child having died in infancy.

Dr. Reinecke was a gentleman with whom the community in which he lived, the church he served and the family circle can ill afford to part. He was a Christian in the truest sense of the word, and to his great credit be it said he practiced what he preached. He was modest and unassuming in his intercourse with people. He was a model husband and parent, a kind neighbor and a useful citizen. He took great interest in the cause of education and served in the Nazareth School Board for three terms. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the sorrowing family.

The funeral took place from the family residence, at Nazareth, Tuesday morning, May 12th, at nine o'clock. The services at the house consisted of an address in English by Rev. D. Kuntz, a prayer by Rev. A. E. Erdman, and singing a hymn announced by Rev. T. Kessler, of Allentown. At the conclusion of these services the funeral cortege proceeded to Forks church, which was filled to overflowing long before the time for the services to commence. The mourners arrived at the church at 10.20 o'clock, when the solemn services were commenced by the choir singing "Nearer My God to Thee." Rev. T. O. Stem preached a short and impressive sermon in the English language, taking as his text the words recorded in Philippians, first chapter and twenty-first verse: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." A more appropriate discourse could not have been delivered. He was followed by Rev. Kessler, who preached a sermon in the German language from Second Timothy, fourth chapter, seventh and eighth verses: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." The clergymen who assisted in the services at the church were Revs. J. W. Mabry, J. E. Smith, J. O. Lindaman, T. N. Reber and John Wolbach.

That the deceased was highly esteemed was evident from the large congregation assembled. Besides the clergymen mentioned, Revs. Kuntz, Erdman, C. E. Sandt, H. Daniel and Lichtenthaeler, were also present. At the conclusion of the services the casket was opened and the remains, which looked very natural, were exposed to view in front of the chancel. The large congregation was then given an opportunity to look for the last time upon the face of the dead.

The casket was then closed and the remains were conveyed to the grave in the adjoining cemetery, a plot having been donated to Rev. Reinecke, upon which one daughter was buried. The services at the grave were conducted by Rev. John Wohlbach.

The pall-bearers were Rev. T. N. Reber, T. O. Stem, J. O. Lindaman, J. E. Smith, J. W. Mabry and T. Kessler.

The funeral was the largest that has been held at the Forks church in many years.

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."—Minutes of Synod, 1888.

It is a somewhat singular fact that the widespread movement in Germany in favor of Sunday rest receives its greatest support, not from the clergy and church members, but from the business men. This fact is not to the credit of those who ought to be foremost in every thing looking to a Sabbath observance. But it is said, in extenuation, that the German movement is based upon the physical argument instead of the religious; that the business men are taking hold of it because man's bodily wants require a day of rest. But, upon the same ground, ministers and churches should help it on. Christianity has regard to the physical life. Jesns cared for the body. He urged Sabbath rest because of its advantages from a mere secular point of view. Besides, it is a decided gain when business houses are closed on the Lord's day. It exerts an educating influence upon society. It indicates respect for the Sabbath. Moreover, the abstinence from work on this day leads up to the higher end of Sabbath rest—that is, the spiritual. It gives men a chance to attend the sanctuary. It affords ministers and Christians the desired opportunity to go in and labor among all classes of people, and bring them to the recognition of Sabbath observance as a day, not only of cessation from their daily work, but of worship. We must press the claims of Sabbath sanctification on the ground of its necessity to man's body as well as to his soul.—The Presbyterian.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

WE ARE BOUGHT WITH A PRICE.

BY MISS SUSANNA CORRELL.

We are bought with a price. We are bought with a price.
'Tis the blood of the Son, the beloved of God,
Who in mercy descended so humbly to earth,
To redeem from damnation, and win to new birth,
All the souls who in boldness shall plead for His grace,
And shall tread the same path He so faithfully trod.

We are bought with a price. We are bought with a price.
As we gaze on the cross where that victim divine
So disgracefully hung in His fearful despair;
We can read but in part what the lost one must bear,
By the cry that escaped from that agonized heart,
When but once He lost faith in the Father benign.

We are bought with a price. We are bought with a price.
Hear the words of the Master declaring His love.
'Tis for you I have died. 'Tis for you I have died.
That with Me you may ever in glory abide;
And throughout that unending Eternity join
In the song of the ransomed resounding above.

We are bought with a price. We are bought with a price.
'Tis so costly, so fearful, heartrending and sad,
That the hearts of the whole human race should be won,
And the work is so nobly, so lovingly done,
May we meekly surrender ourselves to His love,
And through Him be forgiven, in Him be made glad.

We are bought with a price. We are bought with a price.
Oh! may gratitude flow from each heart upon earth;
For no soul could be saved had that price not been paid,
All that suf'ring endured, and that sacrifice made.
Oh! with grateful hearts praise Him with angels of love.
Sing His song of redemption, acknowledge His worth.

Science and Art.

It has been determined that the resistance of the air to a bullet three-quarters of an inch in diameter, weighing one-twelfth of a pound, is about 10 pounds, or 120 times the weight of a bullet at a velocity of about 1,600 feet per second. On the principle of mechanical similitude it has been shown that a 24-pound cannon-ball fired with a charge of 16 pounds of powder should acquire a velocity of 1,650 foot seconds, and that the resistance of the air would then amount to 540 pounds, or nearly 23 times the weight of the shot.

A large steel sailing vessel has recently been built in Norway, among whose fittings is a patent oil distributor, by which oil can be thrown upon the waves during severe storms. Within the vessel there is an iron reservoir, from which a pipe extends alongside of the vessel near the water line and as close to the bow as possible. A valve in the pipe close to the reservoir regulates the distribution of the oil. This is probably the first case in which provision for throwing oil upon the waves has been made from the first designing and building of a vessel.—Railway Review.

The whaling business is not entirely defunct. A schooner arrived in New Bedford lately after a twenty-one months' voyage with a good supply of both sperm and whale oil.

The French Senate has passed a bill to regulate the working of women and children in factories. The bill establishes a 10-hour working day, forbids night work and prescribes one day of rest in every seven.

A despatch from Chicago says that work has been stopped on the World's Fair buildings, errors having been made by the engineers' department in calculating the strain to which several of the buildings would be subjected.

A large proportion of the vice and crime in this country comes from abroad. Out of 60,000 prisoners, according to the census of 1880, about 13,000 were of foreign birth, though the foreign-born population was only a little over an eighth of the whole at that time.

Thirty years ago there was not a woman's foreign missionary society,—i. e., general organization—in America. Now there are thirty-nine, with twenty-five thousand auxiliaries, and an annual income of one million seven hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the payment of $5000 to James McIntosh, of San Francisco, as a reward for information furnished by him which resulted in the seizure at San Francisco of 2304 five-tael tins of opium, valued at $15,602. This is the maximum informer's fee allowed by law.

The Woman's Canning and Preserving Company, of which Miss Amanda T. Jones of Chicago is president, is said to have a capital of $1,000,000, and has one plant in operation in Chicago which can put up five hundred cans daily. They have also decided to build a factory at Benton Harbor, Mich., for the canning of uncooked foods.

A curious incident happened on a railroad train in Maine. When some distance from Portland a heavy thunder and lightning storm arose. Suddenly there came a most brilliant flash, and for a moment both engineer and fireman were senseless. The lightning must have struck very near, and some think that the train itself was struck, although it bore no marks.

A large shortage in winter apples is predicted by the New England Homestead, on the basis of 1000 special reports from the commercial orchard regions of the United States and Canada, which it publishes this week. A heavy crop of fall apples is admitted. "Maine has an even poorer crop than last year, and, while the production in the other New England States and in New York is considerably above the unprecedented shortage of 1890, the average of the seven States is only 52, compared with 38 last year, 100 representing a full crop."

Two important relics have lately been opened to the public at Pompeii. They are the temple dedicated to Augustus and the Women's Baths. "The latter is said to be the only building in Pompeii in which are preserved intact, without any restoration, the ceilings of the rooms, and the pavement of the tepidarium is also intact. In the temple only one object—but that of great value to art—is preserved, the altar on which sacrifices were offered up. It is of marble, perfect in all its parts, covered with rich bas-reliefs, representing the different forms and incidents of sacrifice."

Hints and Recipes.

If indelible ink gets spilled on a garment, saturate the spot with iodine and then wash out with ammonia.

A solution of olive oil and camphor is claimed to be efficacious for hay fever. Prepare it by gently warming some olive oil and a small lump of camphor together for several hours. Apply it by oiling the inside of the nostrils.

A particularly acute little article for banishing rats and mice is moist caustic potash. It will be found very useful in some places. Spread a thin layer of it around their holes. When they run over it evil befalls them. It sticks to their feet, eats off the bark, and lays them on the shelf.

Borax water is good for washing the hands. Coarsely ground oatmeal is a fair substitute for soap in washing the hands. White unscented soaps are the best, as the highly scented soaps are usually made of rancid fats. A solution of oxalic acid will remove fruit stains from the hands, but it must not touch an abraded surface.

PEACH SNOW.—Peel and cut into very small pieces enough white, ripe, sweet peaches to fill a cup two thirds full; set on the ice. Make a boiled frosting of a cup of sugar and one egg. When cool and ready to serve, drain the juice from the peaches, and mix them through the frosting. Place a heaping spoonful of this mixture in the centre of a fancy sauce dish, and pour around it sweet cream flavored with the juice drained from the peaches. The cream should be very cold. —Harper's Bazaar.

A trap for night-flying insects can be made as follows: Remove the top and bottom from a barrel, and then smear it well with tar. Across one end nail a strip of wood, and to this fasten a cord, so that the barrel may be hung where desired. It should hang from two to three feet from the ground, and a large pan or tub should be placed beneath. In the evening suspend a lighted lantern from the strip, lowering it about to the centre of the barrel. By using thirty of these traps, the injurious insects were almost exterminated in a large orchard and garden.

THE EGG IN MEDICINE.—Good Housekeeping has the following: In medicine the shell of the egg is used as an antacid, being better adapted to the stomach than chalk. The white of the egg is an antidote in cases of poisoning with strong acids or corrosive sublimate. The poison will coagulate the albumen, and if these poisons be in the system, the white of an egg swallowed quickly will combine with the poison and protect the stomach. An astringent poultice is made by causing it to coagulate with alum. This is called alum curd and is used in certain diseases of the eye. The yolk of the egg is sometimes used in cases of jaundice, and is an excellent diet for dyspeptics.

Farm and Garden.

Fifty years ago few farmers attempted to get their hay without the use of liquor. If this was not supplied, a farmer was thought stingy and mean. Now if he should use it, he would be thought mean in the opposite sense. Surely there has been an improvement in the temperance sentiment among the farmers.

There is quite a difference in trees that have been properly pruned and those that have been allowed to grow too much wood, so far as the thrift of the trees is concerned, as the trees that have been cut back will produce more new wood, send out more rootlets, and be in better condition for producing a crop of fruit the next bearing season.

Flax straw may be put to so many uses that it is a matter of great consideration, and should always be taken into account when estimating the profit in flax culture. In Minnesota factories are now engaged in working it into pails, pans, dippers and many other articles usually made from wood and tin. It seems that it may be employed in the manufactures in many of the same directions that wood pulp has been.

CUTTING AND CURING CLOVER.—The value of clover depends largely upon the method by which it is secured, says a writer. It should be cut in the morning as soon as thoroughly dry from the dew, but not a moment sooner. Leave until thoroughly wilted in the afternoon, and then put it into cocks and cover with canvas haycaps. By this means it may be left out-of-doors until the curing process is completed (three or four days, according to the weather), and then put in the barn. It will make better hay than if moved away the same day that it is cut.

THE ANDOVER REVIEW, August, 1891. This number opens with an article on "Poetry and Philosophy," by Professor Dewey, who takes occasion to criticize Matthew Arnold's assertion that in the future mankind will have to turn to poetry, rather than to science, religion and philosophy, for the interpretation of life and the consolations they need. Prof. Pollens furnishes an excellent sketch of "Alexandre Vinet." Miss Julia Gulliver in an admirable paper answers the question, "What Value has Goethe's Thought of God for us?" Rev. Arthur Smith calls attention to "A Neglected Limitation of Criticism." Dr. A. T. Peabody, recalling a visit to the South long before the rebellion, gives his impressions of "Slavery as it appeared to a Northern Man in 1844." In a short article on "The Indwelling Christ," Rev. John Buckham presents an important truth of which too little account has been made, both in theology and in practical life. The editors contribute two timely notes on "The Positive Side of Biblical Criticism," and "The Papal Encyclical on Labor," and Professor Batten, in an able critical paper, traces "The Historical Movement in Is. xl.-lxvi."

DIED.—In Mohrsville, Berks county, Pa., on the 19th ult., Miss Annie E. Addams, aged 76 years.

Deceased was a daughter of Peter Addams and sister of Rev. G. E. Addams. She was born in Bern township, near West Leesport, and after the marriage of her sister to Seth Zimmerman, of Mohrsville, in 1857, she took up her residence with them until she died. She was baptized in infancy, and at the early age of thirteen years she was received into the Reformed church by the sacred rite of confirmation by the Rev. Father Dubbs. Although young when she took this solemn step, her subsequent devoted, active and Christian life proved most conclusively that her union with the church was a true consecration unto the Lord.

From her early youth she was delicate in health, but notwithstanding this she made herself eminently useful in the church, Sunday-school, and every reformatory work, and her works of charity were highly commendable.

About three years ago she became rheumatic which resulted about three months ago in an attack of progressive paralysis, which finally terminated her life.

Her interment took place at Mohrsville on the 22d ult. The officiating clergymen were the pastor, Rev. R. S. Apple, of Hamburg, and Rev. Jno. W. Steinmetz of Reading.

DIED.—Jackson's Centre, Mercer Co., Pa., July 14th, 1892, Mrs. Rosina L. Nisbet, aged 36 years and 24 days.

In the death of Mrs. Nisbet the large family of MESSENGER readers loses an appreciative member, and the testimony we desire to bear to those who with her have enjoyed the weekly visits of our beloved church paper, is that we sorrow not as others which have no hope.

She was a devoted member of Zion's Reformed congregation in the Shenango charge. In this congregation she spent her whole life, and, although she lived a very long distance from the church, and was generally worshipping with brethren of a sister denomination, she always enjoyed the communion and fellowship as well as the worship with the home congregation whenever she could be in attendance.

She leaves to mourn her early departure from the home she had made so pleasant, a husband and two children, who receive the sympathy both of the community in which they live and of the church of which they are members. To them comes that delightful consolation which must ever come to the heart bowed down with grief, out of the piety and the love to her Lord which marked the life of this Christian wife and mother.

Her body was laid to await the resurrection at Greenville Cemetery, July 17th, 1891, and on Sunday, August 2d, a memorial service was held in the church in which she had been an esteemed member, when the memory of the departed sweetened the thoughts of the home in the Father's house whither through joy and sorrow we are being surely led. DIED.—At the same place, on the 16th day of July, 1891, Mrs. Geo. Smith, aged 80 years, 11 months and 23 days.

DIED.—At his residence, near Academia, Pa., Mr. George H. Meminger, aged 72 years, 11 months and 22 days.

THE NEED OF MORE PASTORS.

It is often remarked that the Reformed church is now well supplied with pastors. Even one of the church papers a year ago stated that the Reformed church was fully supplied with ministers.

But in looking over the field it is found that a large number of vacancies exist while very few ministers are out of employment except such as probably from choice have sought other occupations, or are otherwise unfitted for pastoral work.

At no place in the church are these vacancies felt more keenly than in the Synod of the Interior. Every pastor is pressed with work so that he cannot even supply a vacant charge. It is almost useless for Classis to appoint a committee on supplying a charge. The pastor can not be spared from his home field work without injury to the cause; the distances to be travelled are often so great that the vacant charge feels it a great burden to pay even the travelling expenses of a neighboring minister preaching for them.

In the Illinois Classis the Astoria charge has been vacant for a long time, which has been a great injury to our church in terest. Another charge is believed to become vacant soon. The Shelby charge has been under supply service for years.

In the Iowa Classis the Wilton charge has been vacant for several years. The Columbus Junction and Coneville charges are both served by one pastor at present, thus doubling up the work,

In the Kansas Classis the Holton charge, composed of two congregations and one other preaching point, has been vacant ever since its reconstruction. It is too important a field to thus neglect. In Topeka, the capital of the State, the Reformed mission has had no services for more than two years. Wells and Sciota are both receiving supply services.

In the Wichita Classis the Cheney and Whitewater charge, two promising congregations are vacant. The Russian mission at Otis, Rush county, is vacant. So also is the Emporia Mission.

In the Lincoln Classis that important field at Sioux City, Iowa, is vacant. So is the Redfield charge in Dakota.

The few ministers without charges residing in the bounds of the Synod of the Interior, have entered into secular business, or on account of ill health or old age are not able to take up the work.

Not only are these vacant charges to be supplied, but many important new fields are to be taken up. We cannot stand still, but must push forward, and take our share of the work in the great West. If not then our grandest and best opportunities will be lost, our active members find spiritual homes in other churches, and we will be left to struggle in weakness for many years.

Earnest efforts are often made to secure ministers from Ohio and Pennsylvania, but even there all have plenty of work and the students from our seminaries are engaged, before they graduate, to charges in the eastern states, and the west must remain unsupplied.

Now there seems to be but one way in which a remedy can be brought about and it must come soon. The young men in the bounds of the Synod of the Interior must be challenged for this work. Many perhaps now feel the importance of it. Our institutions at Dakota, Illinois, and Wichita, Kansas, are doing a grand work in furnishing a preparatory course of studies. But this is not sufficient. It does not reach far enough. We must provide a theological course of studies to prepare young men for the pastoral and missionary work.

We must utilize the material grown up on our own soil. Such would remain at their post of duty. They would not turn their faces eastward after laboring a year in the pastorate. Having been reared in the west they would prefer to remain in the west. The missionary work would at once partake of a more substantial and permanent character. The people would be encouraged then. Now they say what's the use to try. These ministers you sent us only stay a year and then go east again, and then we must submit to a long vacancy.

A theological seminary is for the benefit of the whole church. Now instead of centralizing all the means and professors at one or two places, would we not accomplish a greater good by transferring at least one Professor of Theology to the Synod of the Interior, say in connection with Wichita University, and let him teach a general course of theology or such course as would be best suited to prepare our young men for the work at hand?

Let such Professor receive his salary from one of the endowments raised in the east. Let the eastern Synods elect the Professor and may he be under their con trol, only so we receive the benefit of such theological training.

We have young men who would avail themselves of such facilities now and our work in the west would take new inspiration. It is useless to talk about sending our young men east to receive their instruction. There are too many institutions here of other churches, which give great inducements to young men to enter, and such as would enter would be lost to our church. May the Lord put it in the heart of some individual to endow such a professorship if we cannot get one of our eastern Professors.

JAILS IN NINE COUNTIES.

A JULY INSPECTION BY MESSRS. GRIFFITH AND ZINKHAN.

During the last two weeks in July, Mr. G. S. Griffith, president, and Rev. Louis F. Zinkhan, the general agent of the Maryland Prisoners' Aid Association, visited the jails and almshouses in nine counties on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. They spent some time in each of these institutions, looking carefully into their condition and management. In a number of them where spiritual ministrations are unusual, they gathered the inmates together and held short, impressive devotional services, which seemed to be moch appreciated by many, and in each institution they also distributed a number of select books, papers and tracts. They speak encouragingly of the Eastern Shore, and stated that in the matter of caring for the prisoners and paupers there was progress being made from year to year. With the more rigid enforcement of the Local Option law within the past year, there is also a perceptible improvement in the moral status of these counties. A number of the counties have been aroused from their lethargy in the matter of caring more tenderly for their paupers, and hence, substantial improvements are in progress in several counties, and in prospect in several others. They report as follows:

Caroline's New Almshouse.

Caroline county makes an excellent showing. The jail at Denton is a small affair, with only four cells, but these answer every purpose, as they are seldom all occupied, and frequently are empty. The sheriff 's office is not a lucrative one, for during the twenty-one months of his incumbency in office he has taken no prisoners to the penitentiary, and only one to the House of Correction. Most of the persons arrested are charged only with trifling offenses. At the time of our visit there were two prisoners in jail—a colored man charged with cruelty to animals, and a woman, charged with disturbing the peace at a camp meeting. Heretofore, the Caroline County Almshouse has had but meager and wretched accommodations for the colored inmates, but at present a new building for the superintendent is approaching completion, whereupon the colored people will be well protected in the old residence. The white inmates had very clean and pleasant rooms.

Only One Man in Talbot's Jail.

Talbot county is likewise forging ahead. Several years ago the great bane in Easton and vicinity was the number of social clubs, which, in violation of law, were discussing liquor and enticing many young men into debauchery. These clubs have been rooted out mainly by the untiring energy of Christian women, and the good results are strikingly apparent in the decrease of rowdyism, and the number of arrests. We found only one prisoner in jail, charged with using obscene language. The Talbot county jail is remarkably well kept, and in point of cleanliness probably surpasses all the others.

The poor of the county have reason to rejoice, for while they are subjected to some inconvenience at present on account of the thorough overhauling of the old almshouse, they will be properly cared for a month hence. The county is at present expending over $3,000 in reconstructing the old building used for so many years as an almshouse, and also has two new wings under roof and approaching completion.

Somerset is not Doing so Well.

Somerset county is finally taking a step which it should have taken long ago. For some years past at the almshouse, the main building, which is constructed of brick, has been utilized almost exclusively by the family of the superintendent, and the white and colored inmates have been housed in two small frame outbuildings, which were in poor condition and almost entirely devoid of tables or even chairs. It is finally decided that a house shall now be erected for the superintendent's family. From a moral standpoint, Somerset made rather a discouraging showing in the jail population. The jail itself was well kept and in good repair, but we found eight prisoners, seven of whom were charged with larceny.

Insane Prisoners in Cecil's Jail.

Cecil county has made better provision for its paupers than any of the Eastern Shore counties. The almshouse is delightfully situated on a beautiful farm and with healthy surroundings, and is conveniently located. The buildings are in excellent condition, and the management is everything that could be desired. The insane department is a new building erected a few years ago under the auspices of the lunacy commission, and it is a model of its kind. The twenty-four insane inmates are well cared for. The only improvement we would suggest here is to have a few large iron gates put in the high board fence surrounding the yard, so that the inmates who spend so much time here might be able to look beyond their narrow confines.

The Cecil county jail is a fine structure and well kept, but it should have been placed on higher ground. The building is damp, and at the time of our visit there were two feet of water in the cellar. Of the sixteen prisoners two are insane, and we can see no reason why they should be kept in jail.

Kent, Dorchester and Worcester.

There has been very marked improvement in the Kent county almshouse, and it is admirably managed. There has also been a steady decrease in the number of paupers. There are at present only 28, whereas four or five years ago there were at times above 60.

Dorchester county is in need of an entirely new building for its paupers, the present one being unfit for use, both on account of its condition and location; and in Worcester county, the colored quarters, which have been an eyesore and reproach for years and years, should be cleaned and enlarged. The nine colored inmates—three women and six men—had only two medium-sized rooms between

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Work for the Prisoners.

One of the baneful concomitants of imprisonment in the county jails has been the enforced idleness to which the prisoners have been subjected. Some of the county sheriffs are, we are glad to say, striving to abate this evil to some extent, at least, by giving the prisoners some employment about the jail or prison yard. This is a wholesome innovation and should be more generally practiced by the sheriffs or keepers of county jails. We commend to all the county jails a feature introduced in the Cambridge jail and with which we were delighted. The sheriff there has secured a lot of suits made of good prison material, which are worn by all the inmates during their incarceration. With plenty of clean water and a change of clothing in prison the jail can be kept cleaner, and there is less danger of sickness; besides, these suits make escapes from jail more difficult.

Some Figures of Interest.

The following figures give the number of inmates in the nine county jails and almshouses:

Counties.	Jails.	Almshouses.
Kent,	4	28
Queen Anne's,	5	27
Talbot,	1	19
Caroline,	2	16
Dorchester,	9	21
Somerset,	8	8
Wicomico,	4	8
Worcester,	3	28
Cecil,	16	41
Total,	52	196

Of the 52 inmates in the jails, 15 are white and 37 colored. Of the whites, 13 are men and 2 women. Of the colored, 33 are men, 3 women and 1 boy. Of the 196 inmates in the nine almshouses, 113 are white and 83 colored. Of the whites, 55 are men and 56 are women and 2 children. Of the colored, 44 are men, 32 are women and 7 children.

The inmates in the almshouses do not represent all the poor, for all the counties [illegible] of pensioners, who receive annually a sum of money ranging from $10 to $30 each, and in the aggregate these nine counties annually expend in this way about $15,000. The number of pensioners is nearly three times as great as the number of paupers in the almshouses. The pension system is an admirable one, in that it saves many worthy poor from going to the almshouse, of which many in their declining years have a horror; besides, it is the most economical arrangement for the counties.

The insane of these counties, excepting Cecil county, which has a fine insane asylum, are nearly all placed in the Maryland Hospital for the Insane, and their care and treatment cost each of these counties from $1,500 to $3,800.—Baltimore American, August 3rd.

REFORMED CHURCH IN FREDERICK, MD.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH.

Members of the Reformed faith began to settle in this community prior to 1740, having come mostly from the Palatinate. The precise date of the organization of the congregation in Frederick is not known. On May 15, 1747, Rev. Michael Schlatter visited Frederick and preached in what in his diary is designated as a "new and unfinished church." There was a small wooden church previous to this, which probably faced towards Patrick street, on the lot now back of Trinity chapel. The second church building occupied the present site of the chapel. Prior to 1747, we had no well authenticated records, but since said date they are in good form, during the pastorate of Rev. Philip Wm. Otterbein. In 1761, the lot on which the Evangelical Reformed buildings and old parsonage stands was purchased from Christian Lowndes, for the use of the congregation, and in 1762 a stone building was erected upon it which was for many successive years the parsonage.

During this pastorate also the third house of worship was built on the same site of the old building, which was dedicated in 1764.

In 1775 and 1778 the congregation came in possession of what has since been known as the Bentz Street Graveyard. In 1778 Michael Stoner and John Brunner presented to the congregation a lot of ground on which the school-house and sexton's house was built, on which ground the present church edifice was erected.

In 1807 the steeple of the church was remodelled; the wood work and spire that now rests on the original stone shaft was built by Stephen Stoner, architect and contractor. This steeple was incorporated into Trinity chapel and except as to some adaptation of its base, remains unchanged. In 1822 the church was remodelled under the pastorate of Rev. Jonathan Helfenstein. The location of the pulpit was changed to the south end of the church and galleries were introduced on the both sides and end. At this time the town clock was placed in the steeple of the church.

The first provision for regular English services was made in 1825, when the Rev. Samuel Helfenstein, Jr., a nephew of the pastor, was made a co-pastor for this purpose.

From the time Messrs. Helfensteins' pastorate closed, the Rev. John H. Smaltz of Pa., and the Rev. Charles Reighley, were pastors until the election of Dr. Zacharias.

In 1835 Rev. Daniel Zacharias became pastor, in 1836 the church building was materially improved.

In 1841 the Frederick congregation was constituted a charge, and given the entire time and services of its pastor.

In 1844 Rev. Isaac Gerhart was settled here as pastor of the German element of the church.

The corner-stone of the present church was laid June 12, 1848, the invited guests who took part in the services were Revs. Dr. Joseph Berg, of Philadelphia, J. C. Betelle, of Virginia, Robert Douglas, of Jefferson, Md. The church was built according to plans of John Wall, Esq., architect, of Baltimore. The practical superintendent of the work was Charles W. Hallar, of this city. The church was dedicated June 8th, 1850. Rev. Dr. Alfred Nevins of Chambersburg, Pa., preached the sermon. Revs. Dr. Berg, of Philadelphia, Dr. Heiner, of Baltimore, with the neighboring and local clergy were present at the service.

In 1854 the present bell was placed in the cupola of the church.

In 1860 what are known as the Evangelical Reformed building and parsonage were erected.

On March 31st, 1873, after a successful pastorate of thirty-eight years, Rev. Dr. Daniel Zacharias entered into rest.

On June 12th, 1874, Rev. Dr. Eschbach, the present pastor, entered upon his labors in the congregation, the twelfth in succession, during a period of over one hundred and forty-four years.

DR. ESCHBACH'S MINISTRY has been very successful. During the last six months of the life of Dr. Zacharias he was not able to do much pastoral work. A large number of youth were ready to enter a catechumens' class in preparation for confirmation. Dr. Eschbach admitted to full communion by confirmation and adult baptism nearly ninety the first year. The following year the number was nearly as large. The taking down the old church in 1881 and building the chapel, added to the interest of the Sunday-school work. The ample accommodation for the large schools, the rooms for catechetical instruction and meetings of the consistory—rooms comfortable and pleasant and elegantly furnished has contributed to the prosperity of the schools and the success of other church work. The Ladies' Societies and the Young People's Guild are doing a good work. Dr. Eschbach's ministry of seventeen years has been eminently successful. In the pulpit, in the desk, by the sick bed and in funeral services he is always equally happy, speaking the right words in the right way. The relation between pastor and people is eminently pleasant, with affectionate interest in the spiritual and temporal welfare of his flock and untiring labors to secure it on one side and tender love and veneration for the shepherd and liberal efforts to help him in all good works on the other side; pastor and people are to be congratulated on the present state of the church. With the improvements in the church just commenced, this congregation may be expected to enter on a new era of prosperity, and wield a still greater moral power in the community.—Frederick Daily Examiner.

IN MEMORIAM.

FREDERICK C. MOYER.

Thursday, July 30th, at 10 A.M., the venerable founder of the Musical College, Prof. Frederick Christopher Moyer passed to his reward, at Freeburg, Pa., after an illness covering some months from congestion of the stomach. His end was peaceful and he retained his mental faculties unimpaired. He was aged 81 years, 5 months and 14 days.

He was married to Miss Mary Ann Boyer, daughter of the late John Boyer of Freeburg, Pa., March 1, 1834. Saturday evening, March 1, 1884, this couple celebrated their golden wedding, when children, grandchildren, relatives and friends assembled to do honor to the occasion. The result of this union was 9 children, 36 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren, making a total of 47.

Prof. F. C. Moyer was born in Washington township, Snyder (then Union) county, February 16, 1810. He was the fifth child of Christopher and Betty (Howerton) Moyer, in a family of ten children, of whom only Hon. George C. Moyer, his almost lifelong companion in business, and Mrs. Joseph Sieber of Akron, Ohio, are living.

From early manhood he had been a man of affairs, and from 1832–87 was in the mercantile business, besides being an extensive farmer, which latter industry he never forsook, its every detail claiming his attention to the end. In the affairs of the people and the community his interest never flagged for a moment. In connection with the religious, educational and political well being of this vicinity he had been an active worker—a leader. In 1864 he conceived an idea that the proper thing was to establish a newspaper here. In 1867 the idea assumed a tangible form, when his son, the late Daniel B. Moyer, and his nephew, Calvin F. Moyer, purchased, at his earnest desire, the Central Courier, then published by the Rohback Bros., at Selinsgrove. That this one idea proved his sagacity no one can dispute. He was a trustee of the Mifflinburg Academy, a State institution, during the years 1844, '45 and '46; an auditor of Union county from 1847 to 1850; director of the first bank established at Lewisburg; he also served three years as one of the auditors of Snyder county; was postmaster in Freeburg under the administrations of Harrison, Taylor and Lincoln, serving thirteen years and nearly nine months. He was a member of the Reformed church, and served as trustee for the congregation for 34 years. In 1853, he was one of the building committee which erected the Freeburg Academy. He was a progressive farmer and reclaimed much land—he being the first to use ditching as an auxiliary to farming in this section. Among other things that claimed his attention, he made out nearly all the pension papers for the soldiers and widows of the war of 1812 for this and neighboring counties. But this generation will remember Mr. Moyer best through his connection with the Musical College.

In his early years Prof. Moyer commenced the study and practice of vocal music. He was of a musical family which was famous in its day—his father having served in the church at this place as chorister or "foresinger," for twenty years. In 1820, Rev. Isaac Gerhart, Reformed minister, formed a class in vocal music, when Prof. F. C. Moyer received his first real instruction in the musical art. In 1826, owing to the scarcity of music teachers, his companions prevailed upon him to become their instructor. He soon became very successful as a teacher of vocal music, and had large classes in different parts of the county. In 1834 the Lutheran and Reformed congregations selected him as their leader in singing, and it was while performing his duties in the sanctuary that he learned that good music was one of the great essentials in Divine worship, and he conceived the idea that a music school where the art could be taught on a broader basis was one of the necessities of the times. For 27 years he served the congregations faithfully, and, on retiring, he introduced his son, Prof. William Moyer, who served them up to 1882, and is the chorister of the Reformed congregation at the present time.

Luncheon Muffins.

BY MARIA PARLOA.

For one dozen muffins use one pint of flour, a generous half pint of milk, two teaspoonfuls of Cleveland's Baking Powder, half a teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of butter and two eggs. Mix the dry ingredients together and rub through a sieve. Melt the butter. Beat the eggs till light and add the milk to them. Add this mixture to the dry ingredients; then stir in the melted butter. Beat the batter vigorously for a few seconds and then put in buttered muffin pans and bake for about twenty minutes in a quick oven.—(Copyright, 1891, by Cleveland Baking Powder Co.)

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder is perfectly wholesome. It leavens most and leavens best.

Try a can.

Prof. F. C. Moyer reared up a notable musical progeny—of his own immediate family there were Mrs. S. G. Hilbish, Mrs. Sarah E. Schaeffer, Mrs. Henry Brown, Mrs. F. E. Hilbish, Prof. William, Philip B., John C., Daniel B. and Henry B. The children have always formed a musical circle around the parent tree, and have been active workers in music.

In 1870, Frederick C. Moyer erected the Musical College at Freeburg, and on the 2d of September, 1871, it was dedicated—as a "Musical College for Instruction in Vocal and Instrumental Music." Every year since its dedication and the organization of the Normal Music School spring and summer terms have been held, and at midwinter the annual musical conventions held.

One of the leading characteristics of the deceased was to caution and put young people on the right road when he saw them departing from the path of rectitude. His earnest desire to see young people prosper, and especially those with whom he came in daily contact, led them to think him a little officious, but as time proved the correctness of the ideas he tried to inculcate, they acknowledged how profitable the working out of them would have been, as many letters from distant parts of the country now testify.

THE OBSEQUIES.

The funeral took place on the Sunday following at 9.30 A.M. The remains lay in state in the auditorium of the Musical College for two hours, surrounded by appropriate floral offerings, during which time hundreds of citizens from this and neighboring towns viewed for the last time the remains of our venerable townsman.

The services in the Musical College were very impressive, and began with the chanting of "The Lord's Prayer" by the choir. Rev. Jno. A. Mertz read the funeral service in accordance with the rites of the Reformed church, followed by prayer by Rev. W. A. Haas, the choir sang, "Go to Thy Rest in Peace." The funeral cortege was formed in the Musical College, and as the bell tolled the remains were removed from the building by the pall bearers—John R. Diemer, John S. Steffen, Jacob A. Wilt, Chas. L. Gemberling, Lincoln Stuck and Geo. D. Nace, all of whom had been farmers in the employ of the late Mr. Moyer at one time—and moved to the Fairview cemetery. After consigning all that was mortal of Prof. Moyer to his mother earth, the services were continued in the Reformed and Lutheran church. The choir sang, "I'm but a Stranger Here." The discourses were preached by Revs. Haas and Mertz. The former spoke in English and German, his English sermon being based on 1st Cor. 15: 58, "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord;" and the German, Rev. 3: 8, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." The latter spoke in English, Psalm 91: 16, "With long life, will I satisfy him." The choir sang two verses of that beautiful hymn "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," after which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mertz.

The choir was led by Prof. Benj. Apple with Miss Maggie Moyer as organist.

This was one of the largest funerals ever held in Freeburg.—From Freeburg Courier.

Church News.

☞Stated Clerks of Classes and Pastors will oblige us by sending such Items of News as will be of interest to the Church.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Claysburg.—Rev. C. W. Summey. Harvest home services were held in all the congregations of the Greenfield charge, The thankofferings in the different congregations were as follows: Mt. Zion, $26.18; Mt. Hope, $24.51; Claysburg, $28.86; Greenfield, $18.59. Total $98.14. This is quite an increase over the amount offered last year, indicating that the spirit of liberality is growing.

Sellersville.—Rev. J. G. Dengler. The harvest festivals in Sellersville charge proved to be very joyous even though two days were rainy. The total amount of offerings for benevolence is $99.47. Immediately following that at Leidy's church took place the funeral of a young man of 35 years, Jacob Reiff, for which the decorated church seemed out of harmony. But not so, for the Christian sorrows not without hope, but can rejoice even in tribulation.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Lexington.—Rev. D. P. Lefever has accepted a call to the Allemance charge, N. C. His P. O. address is therefore changed from Ridgely, Md., to Burlington, N. C.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. I. Swander, D.D., has just issued a new book under title, "The Invisible World." These who have seen advance pages of it say it will rank with Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Its price is $1.50 postpaid, but those sending to the author, whose address is Fremont, O., before the first of next month, one dollar, will receive a copy postpaid.

The sympathy and prayers of the church will be with Rev. Prof. W. W. Deatrick and wife in the extreme illness of their son Eugene. It is to be hoped the worst fears in his case may not be realized, but that he may be spared to the joy of his parents and for usefulness in the world and church.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The anniversary of the Reformed Orphans' Home, Fort Wayne, Ind., will take place September 1st. All friends are cordially invited to attend.

Student Andrew H. Smith, who was spending his vacation in looking after our people in Lykens, Tower City and Johnstown, Pa., writes us further in reference to these points. He says the Lykens congregation has 75 members; Tower City, 54 members, Sunday-school, 93, and catechumens, 51; and Johnstown, 35 members, a Union Sunday-school and 10 catechumens. These points lie in Schuylkill county. The prospects are good for a pastor being soon settled over them.

Editorial Notes.

—The Fall session at "Edgehill," Littlestown, Pa., begins on Monday, the 14th of September. The school promises to be as full as it was last year. This is a "home" school for the accommodation of those who prefer a private to a large public institution for a complete Academic education.

—The several institutions of the Church will, during the next week, open their doors for the reception of students. All of these are worthy of the confidence of the Church, and they should be patronized by those who have children to educate. They indeed should be regarded as superior to any other for the young people of the Reformed Church. Attention is called to the advertisements to be found in their proper place.

—C. M. Boush, Esq., Treasurer of the Church Extension Fund, Board of Missions of General Synod, requests us to acknowledge the receipt of $600 from Somerset Classis, to be used in the purchase of a church lot for a Reformed congregation at Cumberland, Md., and also of $500 from the pastor of a Reformed congregation in Eastern Pennsylvania to be loaned at a nominal interest to missions; promising missions in larger cities preferred.

—We are glad that we are able to give our readers a picture and a full description of the new church now in course of erection for the use of St. John's congregation in Johnstown, Pa. The Church at large is interested in it, since contributions towards it have come from many of her congregations. It promises to be a handsome building, and the congregation in that ill-fated city, now being rapidly rebuilt, is to be congratulated upon the new home it will be permitted shortly to occupy through the liberality of the Church.

—Since our last issue we have learned through a private note from Rev. Prof. W. W. Deatrick, that his little son Eugene, who had been lying critically ill of typhoid erysipelas, at the home of his grandparents, Milton, Pa., the last three weeks, for a few days appeared to be convalescing, but at the date of writing the anxiety of his parents has been greatly increased by symptoms which indicate threatened inflammation of the brain. He has been largely unconscious for eighteen days. On account of the critical condition of his son, Prof. Deatrick has been unable to enter upon his work at the Keystone Normal School at Kutztown, Pa. Since the above was in type we are glad to learn that danger is past and he is now on the way to recovery. The Church with the parents will unite in thanksgiving over the favor of the Lord.

—In justice to our Publishing House it must be said that it has been unable to fill orders for the new Hymnal on account of the failure of the German Publishing House, the publishers, to fill its orders long placed there. Delay after delay has occurred in getting the books out. We know it has tried the patience of those who have been wanting to use the book, but it has not been the fault of our House. We are now in receipt of a supply and will fill orders at once. There must be a little more delay in filling orders for the Order of Worship and Word Edition, as sheets of the latter have not yet been received from the publishers, though the order for them has been in hand for some time. In due time our House expects to be in a position to meet all demands.

—Attention is called to the communication found in this issue of the MESSENGER, in reference to an organ for the College Chapel at Lancaster, Pa. It has long been the desire of the congregation worshiping statedly in the College Chapel to have a pipe organ placed there for its use. The writer of the communication will be recognized as one always ready to lend her talents in the interest of our institutions at Lancaster, and every friend of them will second her wishes that the students appointed to solicit funds for the organ during their vacation may have met with liberal responses, and that the balance of the amount needed will be raised and the organ soon be in place. We know contributions from such as have not been called upon will be gladly received by those having the matter in hand. This will be another way to help forward the institutions at Lancaster. Could not some one, however, put it there as a memorial to a loved one?

—We are very much pleased to learn of the rapid convalescence of Rev. C. J. Musser, who, shortly after becoming pastor of St. Mark's church, East End, Pittsburgh, was compelled to relinquish his labors on account of a severe attack of la grippe, which was followed by a relapse. Fearing that the progress of St. Mark's church might be retarded during the period of his sickness and convalescence, Rev. Musser resigned his pastorate in order that the unimpaired energies of another might be enlisted in behalf of the new and promising interest. A two months' rest at Atlantic City, we are gratified to learn, has restored to Rev. Musser the vigor of health, and it is expected that in the near future he will be ready to take up the work of the ministry with renewed energy. With many others we join in congratulating him upon his speedy recovery, and pray that his life and valuable services may be spared for many years to the Church to whose every interest he is so zealously devoted.

—The time is approaching for the observance of Children's Day by the congregations preferring to do so in the fall of the year, the first and second Sundays in September having been designated by the General Synod. Those who have not yet procured a service to be used upon that occasion should send for a suitable one without delay so that the children may be able to prepare for it. And it must be remembered that the alms gathered that day are to be devoted to educational purposes. The aim should be to make on this day liberal offerings to the Lord and His work. Were the children of the Church made to see the importance of the purpose to which their offerings are to be devoted there would be a large inflow from them into the treasury of the Church, sufficient to support a number of young men during their preparation for the holy ministry. Let then Children's Day be a day that will be fruitful of good things in more ways than one, and long to be remembered by all observing it.

—Evidently the Church needs more ministers? The demand for pastors is increasing and the supply is not equal to the demand. New points that are promising, in consequence have to be neglected, and old and well established congregations have to suffer and perhaps die out for the want of some one to take charge of them. This demand can only be met by encouraging pious and intelligent young men to give themselves up to the service of their Lord and Master, and if unable to meet the expenses of their necessary preparation for the work, to provide the same either by private contributions or through the proper Boards of the Church. To enable these Boards of Education to do so the Church should see to it that funds sufficient be in their treasuries. The Church owes it to herself, her growth and her prosperity, to make this one of her chief objects of interest.

—In keeping with the above, it may be said that the applications for and from worthy young men are numerous, and a number have to be very reluctantly declined by the Boards of Education, simply on the ground that they have not the monies to appropriate for their support whilst passing through the institutions of the Church. The greater part of those whose applications have been granted were done so simply on faith, the Boards believing that the Church will in some way provide them with funds to make good their promises. The writer speaks knowingly of the Board of which he is treasurer, that of the Eastern Synod. It stands in need of funds beyond its regular receipts to meet the appropriations for the year now opening. It is to be hoped that the benevolent of the Church will send contributions to its treasury so that it may not be embarrassed. There is many a one that could well afford to contribute a sufficient amount each year to support a student and thus do a good work for the Church which will bring great returns in the future both to the donor and the Church. Are there not some who would do this, who could give of their abundance $150 a year to support a young man at least through his course in the Theological Seminary, which is three years? We know there are, and it only needs their resolution to do it, to find them doing so. Let such make it a matter of prayer and consideration, and communicate with the treasurer without delay, as has already been stated, funds are needed.

Poetry.

"GOD SO NIGH."

Deut. iv: 7.

O Lord, how fair Thy mercies shine!
Not they who see Thy face on high
Possess a truer bliss than mine:
My sin forgiven, and "God so nigh."

So night that nought can come between
Thyself and faith's uplifted eye;
And ever, as Thy form is seen,
My heart sings softly, "God so nigh."

To move me from my confidence
In vain the powers of darkness try;
Thine outspread wings in my defence,
And I am safe with "God so nigh."

And if at night my slumber seems
Shut out from Thine all-seeing eye,
The morning breaks, and from my dreams
I wake to find my "God so nigh."

Thy presence cheers me while I tread
The path of life; and, when I die,
The softest pillow for my head
Shall be Thy promise, "God so nigh."

And when, from sin and death set free,
I rise to take my place on high,
The dearest joy of heaven will be
To have forever, "God so nigh."

—E. A. Tydeman.

ON THE WING.

"Wann Jemand eine Reise thut,
So kann er was erzaehlen."

So says our old friend the Wandsbecker Bote. It is an old saying as things ordinarily get old; but it is young considering the age which the vitality of the truth it enshrines is likely to give it. Traveling gives one the power to tell something. It also gives one the power to tell something which no one else will tell, or which if he does tell he will not say in just the same way. No two flowers are just alike in all their parts and characteristics; nor are any two people just like each other. There is always some difference. So no two persons render the same account of what they see or meet. An old German proverb, freely translated, says, "Every bird sings the way its own bill is grown." The bird may well stand for ourselves, for we all sing our story the way it came to us, and not the way it came to another.

It seems to us that not every one can travel and enjoy himself; nor can the same person travel and enjoy himself equally well at all times. The psychological condition of the individual has much to do with the matter of interest and enjoyment. Travel furnishes a strong test of one's make up, disposition, and moods. Fresh or tired, there is a certain abandon, an openness of soul, needed. If one goes all shut up within one's self like a clam, little good can come of it. "Set thine house in order" at home, and then go believing that thou canst see something with open eyes, and get manifold good with a receptive disposition of soul. There are many inconveniences and much crookedness to be fused, some from people's stupidity, some from organized, mercenary cunning. There are things in the nature of switches to throw you off from the straight course of the enjoyment and recreation you seek. Over against them you must firmly hold on to your self-possession, and equanimity. There are more things to interest than to annoy, more to benefit than to harm.

It is astonishing how many people are traveling during this season of the year. Wherever you go, you will find people on the wing as it were. Trains are numerous, long and full. Boats are loaded; street-cars crowded. People go everywhere, and everybody seems to go. Humanity in motion like a bee-hive stirred up. And what a variety of figure, dress and manner this restless mass of humanity presents! It is quite a study. We know few things more interesting than to observe it, as it rolls along with its endlessly varied aims, tastes, habits. It is a kaleidoscope of intensest fascination. We never weary of looking at it and thinking about it. Its nobility, its vanity, its meanness, they all stand out in fairly prominent relief. And then, these people are our brothers, our sisters; they may also catalogue us as we catalogue them, and, for the moment, we wonder how we stand.

One thing, that specially interests us, is the country through which we pass. We do not mean here the places of advertised note. Rather we refer to the country generally which comes within our view as we are carried along. There is great natural variety in it, if we only choose to look and think. There is the natural change of mountain, hill, valley, plain. There are the lakes, rivers, creeks. Not less interesting the variety of soil and of vegetation. Then comes the hand which man has laid on all this scene. Much to be wondered at; sometimes because of the beauty which man has added and the fertility which he has imparted; sometimes because of the loveliness which he has wrought. When we reflect that in many parts of the world civilization is from two to four thousand years old, and that whenever we travel, for example, in the eastern or Atlantic section of the United States it is only from one to two hundred years old, one marvels at the majesty and power of man, who has transformed the original wild scenes of nature and controlled both its latent and open forces so as to present the wonderful panorama we behold in a space of time so limited. It seems like magic.

But we must not forget that we are traveling, and that scenes constantly shift. So then, let us say we are at Alexandria Bay, in the month of August, when the season is at its best, in so far as the great mass of visitors is concerned. We approach it from Cape Vincent, the point where Lake Ontario narrows, and forms the St. Lawrence River, one of the not more than twenty really great rivers of the world. It is near sunset. There gently flows that river of rivers, as from that point for fifty miles downward it may well be called; an apparently limitless stream of water, deep and mighty, with one and a half thousand of islands, like gems set in its bosom. It is a matchless sight. It is all that whether man ever put his hand to it or not. The conditions are set and the scene is painted by the great Creator. One morning our party took the steamer at Clayton (the place to which, or via which, as the case may be, it is best to buy one's ticket) for a fifty miles trip among the islands. The large steamer was fairly full, as usual. Its course was to every point of the compass among the islands, with an interpreter on board to explain whatsoever has special interest attaching to it. During that long ride of more than three hours we heard but one sentiment and that was one of exulting admiration, and faces that had appeared tired in the morning lighted up joyously under the spell of the surroundings.

What lovely homes rich people have on those islands! When the island is small one man owns the whole of it and builds his summer residence on it. If the island is large enough, two or more persons own it and have their cottages on it. Odd designs, beautiful conceptions, much outlay. The ordinarily ruthless hand of man has not wrought destruction here; rather it has been guided to save what was lavishly at hand, and to add to the existing beauty where that has been found possible. Though a large population lives during the season on these islands, almost every family has a large body of water flowing between its home and that of its neighbor. Provisions are obtained from the mainland by private ferry boat we were told.

Alexandria Bay and the islands lighted up in the evening! Who that has ever seen that sight from island, shore or flashlight steamer, needs to have it recalled to himself again? It is an ever present panorama. Poor Aladdin, the pictures thy magic lamp revealed, dim in the presence of the gorgeous visible splendor here spread out. It was our good fortune to see it at the best, the cottages still inhabited by their owners, and the hotels full with guests. And then it was a Saturday evening, when every one put his best foot forward. Thick as the stars in the blue vault of the heavens above appear to be the artificial lights set ablaze along the banks of the blue stream and all over its visible surface. Ever so many colors; ever so many designs, many of them significant and very beautiful.

THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION.

Reply to A. D. P., in "The Lutheran" of May 14th.

The Augsburg Confession is spoken of as a Lutheran Confession, but strictly speaking is not to be regarded as the exponent of Lutheranism merely, as if that phase of Protestantism alone had been in conflict with heresies and errors, but rather is a statement of the faith of the Protestant Christian Church as then existing. It is not the Confession of a sect or party. The "unrest" existing prior to the XVIth century became more defined as the truth was pressing to the surface and in order to quiet and to settle this "unrest," the German Emperor, Charles V. commanded the princes (those who sided with the reformers,) to present at the Diet of Augsburg "an explicit statement of their faith, that the religious controversy might be settled and Catholics and Protestants be united in a war against the common enemy, the Turks." (Dr. Schaff's Creeds, etc.) This explicit statement was prepared by Melancthon, and on the 25th of June, 1530, was read in the presence of the Emperor and others assembled, as representatives of the Church. Because of the place it is known as the Augsburg Confession. It is not to be regarded as a Lutheran Confession or document, but is "the key note to other evangelical confessions and strengthens the cause of the Reformation everywhere. It is to a certain extent also the confession of the Reformed and other so-called union Churches in Germany, namely, with the explanations and modifications of the author himself, in the edition of 1540, which extended, as it were, the hand of fellowship to them." (Creeds of Christendom, p. 235.) Luther was not present at this Diet, but after revising the Confession at Coburg, expressed "himself satisfied that his friend was better adapted for the task, as well as his entire satisfaction with the execution."

In this early stage of the Reformation there existed a difference of opinion on some doctrines, chief among which was that of the Lord's Supper. "The Xth Article of the Confession plainly asserts the doctrine of a real bodily presence and distribution of Christ in the Eucharist to all communicants (without determining the mode of the presence either by way of consubstantiation or transubstantiation.) The papistical confutation, while objecting to the articles de utraque specie and de missa, in the second part of the Augsburg Confession was satisfied with Article X. of the first part, provided only that it be understood as teaching the presence of the whole Christ under the bread as well as the wine." (P. 232, note.)

This Confession was signed, and delivered, by seven German princes and the deputies of two free cities (Nuremberg and Reutlingen); it was however, by no means satisfactory to all, especially Article X. on the Lord's Supper. Among these was Philip of Hesse, though he had signed, yet he openly sympathized with Zwingli, "and he had to be specially urged by Luther to subscribe the Confession which he did, with a dissent from the Xth Article. The majority of the citizens of Augsburg, likewise, adhered to Zwingli at that time." Anyone can see that great difficulty presented itself which became the source of great trouble afterwards. As seen, above, the Xth Article of the edition of 1530, was not objected to by the papists, but was unacceptable to a large portion of the Protestants; and now, in order to mollify and give peace and restore harmony, Melancthon modified that same article so as to read, "Concerning the Lord's Supper, they teach that with the bread and wine are truly exhibited the body and blood of Christ to those that eat in the Lord's Supper," instead of "concerning the Lord's Supper, they teach that the body and blood of Christ are truly present, and are distributed (communicated) to those that eat in the Lord's Supper, and they disapprove of those that teach otherwise." The first edition of 1530, contains this last statement, that of 1540 the former, That of 1530 is known as the Invariata and that of 1540, the Variata. In the sense, as now expressed in the Variata, it was signed, "in this qualified sense, either expressed or understood, by Reformed divines and princes, even by John Calvin, (A. D. P., will understand, in this qualified sense,) while ministering to the Church at Strasburg, and as delegate to the Conference of Ratisbon 1541; by Farel and Beza, at the Conference in Worms, 1557; by the Calvinists at Bremen, 1562; by Frederick III, (the Reformed,) elector of the Palatinate, at the Convent of Princes in Naumberg, 1561, and the Diet of Augsburg, 1566; by John Sigismund of Brandenburg, 1614," (Creeds, etc, p. 235.) WORSHIP IN SCOTLAND.

The following paragraph is from The Independent, New York, June 18th inst:

"At the recent meeting of the Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland, a report was submitted on the conduct of the public worship and the sacraments. Among the recommendations were these; that the order of sequence should be indicated for public worship by the Assembly; that the use of the Lord's Prayer at every service should be enjoined; that a table should be prepared of readings, and blessings, embracing every day in the year, for public worship; that sitting at prayer be disapproved of; that baptisms, except in occasional cases, be public; that a burial service be sanctioned for use at the house and at the grave, and that an optional liturgy be prepared for public worship and the sacraments. On motion, the report was recommitted in order that these proposals might be more carefully considered, and that the committee might frame an order of public worship and the sacraments. In connection with this case an appeal by two elders of the Polmont Parish church was considered, charging the minister with introducing forms of the Episcopal service. The Assembly appointed a committee of investigation."

It is well known that there has been a growing interest in the Presbyterian Church of Scotland and of England in the direction of moderate liturgical worship. Indeed their worship has all along represented the calm and conservative side of the, so-called, free worship. These Presbyterians are decidedly averse to the purely extempore effusions in prayer in the Lord's Day services, and in the prayer-meeting. They favor "beaten oil" for the service of prayer, as well as for the sermon. Many of their ministers and people have long felt that forms of prayer are unto edification, and that the best forms to be had are to be sought after and used rather than such forms as the minister may be able to compose during the service.

We observe the same tendency in this country among Presbyterians. There is no doubt that the loose unpremeditated prayers so often heard from the lips of the minister and layman are calculated to stir up thought upon the subject, and to arouse criticism on the part of the worshipers. If there is any part of a public service that ought to be fairly above criticism it is the prayers. If they be loose, disjointed, lean in thought, and lame, ungrammatical, and blundering in the use of language, the minds of the worshipers are sure to be disturbed and turned aside from love to God and sympathy towards man, to the minister and to his unsuitable prayers.

It is a good sign when the Christian Church or any of its branches, seeks to be helpful in largest degree in the worship of God by the careful study of its services with a view to make its prayers the channels of devotion as largely as possible. The good work will go on. V.

FOR SUMMER READING.—IV.

The use of the Bible in an irreverent and superstitious way is very common. In a playful way it is sometimes used at Hallow-e'en parties to determine the name of a future husband or wife. In a more serious way it is used to determine questions of expediency or duty, but by a method which is superstitious rather than reverent and trustful. I knew an intelligent man to determine the question of his union with the Church, by opening the Bible at random and using the verse upon which his finger rested, as a special revelation to him. In this case the verse confirmed his partly-formed determination to join the Church. But suppose his finger had fallen upon, "Refrain from these men and let them alone," might he not have taken it as a special revelation for him to have no fellowship with Christians?

Higher criticism overthrows all such false use of the Bible. To the critical student the Bible never ceases to be a mystery. It is the Book of books, speaking with the voice of authority and love. But it ceases to be magical. It is the destroyer of the magical. As the immense pile of divining manuscripts and books of sorcery were burned in Ephesus because the truth of Scripture had penetrated the hearts and consciences of their owners, so does higher criticism burn at the stake of human reason the superstitious vagaries and fancies prevalent with regard to the Holy Bible.

A man once asked, in a book-store in which I was employed, if we kept fancy books. On my showing him some illuminated and handsomely bound volumes, the would-be customer said, "No!" I want fancy books," and at last, to make himself understood, said, "Real devilish books." Fortunately, we needed no Anthony Comstock to purge our shelves. But the term, devilish books, might just as well apply to a book of sorcery which we afterwards sold, without, however, knowing its character. This was a book of sorcery, foolish as a ten-cent dream book to those who are intelligent, but believed to be a storehouse of wisdom by the purchaser. For the book itself he paid, I think, five dollars, and he said he would pay the same sum to have certain Hebrew portions translated. His superstition was strong and was proven by his works. The work was called "The Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses." When it was ordered, I thought it was a joke set up by one of the students or some other friend, and told the customer there are only five books of Moses. "That is a question," said he. "You order for me what I want." In the formularies portions of Scripture and the sacred names of the Deity were freely used.

There are those who not only believe that the Bible can be used in this way, but that it is right to do it, provided the end to be gained is a good one, from the cure of sweeny in a horse to the stopping of a flow of blood from man.

I was once informed that a Mr. Price, living in the country, had a flow of blood from the nose and was dying. When I reached his house I found him sitting on the side of his bed and cured. To my inquiries he answered that he was dying, as he thought, that every effort had been used to stop the flow without success, but that he had no fear of his being fully cured. To my inquiry as to how it was stopped he answered, "I do not know. Moses stopped it. He came in and looked at me, asked me how long I had been bleeding, said 'So! so!' and without another word walked out, and I knew he would cure me. In a short while the bleeding stopped and he stopped it." The simple, earnest way in which this was told me was very impressive. The words of the Bible came to my mind. "At the seventh hour the fever left him." I could learn nothing further from Price, but from others I learned that Moses walked directly home, likely speaking to no one by the way, went to his room, opened his Bible at a certain chapter and verse, repeated the words slowly and solemnly, and the bleeding stopped. Because it had run its course, you will say. So I said, but not to Mr. Price. Grateful for his cure it would have seemed to him like mockery to have at that time assigned it to such a cause. I simply told him to give thanks to God, but did not say, as for this man he is a sinner.

Now, who was Moses? Mr. Moses was a Lutheran, respected by every one and worthy of all the respect he received. He exhibited the gentle and peaceable graces of the Gospel in a remarkable degree, which was all the more marked, because he lived in a neighborhood where a number of persons were quarrelsome, and some openly lawless. His faith in the Divine Providence was childlike in its simplicity, manly in its strength and endurance. He was most faithful in his attention to his public and private duties as a Christian, and was a striking example of a man who knew in all things how to be content, and with the possession of contentment enjoyed that of godliness. And yet this man used the Word of God as a fetich! No power could convince me that he did so in an irreverent spirit. He was taught by some one of the other sex the formula, which, I suppose, he felt in duty bound to give to some one of the opposite sex before he died.

I have no doubt that he prayed when he used it, for I cannot conceive of his using it in any other way. He was as far above the modern Christian scientists in reverence, as they are above him in intelligence. When he used the Book he believed it was given for that purpose, and the fact of his silence and that of his friend as to the cure, showed to me that they both believed the power was not of himself save "as it was given to him." To a man of such beautiful simplicity, and yet of such correct life, it seemed a pity to overthrow a misguided trust which apparently enabled him to remove mountains, and I suppose he continued to his death a firm believer in his call to stop bleeding.

Higher criticism overthrows all such use of the Bible, until higher criticism itself passes the bounds of reverence and faith, when it will fall into a superstition at once sensual and devilish. For intelligence is not the cure of superstition. Faith alone can cast out the devil.

We do not attempt to explain such real or apparent cure as the one given. When a boy, and the imagination was strong, warts could be removed from the hands. But these childish things had to be put aside when reason developed, except in the way of experiment on others who in such matters are children.

This manner of regarding the Bible is akin to a peculiar faith in Divine Providence which leads some persons to attribute every change in their life to a direct interference on the part of God. It is amazing to hear some men declare the ways of Him whose ways are past finding out, in every little thing which occurs in life. We may well say of our lives that they are more precious in God's sight than the meat which sustains them, as our bodies are more precious to us than that which clothes them. The longer we live the more does the solemn and, to the Christian, the comforting truth impress itself upon us, that all creatures are so in His hand that without His will they cannot so much as move. But the more also are we led to feel "Who can declare the mind of the Lord?" If all could be seen where would be the room for faith?

Science applied to the Bible leads us to say without irreverence, that imperfect sewerage, intemperate eating and drinking with many other causes are the sources of sickness and death, over and beyond which we may say with reverent faith is the permissive Providence of God. It is said that after Ben. Butler left New Orleans he left behind him such a system of health government as saved the city for years untold suffering from the diseases to which it had been formerly subject. Slow as those people would be to accept him as a blessing, it is nevertheless true that his practical New England common sense directed by a scientific education and experience, made him the blessing of Providence to the city.

Beautifully expressed in the Heidelberg Catechism is the comfort to be derived from faith in the Providence of God. That I may be thankful in prosperity, patient in adversity and confident as to the uncertain future. (See the full answer.) Here science and faith can meet in beautiful harmony. So can they also in the true answer as the meaning and intent of the Bible which is the Word of God able to make us wise unto salvation.

TO CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

"But evil men shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3 : 13.

The History of the False Teacher.

BY DR. RICHARD ROTHE.

"Ohne Zweifel der Gedankenreichste Theology der Neuzeit."

I.—His Start.

St. Paul designates them as being in the start "evil men and seducers. But will we not be too harsh if we thus stigmatize all false teachers? Certainly. But those whom the Apostle here has in mind, and in general all who may properly be called false teachers, deserve precisely these epithets.

Who are the errorists of whom he here speaks? In general, those men who preached the Gospel and accommodated it to the prevailing opinions, among Jews and Gentiles, that is, according thereto, perverted it in order to secure for it easier and more general acceptance. False teachers like these continue up to the present time; and only these have we in view. False doctrine is still, in the nature of the case, a beclouding and weakening in-mixing of prevailing opinions into Christianity which are foreign to its character. For the most part they are adopted because the majority hold them. This is so convenient and so advantageous, because people like to hear them.

"Evil men." And is it not moral baseness on the part of a man when he allows himself to resort to the ministry with a selfish end in view?—to make an office, where the salvation of the souls of an entire congregation is at stake, the means for the accomplishment of his own personal, common and egotistical purposes? For if a preacher does not take that to be the intent of his office, namely, the salvation of souls, he must be spitting on himself with contempt while in his gown. What kind of a man must that be who can act in this way, when the facts are before his mind? Many a one does it, who is otherwise good-natured and harmless enough. And sometimes we find them preaching a very pure and evangelical theology. But even in this case must we employ the same predicate, that namely of moral baseness (Sschlechtigkeit).

"Seducers." (Gankler—humbugs). Ja wohl! For they want to make people believe what they don't believe themselves. How many are there who promise salvation to men from that in which they themselves do not seek it, to say nothing of finding it. He makes use of deceptive arts. He substitutes ornaments of style and an ear-tickling declamation for the power of the Word and the Spirit of God. Do not those who practice deceptive æsthetic arts (trugerische Kunste) deserve to be called seducers?

II.—Whither Tends His Way?

"They come forward." Certainly; if in any way gifted, they get on in the world. The world will be fooled; for it will not give up its old will and ways, nor will it give up Christianity; it wants a combination of its own worldliness and the religion of the Gospel.

But of a truth is this forward-coming a progress in the wrong direction (zum imma Schlimmern). This holds for the false teachers themselves no less than for their people and for Christianity in general. Experience confirms this last fact only too palpably. The Gospel is the salt of the earth; and if it has lost its savor, how is the decaying body to be preserved from corruption?

"They deceive." Shocking thought! But they say, "Are you sure? We preach to the people what they want to hear. They know, perhaps, as well what they need as any one else. Who can say that their judgment is incorrect?" There is but one saving remedy for sin-sick men, and that is the pure Gospel of Christ. How now if this is withheld from your people, and instead of it, you furnish them with a nourishment which, whilst it of course seems innocent enough, nevertheless is the cause of their spiritual death, because it has not the virtue by which is counteracted the deadly malady which is gnawing at their vitals! But apart from this;—false teachers deceive their people in allowing them to remain in their carnal security. With what consequences this security may be attended need not be told, but alas! too greatly to be feared; those who are partially awakened they allow sleepily to fall back again into their wonted security, instead of doing the full duty of the minister of Christ, that namely of prevailing upon them to carry out the injunction of the Apostle, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

"And are deceived." A just punishment! Yes, these false teachers hurried along by the stream into which they had cast themselves, are gradually brought to a point, which in the beginning they did not expect to reach. At first they never thought of carrying on a work of deception,—they were unconscious deceivers. But they could continue no longer in this senselessness; they became aware of the part they were playing, and now they find themselves doing consciously, what they formerly did unconsciously. In the beginning they thought they could proclaim Christianity with their lips whilst their hearts were far from it, without thereby doing violence to their conscience. But soon they had to learn that the Word of God is a sharp two-edged sword. They soon were compelled to feel its condemning power, and could continue the course they had begun only in that they hardened themselves against its voice. This involves falling into deeper and deeper moral and religious obduracy. What was once senselessness becomes now stony-heartedness. Making concessions to the world they are hurried along ever farther in the course of worldly-mindedness. The world, by the way, takes great delight in seeing ministers of the Gospel disgracing themselves before its eyes. It draws them more and more to itself; whilst they continue to yield until they are hurled into the abyss of sin, and at last is heard from it the loud and public laugh of contempt.

Such may be the end of a course whose beginning may not have appeared just so bad; but in which was wanting a genuine and thoughtful (wahr und ernste) interest in the truth and saving power of our divine and holy religion.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

WELCOME ADDRESS.*

Welcome again to our Festival day!
With joyful acclaim we our gladness convey.
Gathered together from far and from near,
We welcome you all to our mountain home dear.

The weeks and the months as they've taken their flight,
Have brought us again the unmeasured delight,
Of greeting dear friends with a hearty accord,
In this place set aside for the use of the Lord.

Full well do we know the command that was given,
Before His ascension from Earth into Heaven,
When turning to Peter, the dear Master said,
See thou well to it that the lambs be fed.

This beautiful home, the child of your prayers,
To which you have given your gifts and your cares,
Is one of the instruments used by the Lord
To do His sweet will in a world of discord.

To day you are here, your work to review,
Which you have entrusted your servants to do,
May that which you hear and that which you see
Inspire you anew His disciples to be.

In festal attire we greet you to-day;
Not thus do we look when at work or at play.
We confess we've taken some pains to appear
In extra apparel, as visitors wear.

When over this mountain with pleasure we roam,
Or our daily tasks perform at the Home,
Our clothes look different—sometimes old and torn,
As by boys and girls on a farm are worn.

During the year that has now passed away,
Our time was divided between work and play;
Attention to duties, at work and at school,
Are daily taught us and made our rule.

Many things we enjoy, much good you do hear,
Carrying on this work from year unto year,
For countless blessings, so freely given,
We thank you, kind friends, and our Father in Heaven.

Now to-day, this house, spring, mountain and air,
Are all yours and ours, together to share,
Welcome to one and to all, then, we say,
And may the Lord's blessing attend us to-day!

* Delivered by one of the orphan girls on the 28th Anniversary, August 27, 1891.

The Religious Press.

Bishop Foss, in the Christian Advocate, says of the Methodist Church :—"Our Church is in urgent need of an increase in the number of able preachers. The number of larger and important churches have increased more rapidly than the number of preachers well qualified to fill them. Among our fourteen thousand churches not a few every year are found, when changes of pastors occur, to present opportunities for great and successful work such as ought to be undertaken only by men of proved and commanding power ; and the results sometimes show such opportunities to have been wasted for lack of such men. I would not knowingly disparage our ministry. Within thirty years its average has risen and is steadily rising in intellectual equipment, and the number of preachers of high ability has correspondingly increased ; but the demand has outrun the supply."

There is a tendency in our day to undervalue the miracles. But whether they are appreciated or not, whether they are wanted or not, they are among the historic facts. They cannot be collected and buried. They cannot be ignored. That Jesus did these wondrous works cannot be denied. The evidence is trustworthy. Many saw Him when He manifested forth His glory. These credentials were of great interest and importance then. They are to many still. Eliminate all the supernatural that is possible, find rational explanation for much that is mysterious, and the miracles will yet remain to attest the power of Christ, and point to His greater spiritual energy. They declare that He was unlike others, that He was superior to others. When the winds and the waves obeyed Him, when sickness fled at His command and death gave back its victim, men listened to His spiritual teachings with awe, and felt that He had a right to say : "Thy sins are forgiven thee." It would be a pleasure to the skeptic if He could put discredit upon all these miracles of Christ, but they are inseparable from His life, and while it seems to us that if they were not there we should believe and trust the Lord just the same because of what He was and what He did, yet they are there and may be allowed to bring all their encouragement and evidence to us. It was natural that one like Christ should work miracles. Their absence would stir wonder and awaken questions.—Rev. Samuel H. Virgin, in New York Observer.

A REMARKABLE MARRIAGE.

A man in Lebanon, Ind., prominent in business, is married to a totally blind woman, who was blind when he married her. He was younger then by ten years than he is now, but he was prosperous, ambitious, and successful. She has never seen the sunlight. She was as handsome as Nydia, and as poor. He married her, and they have lived together in a peace that passes understanding ever since. They have two bright children, healthy and perfect ; a good home, a thriving business, a little fortune they have earned themselves, and a public regard that has no limit. She would give one-half of life just to see her husband and children. It would touch your heart to see how gentle he is with her, how tenderly they lead her here and there. In this age, when marriage means so little, when scarcely a thought is given to the only thing worth thinking of—the love that levels and exalts—when a husband true and a wife content are such exceptions, is it a wonder I bared my head in that presence? How noble a man he must be ! What loyalty must possess her soul ! No life can be commonplace with a love like that.—Lutheran Evangelist.

THE ART OF REPROOF.

Too many people, when they reprove others for their faults, do so in such a rough, unworkmanlike way, that they are positively cruel, and leave their subjects in a far worse condition than they found them. Such reprovers fancy they are doing their duty in fine shape, and in a very thorough manner, when they proceed, with cudgel in hand, to strike telling blows on the luckless head of some one who has deviated from their orthodox way of believing and doing. They are great sticklers for frankness, and think that they find a model of frankness in Nathan's reproof of David when he said : "Thou art the man !" But they don't stop to notice the beautiful and blessed art which Nathan used in approaching the point of saying those frank words. The prophet told a little parabolic story to David, in which he displayed a splendid art, before he said, "Thou art the man." And let us not suppose that Nathan put a trip-hammer emphasis upon that sentence when he uttered it, as though he would knock poor David flat on the ground by it. Yet there are those who, when quoting that sentence, put a grim vim in it, as they would, had they been in Nathan's place, have felled David into insensibility. The serious difficulty with such ones is, they do not understand the divine art of reproof. It is said that the late Thomas Sherwin, formerly master of Boston's English High School, had a very happy manner of administering reproof. On a certain day, when one of his pupils had told a falsehood, he called him to the platform and began a soliloquy on the beauty and nobility of truth. So impressively was it spoken that the boy became very red in the face, and then burst into tears. No harsh word was spoken, and the boy was permitted to take his seat ; but he was never known to indulge in falsehood again. This is an apt example of the art of reproof.—Interior.

Selected.

FASHIONING CHARACTER.

There is no former and fashioner of character like to the Lord Jesus. There is no mold of beauty and excellence into which the spirit of a man can flow comparable to the mind which was in Christ Jesus. There is no school for the education of man in patience, in truth, in boldness, and in all virtues like unto His disciple band. There is no predominating influence which will make men true and wise and spiritual and faithful like the influence of fellowship with Christ. There is no formative period in which men may be enriched with nobleness and grace of character like hours spent in His presence ; those bear the bloom and in time the fruit of Christ-likeness of whom it can be said, "They are wont to be with Jesus." "Strength and beauty are in His sanctuary."

Fellowship with Christ is the power that makes men Christ-like. Yet this is not a grace to give to some but denied to others, as a sculptor is limited by the shape and veining of the block on which he is working. These two men, St. Peter and St. John, with so much that was different and even opposite in their natures, are yet found bearing the unmistakable lineaments of the Master. In spite of their opposing tendencies, fellowship with Christ has bestowed on each a likeness to Christ. As in the mint, each coin, whether of gold or of silver, bears the king's "image and superscription," so may each soul bear the image and superscription of the eternal King. As the artist leaves the impress of his personality upon all his handiwork, whether it be wrought in plastic clay or hard, unyielding marble, so upon each nature does the divine Artificer, the great molder and former of character, leave His mark and signature, the likeness of Himself.—Sunday at Home.

"STRENGTHEN THY BRETHREN."

We are living either to weaken or depress our fellow-believers, or to hold up their hands, deepen their faith, and inspire them with new courage. We may prove a hindrance to some by a mournful appearance, which in no wise recommends the service of the Master whom we love ; we may also be the means of weakening the Christian life of others by a thoughtless jest on Scriptural matters—a careless play upon words that to the listener convey such sacred associations. We have heard of a wit, who, when dying, found no comfort in the texts repeated to him, because he had at some time or other turned all such into jokes, and Christian people must set their faces against this thoughtless habit of bringing into amusing conversation the Bible words with which we should be familiar, but with a spirit of loving reverence. Those who have the courage to speak out and stop such joking, though encouraged by laughter, can not fail to impress for good, and will insure the witness of their own conscience that they have acted aright. And let us beware lest we sometimes spoil the effect of a sermon on the minds of others by our own critical spirit. Two gentlemen were once leaving a place of worship, showing all the weak points in the discourse, when one less gifted but in a more earnest frame of mind, quietly told how he had been affected by a certain portion of the sermon : "The one part worth hearing," said one of the gentlemen, "but his naming that part taught me a lesson, and made me repent my criticism." Let us be on our guard against quenching the spiritual yearnings and enfeebling the strength of those around us. The Master bids "Comfort ye my people," and each one of His followers should pray and strive for more of His spirit of understanding and sympathy.—Quiver.

BROODING.

What is called in common parlance "brooding" is a very unwholesome occupation of the mind, and leads to most unhappy consequences. If one should stand for a continuous period on one foot, he would after a time grow one-sided. Readers of Ben Hur will remember that Ben Hur secured the privilege of rowing first on one side of the galley and then on the other, that he might not lose the perfect symmetry of his physical development. We need to use all the faculties of our minds in tune to keep ourselves in poise, and not to lose the use of any faculty. Brooding on one subject breeds melancholy, and melancholy frequently results in insanity.

Diversion should be secured for those predisposed to brooding, and if the "patient can minister to himself therein," so much the better for him. Cheerful and various occupation is one of the best dissipators of sad thoughts. Those who have to scramble for a living are generally quite free from tendencies to melancholy ; they haven't time to become the victors of morbid musing. Of all the ways of breaking up a fit of brood ng, the very best is to interest one's self in making some wretched one happy. The reflection of bright faces, whose brightness is the result of one's own deeds, gives a joy and a peace that doubtless are a part of the felicity of heaven.

There are always shadows, darkness, death, arctic frost, sickness, pain, disappointment, adversity, but there are always sunshine, life, heat, health, joy, fruition, and all these are found in every life. If we resolutely turn our faces to the sun, stretch out our hands toward the warmth, rejoice in the good things of life, accept the discipline of what we call evil and turn it into the nutriment of virtue, we may learn to rejoice even in tribulation.

These paragraphs are suggested by the faith of a young woman who brooded over the ills of her lot until now she is a pauper lunatic.—Christian Advocate.

The Family.

THE OUTLOOK OF FAITH.

BY MARGARET B. PIATT.

"He is faithful that promised."—Heb. 10: 23.

Like a great rock's cooling shadow
In a strange and dreary land,
Unto a weary wanderer,
As he treads the desert sand,
Even as that grateful shadow
Cheereth the traveler's soul
Like a heavenly bow of promise,
As he presseth to the goal,

So doth my Father's message
Seem to my panting soul.
As I travel in life's pathway,
Bound for a heavenly goal;
So doth His words of promise
Cheer me upon the way,
As I grope in these fitful shadows
To reach eternal day.

"I will go before and lead thee,"
"The Lord is thy sun and shield;"
"He will give thee grace and glory,"
"Thou the Spirit's sword shalt wield."
"I will strengthen, I will help thee,"
"I will wipe away all tears,"
"As thy days, so shall thy strength be,"
"Thou shalt rest from all thy fears."

"I will ne'er forsake nor leave thee,"
"Fear thou not, nor be dismayed,"
"E'en though all the hosts of darkness
'Gainst thy soul shall stand arrayed,"
"They that strive with thee shall perish,"
"They shall be ashamed and fear."
"Ere thou callest I will answer,"
"While thou speakest I will hear."

I know that His love is steadfast,
And His promises are sure,
They shall rest in the golden city
Who unto the end endure.
When death's dark night has faded
In the dawn of an endless day,
They shall wake in the home of the Father
Who were faithful on the way.

INHUMANITY.

Farmer Snowden, well fed and ruddy, stood at his door one morning, as Holt, his nearest neighbor, passed down the road. Holt drove a mule so thin and gaunt that its bones almost pierced the skin. The wretched animal staggered under the weight of several bags of grain.

"Isn't Jack overloaded a trifle?" Snowden called.

"No," said Holt. "He's used to it. He likes it."

"That beats me," said Snowden, indignantly, to his wife. "How any Christian man can work a brute to death I can't understand! Is my basket ready, mother?"

Mrs. Snowden hastily finished packing the basket of sandwiches and pie for the luncheon in the field, and gave it to her husband, who followed his hay-makers down the road.

The kitchen was in disorder. It was scarcely day, but Mrs. Snowden had already cooked breakfast for three hungry men. The dishes must be washed, a dozen pies made, the ironing done, and the house set in order.

She began to work, but stopped presently to prepare a delicate breakfast, and arrange it prettily upon a table in the parlor. Her daughter, a victim of some nervous ailment, came down, and languidly tasted it.

"I have no appetite," she moaned. "I think perhaps I could eat a bit of broiled chicken."

Mrs. Snowden hurried to make ready the new dish. When Laura had eaten it—and she finished every morsel—her mother helped her to creep out to the hammock in the cool shade, brought her a book, a fan, a pillow and a dish of fruit.

Laura spent the morning there, out of sight of the kitchen. She was an educated girl, fond of painting and all beautiful things. She declared that the heat, the cooking and the work made her ill. "Mother had been used to it all her life. She never tired of it. She liked turmoil."

Presently Laura managed to walk as far as the postoffice, and brought back a letter. It was from her brother Joe who was in a store in Boston, and was full of amusing gossip about parties, club meetings and concerts. In a postscript Joe said, "Ask mother if she will make me a set of new shirts as soon as possible. It does not take her long to run them off on the machine, and it saves me some dollars. Poor clerks in Boston have to look after the pennies!"

Mrs. Shaw gave a wan smile as she received the message. "I am glad Joey is so saving," she said; but as she oiled her machine for the work she sighed quietly. It was harvest-time. She was busy in the kitchen all day. The shirts must be made after nightfall.

Day after day went by. The family and the two hired men were fed, the house was kept in order, the washing and ironing were done, Laura was nursed and humored—all by the one quiet, gaunt woman.

When night came, she sat down at the machine to make the shirts, with loving thoughts of her boy.

"The doctor says that I need exercise," said Laura, feebly, one day. "I shall try riding horseback, I think."

Joe, when he received the shirts, merely wrote back that "they were not as neatly finished as those in the shops. Mother's machine must be wearing out."

He often spent in a supper, given to his friends, more money than would have bought the shirts.

When the harvest was done, Farmer Snowden congratulated himself on his profits. Some of the neighbors, he said, hired help in the kitchen during harvest. "But I told them mother undertakes it all herself. She is used to work. She likes it."

He took pleasure in abusing Holt, who had worked his mule almost to death. But when he saw his wife's face grow more lean and sallow each day, it never occurred to him nor to his children to consider the drudgery, the dullness, the absence of hope, amusement and cheer from her life, or to think that they were urging her, step by step, each day nearer to her grave.

In how many houses do you find a Mrs. Snowden?—Youth's Companion.

WHAT MARRIAGE DOES.

Few men pass through the experience of marriage without some change, for better or worse, in their outward condition at least. In many cases the change is an improvement, a source of enjoyment to the man himself and a subject for flattering comment on the part of his friends. This is especially so with regard to slovenly fellows, who often look, after they have come into the hands of a neat and energetic wife, as if they had just gone through a Turkish bath, had their cravats tied, and been fitted out newly by a competent tailor.

It is with a shock of pleased surprise that one meets a man of this character soon after his marriage, finding him not merely clothed, as of yore, but dressed, brushed and trimmed as to his hair, and well-shaved. In fact he seems to have acquired a new set of bones; his back is certainly straighter, the shape of his head is altered entirely, and a pair of well defined shoulders have emerged from the mass of cloth under which they were formerly concealed.

Nor is the change physical only; the married man's morale has improved. He looks out upon the world with a face cleaner and brighter than it was in his bachelor days, and the consciousness of presenting a good appearance has raised him fifty per cent. in his own estimation, and therefore twenty-five per cent. in the opinion of others. And all this is due to marriage—an institution that sages and cynics have ridiculed.—The Epoch.

HURRY.

Some people are always in a hurry, and generally always behindhand. The two go together; for hurry is the child of a state of mind, rather than a train of circumstances. The methodical man is never in a hurry. He moves along in his orbit, as Goethe says the stars do, "without haste and without rest." He knows what is first to be done, what next, and how long each item to be attended to, will require. He sees in an exigency what can be omitted or deferred, and what must be done according to the program he has made. If he is due at a certain train, he is there on time, with five or ten minutes to spare. If a certain task is to be done by a certain date, the work is ready a little in advance of the date.

All this comes of a habit of forecasting, planning out, of working daily according to a settled program, of allowing for each tick of the pendulum a second to tick in.

If the person who is always in a hurry will sit quietly down and make a list of what he has to do, what must be done, what may be omitted, and of the time each task will probably take, of the limit beyond which work cannot be deferred, and will then simply work up to his program, he will find no need to be in a hurry.

Some housekeepers are always in a hurry about breakfast or dinner or getting to church, or having their sewing done or making calls, or something else: and they do not realize that hurry is in their state of mind, is within them, and not caused by circumstances outside of them.

UNANSWERED PRAYERS.

"Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have I give thee—rise and walk." This was not what the suffering beggar asked, but a gift how far more precious! A cure in the stead of a temporary relief! It is even so the God of pity answers our prayers. When the hand of sorrow is heavy on us, when some great evil presses and our need becomes extreme, we cry to Him for help. The petition for relief on earth is perhaps refused; that which we would have is denied, the affliction is continued, and the pressure must be borne. But there comes in the midst of it a far richer gift. We are healed—our hearts are converted, our sins forgiven—we are weaned from earth and made meet for heaven. Ah! who would not encounter such refusals? Who would be so senseless as to doubt if they are gainers by their sufferings? He who asked alms would surely not have preferred the silver and gold.—Farm and Fireside.

ONE cannot succeed always. There must be reverses and disappointments, and the funerals and burials of dead hopes. But the man who looks at the bright side of things is the man who sees many of these dead hopes having their resurrections, and coming out of their graves to live larger and better lives. And if not this, who sees new hopes being born to take their places and do their works, and perhaps fill better places and do better works. "There is no such word as fail," is his motto, and having this motto, he seldom does fail utterly. It is just the old two ways of looking at things, of the buckets going up and down in a well. "Ah, me!" sighed one of them, "I never come up full but I have to go back empty!" "Glory be to God!" exclaimed the other, "I never go down empty but I come up full!" And to our thinking the thankful bucket—the joyful bucket—the "bright-sided" bucket, had the best of it.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

MAMMA'S BROWNIE.

BY EUDORA S. BUMSTEAD.

Who has fed the chickens,
Just as they would wish?
Who has carried water,
Rinsed and filled the dish?
Who has been a-weeding
In the onion rows?
Darling little helper,
Mamma knows!
Mamma knows!

Who has tended baby
Almost half the day?
Who has spread her cradle,
Set her toys away?
Whom does baby call for
Always when he goes?
Patient little brother,
Mamma knows!
Mamma knows!

Who has picked the cherries?
Mamma spoke of pies;
Here the fruit is ready
Much to her surprise!
Who has filled the wood-box
With the driest wood?
Mamma's little Brownie,
Doing good!
Doing good!

RHODA GREY'S DREAM.

BY L. J. D.

"Ten yards at seventy-five cents! I do wish father would allow me a little more money! It is perfect torture to try to do like other girls on the amount he gives me. If Charlie comes to him for money to take a trip or buy a boat he is sure to get it, but when I ask him for money he talks about hard times and economy, and tells me that I have three times as many dresses as mother has, and then gives me a pitiful little ten dollars. Well, mother will have to make my dresses, for I certainly can't hire a dressmaker out of this little bit of money, and lately mother seems unwilling to make my things. I know she has a large family to look after, and I expect I am a little particular about the fit, but still I think she might do it a little more graciously," and Rhoda Grey tossed aside the pencil and paper with which she had been calculating the cost of muslins, and laces, and ribbons, and began to rock to and fro in the big wicker piazza chair.

It was a warm June afternoon, so warm and still that even the birds seemed to lack energy to sing, but Grey's porch, with its vines and overhanging trees, looked cool and inviting, and a passer by, unless he had seen her discontented expression, would have envied the girl seated in the big chair, lazily waving an enormous fan.

Gradually Rhoda's face lost its injured look, and the motion of chair and fan ceased. The cool porch, the big trees, and the mignonette bed disappeared from sight, and, instead, she seemed be in the city streets. It was night, and the gaslights flared as the hot breeze struck them; shop-girls, ragamuffins, and factory men thronged the streets, or lounged in the doorways, for the rich are out of the city in such hot weather.

Rhoda seemed hurried on by some power till she reached the business block where her father had his office. Upstairs she went, flight after flight. She had no idea that her father had to climb so many steps every day. At length she reached the door and went in. Her father did not turn at her approach; he was seated at a desk bending over a large ledger. Rhoda paused a moment, and then walked around to the front of the desk. Why, was that her father? So worn and tired he looked; perspiration stood in great beads on his forehead; he seemed ten years older than when she had told him good-bye that morning. His fingers twitched nervously, and around his mouth were heavy lines of care.

As Rhoda was about to speak, the door opened, and a gentleman entered.

"Come, Grey, stop work and go down to supper with me! You will lose your mind if you work this way! Why, you have been at it since seven this morning, and I don't believe you have even stopped for lunch!"

"O, I can't stop—I mustn't," said her father, barely glancing up from his ledger. "I have an expensive family, the children are always coming to me for money, and God knows I hate to deny them; but something is wrong with the money affairs of the firm, and I must work night and day to meet the daily demands for money."

"But, man, you are killing yourself," rejoined the other.

Mr. Grey shook his head sadly, and the tired hand and brain went on traveling up and down the long columns, and Rhoda shut her eyes from the sight. When she looked again she was no longer in the great stifling, choking city, but in the sewing room of her own home.

The little clock on the mantel pointed to eleven, but still she could hear steady clicking of the sewing-machine. Heaps of rose-colored stuff lay about the floor, and at the sewing-machine sat her mother, stitching away at a piece of the same fabric. The air which came through the open window was as hot and stifling as a breath from an oven, and the mother's tired hands trembled as they pushed the damp hair from her forehead.

The door opened, and Rhoda's father came in.

"Come, Mary, it is time for you to be in bed," he said gently.

"O, Ralph, I must finish this piece of work," and the face lifted to his was pale and almost haggard.

"But surely we are not so poor that you must work like this," said Mr. Grey, wearily.

"Oh, no—of course not, but Rhoda is very anxious for this dress to be finished for her to wear to-morrow, and she is so particular about having it look just right that I had to rip it up and make the whole skirt over. So that is the reason I am sewing so late," and the weary mother turned again to her sewing-machine.

Slowly the room and scene faded from her view, and Rhoda found herself sitting on the cool piazza. She had had a dream, or, rather, let us say an awakening, and her eyes were filled with tears.

DAISY'S YELLOW CHERRIES.

Slowly up the green slope climbed the four-year-old baby holding something tight in both tight shut, fat fists.

"Sherries, Mamma," she called out, as soon as she came in sight of the porch, "'ellow sherries."

"Bless me," cried the farmer's wife, in whose wide-porched house Daisy was a summer boarder, "them yaller things is dead pizen."

Daisy's mother was not sure about the poisonous nature of the brilliant red berries, but certainly they did not look like very wholesome food, and the dimpled hands were gently made to give up the "'ellow sherries," though not without sobs and tears of disappointment.

"Mamma loves the red poppies," said Daisy's papa in a whisper, "let's go get some for her to wear at the tea table to-night;" and together they started down the hill again.

Alas! a carriage load of visitors stopped the gentleman and took him back to the porch, leaving the little poppy gatherer to wander alone. But before the brief visit on the porch was over, baby was back again with a very small show in her hands, and a mournful look in her dark eyes. "Well, Dais— what's the matter?" cried papa, "could you only find six poppies?"

"Was lots of 'em," said baby promptly, "but was too many 'ellow sherries."

The little girl had found the yellow temptation so strong that she had deliberately run away from it like a wise little woman.

Mamma wore the six red poppies at the tea table, and when baby said her prayers that night she told her how God had answered her prayer about "leading us not into temptation," by bringing her back from the field.

"I brought myself back," declared Daisy.

"But God helped you to come," answered Mamma.

LISTEN, BOYS!

Treat your mother as politely as if she were a strange lady.

Be as kind and helpful to your sisters as to other boys' sisters.

Don't grumble or refuse to do some errand which must be done, and which otherwise takes the time of some one who has more to do.

Have your mothers and sisters for your best friends.

Find some amusement for the evening that all the family can join in, large and small.

Be a gentleman at home.

Cultivate a cheerful temper.

If you do anything wrong, take your mother into your confidence.

Never lie about anything you have done.—A Friend.

Pleasantries.

Anæsthetic.—A dentist, whose stories are always founded on fact, tells of a negro who came with his wife to have one of her teeth extracted. Gas being something whose mysteries added terror to its charms, the solicitous darky questioned: "Couldn't you gibe her suffin a little milder'n gas, doctah? Couldn't you gibe her gasoline?"

A pronounced vein of humor must certainly have run through the country curate who said to his flock: "I fear, when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy was the love of our species, you must have misunderstood me to say 'specie,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. I hope you will prove by your present contribution that you no longer labor under the same mistake."

"You needn't order me around sir," said the washerwoman. "I'm not the hired girl. It's Bridget's place to look after the milk. I'm the laundry lady." "That doesn't scare me," said the man. "I'm the milk gentleman, and I'm P. W. G. R. K. of the U. O. G. G., and Most Eminent Past G. W. of the Ancient Order of M. X. Q. Z., and I want somebody to take this milk." "Yes, sir," said the washerwoman meekly, as she went to find a crock.

CHINA.

According to recent and apparently reliable information the great Empire of China is at present, and has been for some time time past, on the verge of revolution. Who would have believed it? Among all other people on the earth the Chinese have been regarded as the most conservative, fixed and set in their ideas and ways, bordering on historical petrifaction. Three hundred years ago the northern Tartars, an alien race, came in upon them, seized the supreme power, and have ruled over them ever since. Within recollection, when General Gordon was in China, there was a pretty wide spread rebellion to overthrow the Tartar usurpation, but it was put down and since then quietness and peace have apparently, prevailed. But it seems the old feeling that in China the Chinese ought to rule is still alive and active. In this country a large majority of the Chinese immigrants are in favor of a revolution at home, or, as they look at it, in favor of freedom and independence. Would such a change be a benefit to China? It is difficult to say. Perhaps it would. A change in the governing power might as in the case of Japan, open the Celestial Empire to the world and bring it into a more sympathetic touch with Christian civilization. At present there must be more or less demoralization among the people in certain quarters, where riots have occurred, and the lives of missionaries together with their homes and property have been sacrificed. Much depends on the Bismark of China,—the great Premier, who although not a Tartar is nevertheless conservative. From account, he is a very great statesman, and if he can raise the nation up to a higher stadium in peace, there will be no revolution; but if he does not, then revolution will come and do it for him. God rules, and deep down in unfathomable mines, where he treasures up his bright designs, He works His sovereign will.

WHAT IS THE NEW TESTAMENT?

It would be correct to say that the New Testament, as a book or in manuscript, did not exist until some time after the founding of the Christian Church on the day of Pentecost. But when this admission is employed as an argument to disparage the Scriptures or to show that the Church for a time at least could dispense with the Scriptures, we demur, and contend that the New Testament existed also before the day of Pentecost, and that in a form more complete than it did afterwards. The Gospels came into existence when Christ preached and wrought miracles in His lifetime here on earth, in the form of historical facts, and as such they were immediately transcribed upon the memories of His disciples, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, more indelibly than they could have been on brass or marble. In the course of time they were in part transferred from the tablet of memory to parchment by pens that were guided by the Divine Spirit. Much of what Christ did and said, that might have been interesting to us, had to be omitted, else, as St. John says, there would have been an excess, that is, too many books. Accordingly only so much of the historical Gospel by divine permission was put on record as was needed for the wants, the instruction and edification of the Church in all ages.

The New Testament, therefore, existed substantially before the Church, and was the basis or foundation upon which it was built, Christ being the chief corner-stone. Portions of it, such as the Epistles, came into existence afterwards, but they were simply the outgrowth of the gospels or the life of Christ. Consequently we say that the Bible is not simply a book, but the word of God also speaking to men on every page. As we read it, accordingly, it would be better if we could divest ourselves of the idea that it is a book, as that may lead us to think, as too many in our days do think, that it is merely a book like other books. Most happy would we all be, if we could get ourselves to think and feel that Christ Himself is speaking to us when He says, Come unto Me ye who are weary and heavy laden.

GROWING IN WISDOM AND KNOWLEDGE.

Why should Christ thus grow in inward strength? Just for the same reason that it was necessary for Him to grow in stature. Otherwise He would not be human, and could not be a real Saviour for us men and our salvation. He would be a being, whom we might fear, wonder at, or dread as a magician, but not one whom we could trust and love. It is interesting for us, therefore, to think of Him as a good boy, first listening to Bible stories by His mother's side, then going to the synagogue and giving heed to the reading and explanation of the Scriptures, asking questions on His way home about the lessons of the day, and afterwards learning to read them Himself and poring over their contents from day to day. Every now and then He would perhaps hear something about the traditions of the elders, or the fancies of some learned rabbi, but intuitively He could discern the difference between divine revelation and human additions, between the mere dross and the pure metal of truth. When He attended the great festivals He no doubt continued to listen to the great doctors, modestly asking them questions, which of themselves gave momentary glimpses of the wisdom that dwelt within Him, and created surprise with those who heard His words. Thus He grew up, increasing in knowledge from year to year with a familiar knowledge of the Old Testament, which was so much the more thorough and clear because it was not confused with unconscious mixtures of Rabbi this or Rabbi that. And in this way with the presence of the Spirit His heavenly Father prepared Him for the work of His life. At Nazareth a modest little flower grew up whose fragrance was destined to extend to the most distant nations and then down through all the centuries to come.

Such should be the childhood and youth of the children of all Christian parents at least. The Church with its schools and instructions with the help of the parents has always to a greater or less extent endeavored to train its youth in the knowledge and fear of the Lord. The two Churches of the Reformation, the Lutheran and Reformed, have, as we have always thought, therefore been peculiarly happy in having been able to maintain its catechetical instructions for the benefit of the young down to the present time. Their catechetical classes, which might be called their theological schools for the young are the best, more to be prized, or they at least should be, than all other schools for the great mass of the rising generations. They are to the youth and should be to the older people also what Theological Seminaries are to young ministers and the Church at large. Fundamentally the instructions are the same, both being based on the Creed, the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer, as in the case of Calvin's Institutes, and other great works on Christian doctrine. The one is simply the enlargement of the other. So that it may in its turn come back again to fructify and animate the members of the congregations, both old and young, with an increase of a true knowledge of God.

At this season of the year, it is a pleasant thought that, as we look abroad over the Church the young people in our congregations are coming together weekly, or oftener, to learn what is their only comfort in life and death; what they must do to be saved; and what they must be in order to be acceptable guests at the Table of the Lord. These are golden opportunities for pastors to lay good foundations, which many in other denominations do not enjoy—unfortunately. They should be improved, and the very life and soul of pastors should be thrown into them to make them interesting and impressive. We know that in some places, owing to various external causes, it is difficult to get a catechetical class together, and the minister has to struggle against wind and tide to secure as many disciples each year as the Saviour had about Him; but usually they succeed and their work is its own best reward. But in other places we also know that the young people turn out in scores and by their presence say, Here we are, teach us the words of eternal life. Such pastors are to be congratulated, but their responsibility is only so much the more increased. In some congregations an hour or more during the week, is spent in imparting instruction; in others,—in rural districts mostly—a forenoon, or an afternoon, or a whole day is profitably employed for this purpose, and neither parents or their children object to the time thus devoted to religious improvement. Which of the two methods is the best? Most persons, including the ministers also—would, we presume, give the latter the preference, and so would we.

THE WORKS OF GOD.

We frequently hear people speak of the works of nature and the works of art or man, and dissensions sometimes have arisen in regard to which should have the preference. Too often it is forgotten that both are the works of God, and that in Him they find their unity, their highest beauty and value. We have the one as well as the other in abundance in this western world of ours, but as we look over it in its breadth and length, from ocean to ocean, from Cape Horn to the frozen regions of the North, and remember that it has been settled and cultivated only for a few centuries by civilized men, we are constrained to cry out, Behold here the work of God. At the time America was discovered by Columbus God saw the sad condition of the great mass of the people in Europe, poor, oppressed, the mere tools of ambitious rulers who used them for the purpose of carrying on bloody wars with their neighbors. During the seventeenth century the war between the Catholics and Protestants in Germany continued for thirty years; and the Dutch in Holland had to contend with the Spaniard for eighty years before they succeeded in throwing off the foreign yoke and in gaining their independence. God foreseeing this prepared for the groaning multitudes in the Old World a place of refuge on this side of the ocean, where they could live in peace, improve their condition and worship God under their own vine and fig-tree. Here let the arts thrive and nature put on her most beautiful attire, but let it not be forgotten that both nature and art, like the science and skill which beautify them, are alike the works of God.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Many of our readers, probably the most of them, reside in Pennsylvania. It is a great state, and the world has found it out, apparently before some its own people. Of course much of the credit of our greatness is due to its hardy and industrious population, especially the Germans, who cut down its forests, and brought its soil to its present high state of cultivation. But let us think over the matter more seriously, and see whether after all the honor and credit do not belong to God, far more so than to His humble servants. Let us direct our attention only for a moment to the rich soil under our feet. Far back in the remote ages of the earth's history, as the dry land emerged from a watery world, by the washing and friction of the water on its deep bed or along the mountain sides, He reduced the rocks to a fine soil, and prepared it for cultivation by mingling in it just such elements as are now found in it at the present time. He was the first, the greatest, the best and the wisest tiller of our vast domain.

He, too millions of years ago, foresaw that our immense forests in process of time would be cut down for fuel or other useful purposes, and so He laid up an abundant supply of coal, of oil and gas in the bowels of the earth, to keep the people warm in winter, to give them light by night, and furnish them with the means of propelling their machinery in towns or cities, their cars by the wayside and their ships out at sea at the present day. Bearing this in mind, especially at this time when our crops are so abundant and the fruit on our trees so plentiful, we must at once see that our great State, with others like it, around us, is in an emphatic sense the work of God. We should stop and think—at least for a moment—and praise God from whom all blessings flow.

THE CHAPEL ORGAN.

For a number of years the Woman's Missionary Society of St. Stephen's Church (College Chapel) has been actively and earnestly engaged in assisting different objects in both the fields of Home and Foreign Missions. Considering our number and environments we have felt grateful for the measure of success which has attended our efforts.

Last winter we had finished the fulfillment of a pledge and were about selecting a new object for our benevolence, when the urgent need of a new organ in our own chapel caused the utterance of the question, "In this case, does not 'charity begin at home?'" Not that we had only lately realized the necessity of a movement in this direction. The need of a better organ had been a long felt want. Several years ago one of the speakers at an Alumni dinner spoke fittingly and feelingly on this subject and suggested that contributions be given for this object. One generous woman, whose son had just graduated, gave one hundred dollars, and other smaller sums were donated. But the amount raised was not sufficient to purchase a good pipe organ, interest seemed to weaken, and for the time the matter was dropped.

Since then the beautiful Dr. Nevin Memorial Window has been erected, a handsome lectern to the memory of Mrs. Nevin stands in the chancel and a font of chaste workmanship has also been placed there. Quite out of harmony with these near surroundings and entirely insufficient for its purposes is the well-worn cabinet organ.

A suggestion was made that the students endeavor during vacation to secure funds for the purchase of a really good organ—one worthy of its place in this institution, the oldest College in the Reformed Church—and the "School of the Prophets. Considerable enthusiasm was manifested. The different Seminary and College Classes held meetings. A chairman was appointed from each Class, a subscription paper was prepared and most of the students subscribed, many of them very liberally.

Now the vacation is nearly over. We shall soon know the result of the summer's work in this direction. I feel sure that at the first meeting for Morning Prayers when College opens, a gladder, happier note will ring through the full chorus of the hymn if our object has been accomplished. Oh, how gloriously beautiful is the deep, rich harmony of those young voices! How I love to listen to them!

A short time ago, the Spiritual Conference met here and when the communion services were celebrated there was something strangely thrilling in the sound of so many strong men's voices mingling in our well-known grand old hymns. But withal—we missed the "jubilant hope-inspiring, glorious voices of "the boys."

Alumni and friends—with the memory of old College days in your hearts, and the dear remembrance of the sound of voices in the old College Chapel, we ask your help for the organ.

WHO WAS REV. FREDERICH ROTHEN BULER?

In looking over the number of ——— and County Journal, for Saturday, September 20, 1766, I find the following advertisement. Who knows anything of the minister here mentioned?

L. H. S.

—Preaching to be effective should be plain, that is easy to understand and pointed in its application. The Presbyterian says of it:

"People often say that they like an out-spoken preacher, but when he attacks their peculiar sins, they are not so fond of him. It is all right when he hits somebody else, but when he, Nathan-like, says, "Thou art the man," the truth comes too close to be pleasant, and then the prophet must suffer for his temerity. The faithful preacher sometimes has a hard time of it, but his honesty counts in the long run. If he is kind in spirit, forbearing in conduct, and consistent in life, he will find that, in the case of the good whom he may have offended by his plainness of speech, the truth, though working discomfort for a while, will sooner or later have its desired effect. They will come to thank and honor him for his fidelity. Prudent dealing with souls is, after all, not only the pastor's duty, but is the safest and surest way to promote a useful and honored ministry."

Extract from the Contract between the Publication Board of the Reformed Church in the U. S., and the Proprietor of the Reformed Church Publication House.

"It being distinctly understood and agreed between the parties that the Synods of the United States, Pittsburgh and Potomac in consideration of the terms of this lease agree that they jointly or any one of them will not establish or themselves conduct or have conducted for them a publishing house or houses, nor publish any books or periodicals, nor endorse any periodicals that may be published by any private party or individuals either within or without their respective bounds."—Minutes of Synod, 1888.

Poetry.

RICH BECOMING POOR.

REV. J. BYINGTON SMITH, D.D.

[We sometimes are tempted to repine because of the thorns in our pathway. Let us never cease to reflect that "He who was rich became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich."]

The bird of the air has its nest,
The foxes have holes in the ground,
But place for the Saviour to rest
Nowhere in the world could be found.

Though coming from palace of God,
As one of our kindred and race,
His feet thorny pathways have trod,
In sorrow His foot-prints we trace.

They gave Him a cross, not a throne,
Who came to redeem and to save;
Though heaven and earth were His own,
They borrowed a place for His grave.

None ever was rich as was He,
In mansions and glories above,
Or poorer than He came to be—
The wonder of infinite love.

Then why should I murmur or pine,
Whatever my earthly lot be?
If Jesus the Saviour is mine,
Why fare any better than He?

Then make others poor by my gain,
Far better enrich the world's poor,
Not gainers but sufferers reign—
These enter the wide-open door.

False humility is worse than pride.—St. Augustine.

From strength to strength go on;

Tread all the powers of darkness down,

God takes some things from us lest we should spoil them, and we have more of them in missing them than we should have in keeping them.

"BUT FOR THEE."

Perchance in heaven one day to me
Some blessed saint will come and say,
"All hail, beloved! but for Thee
My soul to death had fall'n a prey;"
And oh, what rapture in the thought—
One soul to glory to have brought!

When a man is no longer afraid, but is prepared to welcome whatever comes, becauses he sees in it the appointment of a loving Father, why, then he is in a happy state.—Spurgeon.

I thank Thee, Father, that I live!
I thank Thee for these gifts of Thine—
For bending skies of heavenly blue,
And stars divine.

For this green earth where mild sweet airs,
Like forest spirits, joyous stray,
For winding streams, and trees, and flowers
Beside its way.

Little sins shut out the vision of heaven and of God. A tourist tells how in Scotland one day he raised his glass to get a better view of Ben Lomond, and to his surprise did not see the mountain at all, but only an expanse of green; a leaf on a branch of a tree was between his glass and the mountain. A little leaf shut out the great monarch of the hills. Aye! and even the mist from his own breath could have covered the glass and produced the same results.—Selected.

Thou that hast suffered, brood not o'er thy woes,
But to thy tasks! Thy losses and thy pangs
Forget in cheerful toil; thyself forget.
There be who love thee yet; whom thou dost love;
For God and these still be it thine to live;
And all unwearied, in love's ministries,
Go labor on and in thy works rejoice.

—Ray Palmer.

Reason can correct the interpretation that faith puts on her Lord's words; but faith is ever the chosen bride, to whom the King revealeth Himself. Reason, like an old, wise tutor, goeth forth with faith and teaches her to see new meanings in the King's words, new wonders in gifts, new graces in His dealings, new glories in His character. But faith alone carries the sweet secret of the King's favor.—Mark Guy Pearse.

Science and Art.

A new antiseptic agent, called microcidine, which is composed of 75 per cent. of naphtholate of sodium and 25 per cent. of naphthol and phenyl compounds, has been tried in France. It is a white powder, soluble in three parts of water. The solution, which is cheap, is said to be a very effective antiseptic, without being poisonous or caustic or injurious to instruments or linen. Its antiseptic properties are inferior to those of corrosive sublimate or naphthol, but surpass those of carbolic and boracic acids ten and twenty times respectively. The solution has given excellent results in dressing wounds.

WEATHER WISDOM.—When you wish to know what the weather is going to be, says a meteorological observer, go out and select the smallest cloud you see. Keep your eye on it, and if it decreases and disappears it shows a state of the air that is sure to be followed by fine weather; but if it increases, take your overcoat with you if you're going away from home, for falling weather is not far off. The reason assigned is this; When the air is becoming charged with electricity you will see every cloud attracting all lesser ones toward it until it gathers into a shower, and, on the contrary, when the fluid is passing off, or diffusing itself, then a large cloud will be seen breaking into pieces and dissolving.

Canada intends to share with the United States in the agricultural prosperity arising from a big yield of grain coincident with short crops in Europe. Last year Canada exported 15,000,000 bushels and had to buy flour from the United States. This year she will have enough wheat for home consumption and 33,000,000 bushels to export.

Martinique, West Indies, seems to have suffered severely from a hurricane, but the earlier despatches give meagre information respecting the extent of the calamity. All the vessels in the harbor Fort de France are reported driven ashore, and 60 lives, it is said, have been lost in various parts of the island. Martinique is a periodical sufferer from earthquakes, hurricanes and epidemics.

A curious case of hydrophobia has just been reported, and the sufferer has been sent to Paris in order to be treated there. The victim is a London nurse, whose name is Jackson, and who was bitten by a boy of whom she was in charge. Cases of poisoning from the bite of human beings are, of course, not unknown to medical science, but they are decidedly rare, and every one which is added to the list is put on record in the medical journals.

Hints and Recipes.

When meat is broiling it will cook more quickly if a frying-pan is turned over it. Frying may be hastened in the same way.

To keep mosquitoes away from beds, tie a sponge or piece of old flannel well saturated with carbolic acid to a post, or the headboard of the bedstead. This is an effectual way of driving off these pests.

FOR NOSE-BLEED.—Grasp firmly the nose with the finger and thumb of the right hand for fully ten or fifteen minutes, completely stopping the movement of air through the nose. It will stop the bleeding, which will not return. This is the advice of an eminent surgeon.

In washing pongee do not boil or scald the goods; it will stand hard rubbing if necessary. Let it get quite dry, then press with as hot an iron as possible, when the silk will look like new. Silk handkerchiefs should be quite dry before ironing to prevent them turning yellow.

THE BEST WAY TO COOK EGGS.—Butter a tin or plate, and break in your eggs; set in a steamer; place over a kettle of boiling water, and steam until the whites are thoroughly cooked. They are very ornamental, broken into patty tins, as they keep their form better. The whites, when cooked in this manner, are tender and light, and not tough and leathery, as by any other process; and can be eaten by invalids with impunity, and are certainly very much richer. Try it, and I am sure you will want to go into the poultry business, in order to have plenty of fresh eggs.

By the exercise of a little care and the adoption of a few simple rules, a great deal of rheumatism could be prevented. Abstemious living, free exercise, frequent bathing to keep the skin active, a liberal use of fruits, and the drinking of water in large quantities are sure preventives. Water dissolves and washes waste matter out of the system, and its use is essential where there is any impairment in the action of the kidneys, bowels or skin. By the application of this simple treatment and ordinary care, immunity from rheumatism can be obtained.

Farm and Garden.

SUMMER MULCHING.—There is quite a variety of plants that are benefited by mulching during the summer, and especially so where the season is very dry. Tomatoes and melons can often be kept growing all summer, when if this is not done the growth will be unsatisfactory. Some plants require more moisture than others; and if it is not supplied the growth and yield will be light. Properly applied, a good mulch not only aids to retain moisture in the soil, but it aids to draw it from the subsoil by capillary attraction.

FATTENING CHICKENS FOR THE TABLE.—The three prime rules to be observed are: sound and varied foods, warmth, and cleanliness. There is nothing that a fattening fowl grows so fastidious about as his water. If water any way foul be offered him he will not drink it, but sulk with his food, and pine, and you all the while wondering the reason why. Keep them separate, allowing to each bird as much space as you can spare; spread the ground with sharp, sandy gravel; and take care that they are not disturbed. In addition to the regular diet of good corn, make a cake of ground oats or beans, brown sugar, milk, and mutton suet. Let the cake lie till it is stale, then crumble it, and give each bird a gill measureful morning and evening. No entire grain should be given to fowls during the time they are fattening; indeed, the secret of success lies in supplying them with nutritious food without stint, and in such a form that their digestive mills shall find no difficulty in grinding it.—Journal of Agriculture.

BIBLICAL THEOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. By Rev. Revere Franklin Weidner, D.D. Vol. II., Part 3, The Pauline Teaching. Part 4, The Teaching of John. $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

This volume is after the same plan as Vol. I. These two volumes form a useful and comprehensive text-book for students of the Bible. It is, therefore, a book that can be used in the theological seminary and at the same time be helpful to the pastor and teacher. As will be seen from the title given, this volume is divided into two parts: Part 3 treating of the doctrines of St. Paul as they are to be found in his Epistles, and Part 4 the teaching of St. John as it is set forth in his Gospel. Indexes of subjects and texts are also given.

CHARLES GRANDISON FINNEY. By G. Frederick Wright, D.D., LL.D., Prof. in Oberlin Theological Seminary, Ohio. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Pp. 329. $1.25.

This is another volume in the series of the biographies of "American Religious Leaders," that is being published by the above named firm.

The men whose biographies are thus given are such as have had great influence in religious affairs in this country. The subject of this volume was undoubtedly a great man and had much to do with religious movements in America. His biographer has given a faithful account of his life and views. In giving this he also gives much of the history of Oberlin College which owes much to him.

THE FOUR MEN. Delivered to the Students of Yale University by Rev. James Stalker, D.D., author of "The Life of Jesus Christ," "Imago Christi," etc. Price 20 cents. Pp. 30. Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago and New York.

This is a neat booklet, giving a discourse delivered by that eminent preacher Dr. Stalker, to the students of Yale University. The Four Men are: I. The Man the World Sees; II. The Man seen by the person who knows him best; III. The Man seen by himself; IV. The Man whom God sees. The whole is presented in a thoughtful and direct manner, and its reading must leave a lasting impression and do good.

THE DIVINE ORDER OF HUMAN SOCIETY. Being the L. P. Stone Lectures for 1891, delivered in Princeton Theologicel Seminary by Professor Robert Ellis Thompson, S.T.D., University of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia: John D. Wattles. Pp. 274. Price $1.

The lecturer, Rev. Robert Ellis Thompson, is widely known as a writer on social and economic questions. By request he delivered last winter a series of lectures on Christian Sociology. They were well received by the students. Their publication followed as a natural consequence. They discuss the family, the nation, the school and the church. To give an idea of the character of the contents we give the topics discussed: Lecture I. Christian Sociology; II. The Family: Its Nature and its History; III. The Family: Its Relationships, its Social Problems; IV. The Nation: Its Idea and its Development; V. The Nation and its Problems; VI. The School and its Problems; VII. The Church: Its Idea, its Unity and its Worship; VIII. The Church: Its Social Problems. Prof. Thompson of course holds that God is the author of social life and combats all theories to the contrary. He presents the many practical questions of the day in a very clear and enthusiastic manner, from his standpoint, that of a socialist, but also as "a theistic evolutionist." Many will not agree with him. Still his views must be received with respect and he must be admired for the earnestness with which he presents them. The typographical part of the book is tastefully done, bound in cloth, gilt top and uncut edges.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE. The number of The Living Age for August 22 contains—Laurence Oliphant, Blackwood's Magazine; Kane, a Soldier Servant, Temple Bar; 1799—A Rustic Retrospect, Nineteenth Century; The Farmer-Monk, National Review; The Recovered Aristotle, Leisure Hour; Squire Doot of Doot Hall, Doot Hill, Ireland, Blackwood's Magazine; Wayfaring by the Upper Dordogne, Temple Bar; The First Handel Festival, National Review; Invisible Paths, Gentleman's Magazine; Why I am an Abstainer, Hand and Heart. Poetry—The Prisoner, Out of Tune, and Variety. Miscellany.

$8.00 per year. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

LITERARY NOTE.

The MacMillans announce a popular edition of Lowell's poems uniform with Tennyson, Shelley and others.

As we have already announced in these columns, Funk & Wagnalls, of New York, propose to publish shortly a Standard Dictionary of the English Language. There is every evidence that this will be the best one volume dictionary of the language. Over one hundred editors are engaged upon it,—the most of whom are eminent in the special topics assigned them. It will have a number of new features which will make it superior to any dictionary. The price will be $12, but advance subscribers will receive it at $7. The publishers will give particulars if written to.

Deaths.

Obituaries to be inserted free of charge must contain only two hundred words, and all words above that number, verses of poetry and resolutions, will be charged for at the rate of one cent a word. Money must accompany obituary to insure insertion. Memoirs of ministers, their wives, and of prominent laymen are exempt from this rule.

DIED.—Woodstock, Va., August 1st, 1891, George Robert, son of John W. and Ella Martin, and grandson of the late Rev. G. H. Martin, D.D., aged 13 years, 8 months and 22 days.

George was affected with brain and spinal trouble a year ago. For a time he seemed to gain strength, but early this spring he grew weaker and lost entire use of his limbs, and as his end was drawing near blindness overcame him.

In infancy he was given to the Lord in holy baptism, and the Lord remembered him in the bestowment of His grace. Soon he learned to know Christ, and say I belong unto my faithful Saviour Jesus Christ. He loved his church and even sent his offerings to the house of the Lord, to be laid upon the altar of thanksgiving, when in sickness he could no longer go himself.

He bore his sufferings with great heroism. Even in his last hours not a murmur escaped from his lips. He possessed a bright mind, and his words sparkled with cheerfulness. Love to God makes a sunny heart. Strong was his love for parents and brother, and he would have them think no otherwise but that he could easily bear his sufferings. He is missed in the house, in the church, catechetical class and Sunday-school.

The funeral services were held in the Reformed church Sunday evening. The pastor, Rev. A. K. Kline, was assisted by Revs. Bushong and Ball of Woodstock, and Rev. C. Dieffenbacher, D.D., Greensburg, Pa.

His body was then laid to rest by the side of his grandfather's.

DIED.—At his home, near McConnellstown, Huntingdon county, Pa., July 14th, 1891, Mr. John P. Watson, aged 64 years, 6 months and 19 days.

The deceased was an earnest and faithful member of the Reformed church at McConnellstown, Pa. He was a man who was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and was frequently honored by positions of honor and trust by the community and the congregation in which he lived. As long as health permitted he was at his place in the sanctuary, and when sickness prevented he welcomed and enjoyed the ministrations of his church at his bedside. Steadfast in the faith to the end, he has entered into rest and his works do follow him.

DIED.—May 27th, 1891, at St. Thomas, Pa., Mr. Samuel A. Zumbro, aged 53 yrs., 1 month and 19 days.

ST. JOHN'S REFORMED CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PA.

ST. JOHN'S REFORMED CHURCH, JOHNSTOWN, PA.

One of the most beautiful churches which will grace this city upon its completion will be the structure now in course of erection by St. John's Reformed congregation on the corner of Dibert and Somerset streets.

The architect for this work is Joseph W. B. Fry, of Philadelphia, who has gained an envied reputation as a church architect. All his labor is a gift to the congregation, and anyone looking at the work done under the direction of his plans will at once observe that they are perfect in every particular. He also made for the Rev. Mr. Bates plans for his residence on Somerset street free of charge.

The work of erection began last October. The corner-stone was laid on Nov. 30, and was the gift of contractors Stahl & Son, of Altoona. It was a pure New Hampshire granite. Seldom is such a large stone seen in any church. Above the door in the tower is a large marble slab containing the account of the building of the first church in November, 1880; the organization of the congregation on January 23, 1881; the destruction of the church by the flood of May 31, 1889, and the building of the new structure in 1891. Above the large window on the gable on Somerset street is another large marble slab on which is engraved "St. John's Reformed Church."

The church is built of hard-burned firebrick, manufactured by the Park Tiling Company, of Pittsburgh. About 200,000 bricks were used in the erection, each of which is 4½x9½ inches. The foundation is made of stone obtained from Johnstown quarries. The extreme interior dimension of the church is 134 feet 8 inches long and 50 feet wide.

The height of the main part of the church will be 41 feet, the structure being divided into a main audience room, a main Sunday-school room, two class rooms, and an infant Sunday-school room. The height of the ceiling in the auditorium is 23 feet and in the Sunday-school and class rooms is 15 feet. The seating capacity will be about 800.

The church as already constructed contains five gables, three large and two small ones. There is a large gable on Somerset street, one on Dibert street, and one opposite the Dibert street gable. There are also two smaller gables, both fronting on Dibert street. The main entrance to the auditorium is under the tower at the corner of the two streets. There is also a side entrance on Dibert street and one which leads into the main Sunday-school room and the infant department.

The roof of the building is one of the prettiest in the city and is made entirely of slate. The roof of the auditorium is surmounted by four crosses, one on each gable. There is also a cross on the gable over the infant room and one on the peak of the main Sunday school room.

The tower, which will rise about twenty feet above the roof, is being fitted for a bell and will be very handsome and substantial. It is 13 feet at the base and is 60 feet high. There is one large window in the tower, fronting on Dibert street, and a triplet window on each of the four sides just above the large window. Above the triplet windows are four large windows, one on each side of the tower. The corners from the triplet windows are circular shaped to the highest point on the top.

The thickness of the walls at the base of the tower is two feet; at the middle the walls increase to a thickness of 30 inches but at the top the walls decrease to a thickness of 21 inches. The tower is intended to hold one of the largest bells now in use.

The main audience room contains two large windows, one on Dibert street and one on Somerset street. Each window has a surface of 210 square feet. In the main auditorium there are eight smaller windows. In the main Sunday-school room are four large windows, in the class room two more, and still three more in the infant room, but they are not so large.

The interior dimensions of the auditorium are 50x64 feet; of the main Sunday-school room 38x50 feet; of the two class rooms 18x32 feet, and of the infant department, which is circular, 45x20 feet. The ceiling of the entire building will be exposed wood work of white pine finish. There will be a glass partition between the main and the Sunday-school rooms; one between the Sunday-school and the infant and class rooms. The whole building can in an instant be transformed into one room. The windows will be of leaded glass and the partition will be of stained and ribbed glass.

The pulpit, which will be directly opposite the Dibert street gable, is on the left of the entrance through the tower and is lighted by two skylights. The altar will be located immediately in front of the pulpit, with a baptismal font to the right of the altar, and the reading desk to the left of the altar. The choir platform will be located to the left of the pulpit platform and will be suited for the accommodation of a large choir. The floor of the main audience room inclines in a semi-circular form around the church to the pulpit. The plastering of the entire church will be in colors. All interior wood work will be in natural wood finish except the purlins and rafters, which will be cherry-stained.

The roof of the main Sunday-school room is broken by four dormer windows, three of which are slatter and the other of glass.

There is no definite time yet set for the dedication of the church, but all exterior work will soon be completed, and the interior work is now well under way and will be finished before long. The masons are at work on the tower, which will be completed next week.

The Rev. W. H. Bates, the present pastor, was the founder of the Reformed congregation. He came here from Sipesville, where he had a charge, and began preaching in the Baptist church, then located on the South Side, and preached to his first audience of two persons. The audience kept on the increase, however, until he finally prevailed upon the Classis of Westmoreland county to send a committee to this city to purchase a lot. The committee, after viewing the different sites, finally purchased the lot on which the church is now being erected. The first church erected was an unpretentious building, 32x54 feet. Rev. Bates, who had moved to Johnstown in October, 1880, began preaching in the new church in November of the same year, without a congregation, until January, 1881, when 46 persons united with the church and up to the time of the flood 229 persons had been received into the church.

The church, which was erected in 1880, was entirely destroyed by the flood of May 31, 1889, leaving nothing intact except the altar, which was found in the upper end of Sandy Vale Cemetery on June 8. Eighteen members were lost in the great disaster. In December succeeding the flood Rev. Bates started on his lecture tour, beginning in the city of Philadelphia, giving an account of "The Johnstown Flood." He continued in the eastern part of the state for the entire winter, with an occasional visit to Johnstown. In the winter of 1890 he again went out and lectured in the eastern and southern parts of this state and in parts of Maryland, realizing large sums of money from his work, all of which went toward the restoration of his house of worship.

The first services held by the congregation after the flood were held on the lot near the site of the destroyed building; but shortly afterward services were held in George Hershberger's residence on Morris street. Layton's Hall was secured over a year ago and has been used by the congregation ever since. During the erection of the church Rev. Bates has given the work his closest attention, so that what will prove to be a handsome church will be erected at a cost not exceeding $12,000. New members are being received into the church at every communion, and from present indications there is a bright future in store for the congregation in this city.—Johnstown Daily Herald.

Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. ly forty years Trinity congregation has worshipped in a small frame church (long since outgrown by the congregation), situated one mile east of Troutville, on ground leased from the farm of George Shucker, Sr. This farm was sold last December to the Helvetia Coal Company, now operating in the neighborhood. Through an oversight the church lot was not reserved.

When these facts became known the majority of the congregation decided to build a church in Troutville. Since Trinity congregation as now constituted occupies more territory than is often occupied by two congregations, the members of the east end asked permission to organize a congregation at Luthersburg. A petition to that effect was sent up to Clarion Classis at its annual meeting held last May and the request was granted.

The way being thus opened, a building committee was appointed, a suitable lot secured, and steps taken looking toward the erection of a house of worship.

Through the energy of the pastor and the building committee the work was pushed forward as rapidly as the busy season in a farming community would permit. The walls being almost completed, Sunday afternoon, August 9th, was appointed as the time for the laying of the corner-stone. Providence was exceedingly kind to us in granting us delightful weather, and a large crowd of people came to join in the service and witness the solemn ceremony.

The service was held in a natural grove near the church site. The writer preached from Eph. ii. 20. After the sermon a collection amounting to $61.16 was taken, after which the pastor proceeded to lay the corner stone according to the Directory of Worship of the Reformed Church in the United States. The articles placed within the stone were the Holy Bible, Heidelberg Catechism, Reformed Church Almanac for 1891, Reformed Church papers, county and other local papers, history of the organization and coins bearing date of present year.

The church to be erected is to be a frame structure, 62x38 feet, semi-gothic style, with center tower, and will cost about $3,500. When this people once have a house of worship the organization will be effected. The congregation will start out with a membership of seventy five or eighty, with fair prospects for future growth. May the Lord bless this work thus begun by pastor and people in faith.

O Lord our heavenly Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast established a kingdom in which Thou art carrying forward the purposes of Thy mercy, and which is destined to fill the whole earth.

We pray for the extension of this kingdom. Let it come with increasing power and more abundant fruitfulness. May the kingdom of Satan be destroyed, and the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ be established. To this end do Thou bless Thy word and ordinances and every right means which may be employed in spreading the truth. Give the Gospel a free and effectual passage throughout the world, that its joyful sound may be heard where Christ is not yet named, yea that all men may come under its saving power.

Bless the missionaries of the cross. Succor and defend them in the midst of all their trials and dangers, and sustain them in their arduous labors. Provide for all their wants. Give them health and strength for their work and cheer their hearts with the consolations of the Gospel. Let Thy presence go with them continually according to Thy promise, and do Thou crown their labors with abundant success.

Bless all our churches and give them a true missionary spirit. Bless our Boards. Guide and prosper them in their work; and dispose the hearts of our people to give liberally of their means, that the pressing needs of our treasuries may be supplied, and the wants of our missionaries met.

And all this we ask, that the kingdoms of this world may become the kingdoms of our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost be all honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

REFORMED REUNION AT IDLEWILD.

Thursday, 13th inst., the Reformed congregations held their annual picnic and reunion at Idlewild, Westmoreland Co., Pa. A more delightful day could not be desired and the immense throng of people, numbering about 15,000, enjoyed themselves hugely. Eighty-six car loads of excursionists arrived at the grounds in the forenoon and two train loads in the afternoon, making the largest body of jolly picnickers ever known at that beautiful and inviting resort. The great crowd was simply an immense happy family and the day was one grand round of pleasure. About the first important move was to secure a good place and spread the dinner, and at noon the baskets of provisions and delicacies began to disappear. After dinner there were some formal exercises held in the spacious auditorium. Rev. C. M. Hartzell, of Latrobe, was master of ceremonies. Addresses were made by Revs. D. N. Ditmar and Dr. C. R. Dieffenbacher, of this place; Rev. A. E. Truxal, of Manor; Rev. J. I. Swander, D.D., of Fremont, Ohio; Rev. J. H. Prugh, of Pittsburgh; Rev. N. H. Skyles, of Jeannette, and C. H. Gregg, Esq., of Greensburg. The invocation was made by Rev. D. A. Souders, of Irwin, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. E. S. Hassler, of Turtle Creek.

Inspiring music was furnished by the Derry cornet band and the celebrated Welsh choir, of Pittsburgh. At the conclusion of these exercises, there was a charming display of daylight fireworks, which brought forth shouts of joy, particularly from the younger folks. This wound up the proceedings, as far as a programme was concerned. During the day the people amused themselves socially, boat riding, swinging, riding on the merry go-round, at base ball, promenading, having their pictures taken, and a few also had their pocketbooks taken.

It was a happy day, a joyous throng, and a successful picnic, unmarred by a single accident, and thoroughly enjoyed by every person present.—Westmoreland Democrat.

DEDICATION OF GRACE REFORMED CHURCH, SHIPPENSBURG, PA.

This congregation, located in the famed Cumberland Valley, is one of the historic churches of the Reformed church. Shippensburg was originally called Shippenstown, and is the oldest settlement in this valley. The earliest records of the congregation have been lost; but since 1775 the records are intact. The oldest record book now known was purchased June 13, 1775, at a cost of $27.22½. The congregation has been served by twenty-one pastors during a period of one hundred and twenty-one years, in the following order: Rev. Jacob Weymer, 1770–76; Rev. John William Runkle, 1776–81; Rev. John C. Faber, 1781–86; Rev. Cyriacus Spangenberg, 1786–88; Rev. John P. Stock, 1790–1800; Rev. John Hoffman, 1807–23; Rev. Henry Hableston, 1824–28; Rev. Frederick Rahauser, 1828–36; Rev. W. C. Bennet, 1837–38; Rev. A. H. Kremer, D.D., 1839–45; Rev. John S. Folk, 1846–51; Rev. G. W. Glessner, D.D., 1851–56; Rev. F. A. Rupley, D.D., 1857–61; Rev. A. S. Vaughan, 1861–63; Rev. Jacob Hassler, 1863–69; Rev. A. G. Dole, 1870–72; Rev. S. B. Schafer, 1873–75; Rev. D. W. Ebbert, 1876–81; Rev. J. B. Shontz, 1882–86; Rev. J. David Miller, 1886–89; Rev. T. R. Dietz, 1889–.

The congregation needed a larger building to provide for its growth in numbers. During the last decade several costly churches have been built by other denominations, which served to impress the Reformed people with the necessity of erecting a church suited to the altered condition of the community.

Ground was broken at the corner of Normal avenue and Orange street in May, 1890; the corner-stone was laid August 15, 1890, and the completed structure was dedicated August 9, 1891. The total cost is nearly $9,000, for which ample subscriptions have been received.

The church is built after a plan of unique and harmonious proportions. The extreme dimensions of the building are ninety-six feet from east to west and forty-six feet from north to south. The walls are of brick laid in white mortar, with trimmings of drab and brown stone. The windows are mostly of cathedral glass, rich in design and color. All the windows in the auditorium are memorial. These vary in size but all are of gothic shape. Directly above the pulpit is the "Pastor's Window." Thie window was contributed by pastors who served the congregation commencing with the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Kremer. The memorial windows were donated by descendants or members of the prominent families of the congregation.

The auditorium is forty-three feet by fifty-seven feet, inside measurement, and has a seating capacity of 350, but when the folding doors dividing this department from that used by the Sunday-school are open fully 700 can be seated. The ceiling is broken with arches, with rounded angles, securing splendid accoustic effects. The sides and ceiling are frescoed in mellow tints of drab and pearl with beautiful borders. It is lighted with electric incandescent lights. The pews are of antique oak, circular and cushioned. The entire floor is carpeted. The chancel is surrounded with a neat railing. The furniture for chancel and pulpit was donated. The altar and pulpit chairs are of new design and elegantly upholstered. The pulpit platform extends across the entire east end of the church; the pulpit and three chairs occupying the southern half and the choir and organ the northern section. The auditorium is entered through a vestibule in the tower at the corner of Normal avenue and Orange street, and through a vestibule on Orange street, which also opens into the Sunday-school department.

Ample provision has been made for the adult, intermediate, and infant departments of the Sunday-school—a separate room being provided for each department. By opening folding doors all these rooms can be made into one, seating comfortably fully three hundred. The main room is used for prayer-meetings and special services. About 250 chairs have been placed in this department. The walls are frescoed and the windows glazed with stained glass, the latter being a donation from the Sunday-school. A single memorial window is observed, placed in memory of J. Raum Pagne, the superintendent for many years.

On the morning of August 9th, though the heat was great, this large building with all rooms thrown into one, was packed with fully eight hundred of the members and friends of the congregation. Revs. C. U. Heilman, J. W. Bell, C. Clever, D.D., D. W. Ebbert and T. R. Deitz, the pastor, participated in the dedicatory services. Dr. Clever led in the invocation, who was followed with reading of the Scriptures and prayer by Rev. D. W. Ebbert. An able and eloquent sermon was preached by Rev. C. U. Heilman from a text in Haggai's prophecy. After the sermon it was announced that $3,000 were needed to meet all debts. It was proposed to receive pledges to pay all indebtedness. It required but a few minutes for that church-debt expert, Rev. C. U. Heilman, to put the audience into a cheerful, generous and liberal mood, and without very great pressure nearly the whole amount of the debt was covered by pledges taken at the morning service. Then Pastor Deitz set the building apart to the worship of the Triune God, using the beautiful service of the Directory of Worship.

At 3 o'clock an immense audience gathered and listened to an eloquent address by Dr. Clever before the Sunday-school.

At 7.30 P. M. the church was again crowded when the writer, a former pastor, preached.

This congregation has now a splendid church, a commodious parsonage, and under the pastoral care of Rev. Deitz may hope by the blessing of God for an era of prosperity such as has never been their portion.

May pastor and people be abundantly blessed for their liberal provision for the Lord's cause.

Pure is one thing; wholesome, another. Pure arsenic is not wholesome. Pure ammonia, pure white clay, or pure alum cannot make a wholesome baking powder, even if it is called "absolutely pure."

Every housekeeper knows that pure cream of tartar, pure soda, pure flour, are wholesome. These three ingredients, and these three only, are used in Cleveland's Baking Powder. Cleveland's is pure and wholesome; it leavens most, and leavens best, but its special excellence is that it is perfectly wholesome.

EXTENSION OF THE HUNGARIAN MISSION.

I am not sure if the readers of the MESSENGER are informed of the fact of a second Hungarian missionary having arrived in this country, and having been placed with his residence at Pittsburgh, but his work extending over all the Hungarians in Pennsylvania. At all events, I should like to solicit their interest for this new extension of the Hungarian mission and, all the same, for the brother who has the charge of this new work. Brother John Koracs (pronounce Korach) is some thirty years old or more and married about a year ago. His first child died in Hungary a few weeks before he left with his wife for America. He arrived at New York safely, and by the kind guidance of Rev. Paul Sommerlatte, our harbor missionary, found his way to Pittsburgh, where he arrived about the middle of July. Rev. John H. Prugh, the pastor of Grace church, was very kind in receiving him, but as Bro. Koracs speaks but little English yet, some one was wanted to act as interpreter, and to bring him into the line of his work. I therefore immediately set out for Pittsburgh, and had the opportunity of meeting him in Grace church, which was the very first meeting of two Hungarian Reformed pastors on the soil of America. The following days were spent in calling on some more prominent members of the Hungarian Protestant community, and, not the least, by a search for a good lodging, which at last we succeeded in procuring, the brother not being inclined to remain long time in the expensive hotels. So Brother Koracs now is settled at Pittsburgh, and as he writes me, the work is begun vigorously and with the very best success already. He preaches every Sabbath in Grace church, and his audience is a very large one. In a short time the Hungarian Reformed congregation of Pittsburgh will be regularly organized. There are indeed some hindrances to overcome, caused by the ambition of one Hungarian man, who deports himself as if he were instead of the minister. But, if God wills, this man will be brought to order next time, as the whole community has turned against him.

Now I would take the liberty to solicit the favor of the brethren very closely to this new mission. Bro. Koracs has come to this country without other means than those afforded to him by our Mission Board. He has to wait for his first payment till the month of October, and though Rev. Prugh most generously made him a good cash advance, and besides, a gift from the Pittsburgh Mission Board, nevertheless, our new missionary, who had to buy some furniture to put into his empty house, is in a distress of money, as he openly avowed to me. I therefore address this frank petition to the brethren not to leave him in distress, but to help him over the difficulties of the commencement by some gifts, which, however little, will be accepted by him and thanked for very heartily. His address is 1415 Bluff street, Pittsburgh.

And if some of the brethren would call to mind the Cleveland Mission, too, whose church treasure is in a most poor condition, I would thank them as heartily. You shall get, moreover, the news of the Cleveland Mission next time.

G. JURANY,
Hungarian Missionary at Cleveland.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Erwinna.—Rev. T. C. Strock has resigned as pastor of Tinicum charge, the resignation to go into effect November 1st, at which time he will have served as pastor three and a half years.

Cherryville.—Some two hundred members of the charge served by Rev. J. W. Mabry paid him a visit recently and left him a purse of over $200. It was a pleasant occasion and one of much satisfaction to the pastor.

Shippensburg.—Rev. T. R. Dietz. The new church at Shippensburg, Pa., was dedicated on the 9th inst. Rev. C. Clever, D.D., preached the sermon. Revs. A. H. Kremer, D.D., D. W. Ebbert, former pastors, with Rev. C. U. Heilman, were present. The church is a handsome building and cost $9,000, and was dedicated free of debt. It will seat 700 persons. Franklin Keagis of Chambersburg, Pa., was the architect.

Elizabethville.—Rev. Jno. J. Stauffer. Harvest home services have been held in Lykens Valley charge during the last four Sundays, consisting of four congregations. The attendance was unusually large, the decorations in each case very beautiful, and the offerings larger than ever before. The following are the offerings: Elizabethville, $21.80; Gratz, $30; Hoffman's, $45.22; and Barrysburg, $18.56. Total, $115.58. Hoffman's made an additional offering on the same day for congregational purposes of $46.

Philadelphia.—The chapel of St. Matthew's German church was dedicated on the afternoon of the 23rd inst. In the evening services were held, when addresses were delivered by Revs. F. W. Berleman and G. A. Scheer. The services were continued on the week-day evenings, when addresses were delivered as follows: Monday, the Revs. A. E. Dahlman and P. Vollmer; Tuesday, the Revs. E. D. Newberry, G. C. Ewart and others; Wednesday, the Revs. J. B. Forster and J. Voeglin; Thursday, the Revs. P. Wienand and E. C. W. Beyer. On Sunday afternoon, August 30th, a Sunday-school festival will be held, and different Sunday-school workers will make short addresses. On Sunday evening the installation of the Rev. U. O. Silvins by the committee, consisting of the Rev. J. G. Neuber, the Rev. J. B. Forster and the Rev. G. A. Scheer, will take place.

Pennsburg.—Revs. A. L. Dechant and J. L. Roush. Harvest home services were held in this charge on the 1st, 11th, 13th and 18th of August. The offerings in the different congregations were as follows: Pennsburg, $62; Old Goshenhoppen, $56.50; Keelor's, $87.41; Sumneytown, $16.33. With one exception, the attendancc was unusually large.

Aaronsburg.—Rev. G. E. Addams. On the 21st of June a new "Mason and Hamlin" organ was dedicated at Salem's church in the Aaronsburg charge. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Miles O. Noll, of Bellefonte, Pa.

Through the enterprise of the choir, under the efficient direction of Prof. J. B. Meyer, of Penn Hall, provision had partly been made for its payment by the proceeds of a concert held last winter. On dedication day more than sufficient to pay the balance was realized.

On the 16th of August the Reformed church at Millheim (called St. John's) was dedicated. The services commenced on Saturday evening previous. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. R. Brown of Rebersburg. The dedicatory sermon on Sunday morning was preached by Rev. D. M. Wolf, D.D., of Spring Mills, to a large and attentive audience. The audience-room and chapel had to be thrown into one to accommodate the people. The music was rendered by the choir of Salem's church, near Penn Hall, in excellent style.

On Sunday evening Rev. S. H. Eisenberg preached to a large audience.

The edifice is neat, cozy, and finished in good taste and well adapted for the purpose intended. It cost over $2000, besides the material of the old church, donated by the Aaronsburg congregation.

To meet this indebtedness there was realized at the corner-stone laying three years ago about $200. At the dedication $303. By festivals during the last eighteen months, $303.44. By a concert, $98.05, and by contributions from the people of this locality, Mifflinburg and Bellefonte, $1,498.45.

The enterprise is consummated, is free from all indebtedness, and there is money enough left to purchase a bell, which will be put in position at the earliest opportunity. The congregation was organized three years ago by Rev. Z. A. Yearick with thirteen members, which number has been increased to thirty, all of whom are in moderate financial circumstances. The work is highly commendable if it is remembered that no collections were made from the church abroad.

Lancaster.—John B. Roth, treasurer of Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., desires to acknowledge the receipt of a check for six hundred dollars ($600) as a contribution from Senator H. P. Laird, of Greensburg, Pa., toward the permanent Endowment Fund for the Pittsburgh Professorship in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church in the United States.

Centre Hall.—Rev. S. H. Eisenberg. Harvest thanksgiving services were held in the four congregations composing this charge as follows: Centre Hall, August 9th; St. John and Grace, August 16th, and Emmanuel, August 23rd. At Centre Hall the church was neatly decorated with fruits and flowers, and the pastor was very acceptably assisted by Rev. G. B. Dechant, of Catawissa, Pa. The services were enjoyed by good audiences in all the congregations, and the collection, which amounted to $70, was applied to classical apportionment.

A family altar and a covenant God are essential to the perfect happiness of every home. "The voice of joy and melody" is a distinguishing characteristic of the "dwelling of the righteous." The piety of the home is the safeguard of its happiness. No wealth or refinement or luxury can compensate for the lack of true piety at home. They may only enhance the troubles. The most hideous skeletons are often found where there are the most of them. But piety, showing itself in reverent worship and duty all around, will dispel gloom and promote good-fellowship even under the most trying dispensations of God.

COSTIVENESS

If not relieved by judicious and timely treatment, is liable to result in chronic constipation. As an aperient that may be used with perfect safety and satisfaction, Ayer's Pills are unsurpassed. Unlike most cathartics, these pills, while they relax and cleanse, exert a tonic influence on the stomach, liver, and bowels, causing these organs to perform their functions with healthy regularity and comfort. Being purely vegetable and free from mineral drug of any kind, their use is not attended with injurious effects. Good for old and young of every climate, Ayer's Pills are everywhere the favorite. G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main street, Carlisle, Pa., says: "Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. I would not willingly be without them."

Harbor Missions at New York: 30 State Street.

All those who may expect relatives or friends from Europe to arrive at the port of New York, and those departing from here to Europe should communicate with our Harbor Missionary, Mr. Paul Somerlatte, No. 30 State Street, New York City, and he will gladly give them all the advice and assistance possible without any charge. The names of the parties expected from Europe and the name of the ship they will arrive in, should be given to the missionary in time, and steerage passengers should be advised to carry the name of the missionary in sight while landing at New York, because the missionary is always present upon the arrival of steerage passengers in the Barge Office, and will take care of those directed to him.

Convenient lodging, good transportation, railroad and steamship tickets, passes, etc., can also be secured through the aid of our missionary. Address,

PAUL SOMMERLATTE,

New York City, N. Y.

In a world where there is so much to be done, how happy that there is so large a portion of daylight; in a world where there is so much to be suffered, how merciful that there is also so much night.—Blunt.

There is no short-cut, no easy road to anything really worth possessing. The tree grows slowly, a little each year. The business is builded up by degrees. The Church grows gradually. The child takes years to develop into the man. The education comes letter by letter. It is the slow, plodding pastor who must be relied on and not the swift-winged evangelist. The evangelist does a grand work if followed up, but unless parents, teachers and pastors carefully seek to secure the results, they will go for almost nothing.—The Church at Work.

MANY a home, where there is apparent good cheer and prosperity, has some skeleton in the closet. There is some secret trouble preying upon the happiness of the family. It may be that a slight feeling of jealousy has arisen in the bosom of husband or wife, a boy has developed some evil trait or fallen into bad habits, or a girl has sold herself to do evil, or misfortune, felt but not confessed, is pressing like the weight of a millstone upon the home, or a secret consumption is silently eating away the vitality of a loved one. The name of these hosts of home troubles is legion. Every home has something that might be changed for the better. It gives relief often to go into other people's homes where there are so much greater troubles than are in your own. You see then the cause you have for gratitude for God's favor to you and feel more content.

In a Southern hotel, it is stated, instead of an electric button, every room will have a telephone connected with the office. Guests will be able to communicate not only with the office, but with their friends in other rooms at will.

DEER PARK AND OAKLAND.

To those contemplating a trip to the mountains in search of health or pleasure, Deer Park, on the dome of the Alleghany Mountains, 3,000 feet above the sea level, offers such varied attractions as a delightful atmosphere during both day and night, pure water, smooth, winding roads through the mountains and valleys, and the most picturesque scenery in the Alleghany range. The hotel is equipped with such adjuncts conducive to the entertainment, pleasure and comfort of its guests as Turkish and Russian baths, swimming pools for both ladies and gentlemen, billiard rooms, superbly furnished parlors, and rooms single or en suite, all facilties for dancing, an excelled cuisine and a superior service.

The surrounding grounds as well as the hotel are lighted with electricity, have cosy and shady nooks, meandering walks, lawn tennis courts and grassy play grounds for children within full view of the inviting verandas. Six miles distant on the same mountain summit is Oakland, the twin resort of Deer Park, and equally as well commodation of its guests. Both hotels are upon the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, have the advantage of its splendid Vestibuled Limited Express trains between the East and West, and are, therefore, readily accessible from all parts of the country. Tickets good for return passage until October 31st, are on sale at greatly reduced rates at all principal ticket offices throughout the country. Tickets reading from St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Columbus, Chicago and any point on B. & O. system are good to stop off at either Deer Park or Oakland, and can be extended by agent at either resort if deposited with him for safe keeping.

For full information as to rates, rooms, etc., address George D. DeShields, Manager. Deer Park or Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA — "Best and Goes Farthest."

New York State spent sixteen million dollars last year in caring for paupers and insane persons.

"It took me five years," said a married man recently, "to become convinced that the cheapest way for me to run my house was to give my wife so much money every month to spend as she saw fit. I think that I have saved at least twenty-five percent by this plan. I never have any large bills coming in now at inopportune times, for my wife pays as she buys. My house is better equipped and better managed than it was under my old system, and furthermore, my wife has a private bank account, to which she adds a little every month. I would advise every man who has a practical wife to try the same scheme. It's an immense relief, not to speak of the saving."—N. Y. Ledger.

Editorial Notes.

—As a number of the churches are introducing the new Hymnal, we are ready to put our readers in the way of securing copies for their own use at no cost to them, except a little labor. The liberal offers we make of it to those who will secure new subscribers for the MESSENGER, will be found elsewhere. We hope many will embrace the opportunity to secure the new Hymnal and new readers of their church paper. Read the offers, decide which you will accept and go to work. In a few minutes you can accomplish it all. Make an effort and see the result!

—The announcement is made that J. Z. Gerhard, M.D., who has been for twenty-one years connected with the Insane Hospital at Harrisburg, Pa., and for the last ten years its Superintendent, declined a re-election at the late meeting of the trustees of that institution on account of ill health. Dr. Gerhard has discharged his duties with singular ability and won for himself a distinction highly creditable among the profession. His many friends will learn of his retirement with deep regret and hope in due time his health will be fully restored. He will remove to Lancaster City.

—We have had occasion before this to refer to the Schleigh Academy and College Preparatory, a Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies, located at 1427 N. 16th street, this city. Established in 1877, this Academy has been steadily gaining a reputation for thoroughness in teaching and the satisfactory progress of its pupils. It has deservedly increased the number of its patrons, and with encouraging prospects its next term will open Wednesday, September 16th, next. Miss F. M. Schleigh is the Principal and will be pleased to give particulars as to terms, etc.

—Revs. S. R. Bridenbaugh and J. B. Henry, published a card last week in the Norristown papers, warning their members and the public generally, against Martin L. Fritch and a man named Yeisley, accompanying him, who have been canvassing that place for a journal named the "Ladies' Friend." The first named, it will be remembered, was some time ago deposed from the ministry by the Lebanon Classis for conduct unbecoming a minister of the Gospel. The reasons for the warning given by the pastors at Norristown are, that Fritch is representing himself as a minister of the Reformed Church, and has been using their names and of other Reformed ministers in his canvass without any authority and their knowledge. He has also been telling different stories as to the object of his canvass, in some instances, that it is for the benefit of a student for the ministry at Ursinus College, and then again at Franklin and Marshall College, as may best suit his purpose. It may be well for all our pastors to be on the lookout for this pair of canvassers and warn their people and communities against them, as well as expose their true character.

—The student in whose behalf the above canvass is pretended to be made, is J. W. Yeisley, whom we know to be unworthy of the confidence of any one. He has been assuming the role of a student of theology in almost every denomination in this country, the last, we believe, was that of the Reformed Episcopal Church, whose Seminary is located in this city. He has also been charged with conduct as a canvassing agent for different parties in sections of this State (we ourselves suffering from the same) that would, if action were taken against him, put him behind the bars for a time. The warning referred to should be heeded.

—Great preparations had been made for and equally as great expectations were had of "Bethany Day," at Womelsdorf, Pa. It would be difficult to tell of the feelings of disappointment when the morning of Thursday, August 27th dawned, bringing with it clouds which emptied themselves upon the grounds at the Orphans' Home and the homes of those who had been long looking forward to being among the expected great throng of Reformed people that would gather there upon that day. Those at the Home, no doubt, concluded that all their preparations and expectations would be for naught, as no one would come through the rain, and those who had expected to join the several excursions to the "Mecca" of Reformed people for that day, stood in doubt and debated within themselves, the question "to go or not." Happily, before the day was many hours old the clouds dispersed and "Old Sol" made his appearance and the weather and the almost disappointed ones began to brighten up.

—We were among those who had looked forward to a pleasant day at our oldest Orphans' Home and taking part in a reunion of our people at that beautiful spot. We, too, in consequence of the state of the weather, were among those in doubt upon that morning. But with the favorable change that occurred, we with our two daughters, were in time, seated in the cars of the P. & R. R. R., with some forty or more, on our way towards the scene of the day's festivities. Arriving at Reading our quota of excursionists helped to swell the large number from that city and the towns all along the road we had passed over, ours being an express train, in waiting for the departure of the one that would take us to our place of destination. In time we were off and as the distance we had to go was short we were soon alighting at the station and starting on the short walk to the Home whose majestic buildings upon the hill-side were in sight. Reaching the grounds we found a number there before us. Soon greetings among old acquaintances were exchanged and introductions to new ones made. Superintendent Yundt and his good wife with the members of the Board of Trustees and many good friends were busy receiving their guests and preparing for carrying out the program for the day. Representatives from a number of sections of Eastern Pennsylvania were upon the ground. Many, many more would have been there but for the weather. Instead of the three thousand and more that were present there was every reason to expect that three, if not five times that number would have met that day in reunion. Walking through the main building, examining the new one to the right of it, nearing completion, listening to the exercises held upon the temporary platform near by and mingling among those assembled, occupied the hours spent upon the grounds. The time for the return home arriving, the march to station was begun and at the hour appointed we were soon on our way homeward which we reached in due time, well satisfied with our day's "outing" and greatly pleased with what we saw at the Home. An account of the exercises will be found elsewhere.

—This is the first time we had the pleasure of visiting Bethany Orphans' Home since its location at Womelsdorf. It is an institution in which we have always had the greatest interest and have rejoiced with its many other friends in its prosperity and in the great and good work it has been able, under God, to accomplish, but circumstances have always been against our visiting it before this. A personal view of the Home and its surroundings only confirmed what we had read and heard of it. Its buildings are fine in appearance and well arranged for the purpose, the new building, Santee Hall, named in memory of Joseph H. Santee, a deceased son of Chas. H. Santee, Esq., of this city, being particularly so; its grounds are beautifully and healthfully situated, the large spring giving abundance of pure and cold mountain water; the oversight given by the trustees, headed by that large-hearted friend of the orphan, Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., is wise and thoughtful; and the administration of Superintendent Yundt and wife is admirable and successful, the universal opinion being that they are the right persons in the right place. All these combine to make it a comfortable and delightful Christian Home for the orphans of the Church. Those conducting it and those contributing towards its maintenance have reason to rejoice at the degree of prosperity and usefulness to which it has attained after twenty-eight years of a varied yet onward history. Its present condition and the increased advantages it will have to enlarge its usefulness and take under its care more of the orphaned children of the Church, should have the effect to call forth many more and larger contributions to its treasury, so that it may not be embarrassed in its future enlarged operations, but be able to carry out its designs to the full and to the good and welfare of those who shall come under its roof. The Board of Trustees and the Superintendent and his able assistants will want no better encouragement in their self-denying labors than this. Let it be given them!

LIFE'S VOLUME.

REV. CHARLES F. DEEMS, D.D.

Open before my wondering eyes,
Great God, life's mystic volume lies;
I wait to see Thy hand define
The fadeless record of each line.

No leaf once closed may I retrace
To add a word, or word erase;
Nor may I guess the joy or gloom
Inscribed on pages yet to come.

The past in light I clearly count,
Judge their intent, tell their amount;
But hid in clouds I cannot see
The history yet awaiting me.

But knowing this, that, great or small,
My Father's hand will write it all;
I trust the future and submit
To what is past—what's writ is writ.

But hear this prayer, O Power Divine!
Thou lift'st each leaf, and writ'st each line,
That where my hands have left a stain
Christ's blood may make all pure again.

Where the last sentence hath its end
In mercy, Maker, Father, Friend,
Write for the sake of Thy dear Son,
"Servant of Jesus Christ, well done!"

ON THE WING.—II.

We have said that we were delighted with Alexandria Bay and the Thousand Islands, and especially with the vision they present in the evening when ten thousand lights in various colors and manifold designs add their charm. Returning home our church organist, a gentleman who has traveled over a large part of the world, said to us: "So you have also been to the Thousand Islands, and would you please give me your opinion of the impression made upon you?" We replied that we thought that seeing it was a marvel, a rapture, but describing it was difficult. "Ah," said he, "I have seen it, and I do not think that ordinary language can describe it; possibly" he added, after a pause, "the language of music might." There is a big bit of truth in the remark of the professor.

Both going and coming we passed through Syracuse, N. Y. We made it a point to see the University, which is the chief ornament of an otherwise beautiful city. It is located on a pretty high hill. From its grounds one has a full view of the entire town, its public buildings and churches; of Onondaga Lake, and the salt works along its banks, which are said to be the largest in the United States; and of a charming rolling country stretching far into the distance. The University has not many buildings as yet on the hill, but those which it has are first class. What might be called the college building proper, that for instruction in the liberal arts, is a massive, well-designed structure of gray stone. There is a large library building, and a gymnasium not yet finished, both of brick. An observatory built of stone. And then one other building, the gem of them all, namely the John Crouse Memorial Female College. We have seen nothing anywhere that has so completely captivated us as respects its style, of all college structures we know of. It is built of red sandstone.

It was Sunday morning when we reached Niagara. Great crowds of people were there, more than we found on Monday following. The order was excellent, however. Gayety enough, it is true; but very little of a coarse kind, so far as one observed. It appears to us that the Falls in their majesty and might, exert a sort of subduing influence upon those who visit them; an influence which is different from that which dominates at other public resorts. Niagara is too overwhelmingly great for people to try to make themselves appear big in its presence either in manner or speech. There is but one Niagara Falls in the world, and it is worth the while of every person to see it at least once in his lifetime. The grounds near the Falls and the approaches, have been much improved since the governments on both sides of the river have assumed ownership. The fraud and the trickery have been restrained, and you are just as free from these evils as you can expect to be at any place of general public resort.

Our party went to see, and it saw pretty much all that is noteworthy, and from every point of view, both on the American and the Canadian side. All enjoyed the sights greatly. A few of us had been there before a number of times, but we took to ourselves just as much enjoyment as the rest. It is a matter which no one can monopolize there, and no one exhaust.

As we had ample time to do so we took in Chautauqua on our route. The train from Buffalo, where we had spent several hours seeing the principal parts of the city, brought us to Maysville in the early evening. Thence we went by steamer. It was the third week in August, and Chautauqua was at its best we were told. Well, it is a great place in its way, unique in many respects. A book which lay on the table in the parlor of the cottage where we stopped, says of it that "it is a perfect Eden." We cannot join the fair authoress in giving it that hyperbolic praise. It is a wonderful creation surely, but in the nature of the case it has many, and some of them serious, drawbacks. In rainy weather there must be mud everywhere. No paved sidewalks worth naming; streets narrow; the rear of houses entirely too close together; drinking water scarce. In other respects it is a delightful spot to rest, to study, to see and to hear. You may live at moderate cost, and great opportunity is given to enjoy and improve yourself. Valuable and rare curiosities are stored there; schools in many branches of knowledge are in session during the season; eminent persons lecture; noted singers and musicians appear. There is always something going on; in fact, a number of interesting matters at the same time. You make your selection, for you cannot sufficiently multiply yourself to get to all. It costs you for your participation in all these things, twenty-five cents a day before August and forty cents a day during that month. The great multitude attending pays in this way for it all.

We enjoyed our stay at Chautauqua. We are glad we went there. We were delighted with the kindly tone of of the people, and the strong, healthy religious atmosphere. The influence which touches you on every side is elevating, good. We could have stayed longer and been content. The ride by moonlight on the Lake per steamer from Chautauqua to Lakewood, eighteen miles, is an ideal one, worth a long trip for its own sake. At the latter place we took the Erie train east and wended our way homeward.

THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION.—II.

Reply to A. D. P., in "The Lutheran" of May 14th.

It is easily seen that, in this early day two tendencies were in existence, the one Lutheran, the other Melancthonian-Calvinistic, or the Reformed. The point of difference or divergence was, that Xth Article—that was the bone of contention, and as Dr. Swartz, the esteemed pastor of the Lutheran congregation at Gettysburg, in an article in the Independent of June 18th, said, "But the old questions, peculiar to the Lutheran Confessions, are not settled yet. It is true, they have been hotly debated for four hundred years and they are still open questions." And so they are. For a while the deeper significance of the change made by Melancthon was unnoticed, or at least little account made of it, "and was first observed not by Protestants, but by the Roman controversialist, Dr. Eck, at a religious conference in Worms, early in the year 1541. Luther's view of the Sacrament was evidently that presented in the edition of 1530, and in order that there might be no misunderstanding, he defined it, "And unequivocally taught the literal mastication of Christ's body. He gave it as the sum of his belief, to which he 'would adhere, though the world should collapse,' that Christ's body was ausgetheilt, gegessen und mit den Zahnen zerbissen," (Briefe, ed. by De Hitte, vol. iv., p. 572, comp. p. 569). He instructed Melancthon to insist on this in the conference he had with Bucer in Cassel, December, 1534. (Creeds, etc., p. 317, note.) What this means any one can easily see, but we will let A. D P. explain it. "In the apology of the Confession (Article X.) Melancthon asserts the corporalis præsentia, and even substitutes for vere adsint the stronger terms vere et SUBSTANTIALITER adsint. . . . The Lutheran Church, as represented in Luther's writings and in the Form of Concord, rejects transubstantiation and also the doctrine of impanation, i e., a local inclusion of Christ's body and blood in the elements, . . . but it teaches consubstantiation in the sense of a sacramental conjunction of the two substances effected by the consecration, or a real presence of Christ's very body and blood in, with and under (in cum et sub) bread and wine. The word consubstantiation, however, is not found in the Lutheran symbols, and is rejected by Lutheran theologians, if used in the sense of impanation. The philosophical formation of this dogma is the ubiquity (either absolute or relative) of Christ's body, which is a part of the Lutheran Christology," (Creeds, etc., p. 232, note).

This Confession, as so understood and interpreted, as said before, was not acceptable to a large portion of Protestantism. The chief point of dissent was on the Xth Article, and gradually, of necessity, a school was forming around the Xth Art. of the Variata, known as the Melancthonian-Calvinistic, the other tendency, clearly the Reformed.

NEW TIMES REQUIRE NEW FASHIONS.

Several hundred years before the printing press, Gerald of Wales, the accomplished scholar of the University of Paris, endeavored to popularize learning, in the absence of the press, by using the vulgar tongue in place of Latin. "It is better to be dumb than not to be understood," he exclaimed; "new times require new fashions, and so I have thrown utterly aside the old and dry method of some authors and aimed at adopting the fashion of speech which is actually in vogue to-day." So it must be in this closing period of the nineteenth century with respect to the work of institutions of the Church like Mercersburg College.—"New times require new fashions."

Wonderful opportunities are before the Reformed Church in the buildings, land and heritage she possesses at Mercersburg, Pa. The time has come when numerous smaller institutions of learning are in demand in almost every locality. The time is here when they can be supported, and when they are able to do a work which cannot be done by the public school or the large and expensive college. Rudimentary education has been widespread, because the people have voted supplies for its support. But there is a dearth of trained minds. This higher and fuller education must come through the Church. These facts indicate the opportunity for Mercersburg College.

Its location makes it unsurpassed in gathering students from Southern Pennsylvania, Maryland and further South. The surroundings of Mercersburg are uplifting and enlarging to mind and heart. The buildings are such that with little expense they could accommodate scores of young people, and be fitted up with all needful educational appliances. The cost of living at Mercersburg is ridiculously low. There are none of the distractions or temptations of city life to influence and often ruin youth in the most critical period of their developement. And, in addition, the Reformed Church in order to save her young people for her own communion, and especially receive candidates for the ministry must properly support Mercersburg College.

Here are all advantages possible for maintaining a first class collegiate institution in a rich section of the Reformed Church. The only hindrance seems to be "the dead past" of possible interference with other institutions of the Church. But to every candid mind the fact is, that the success of Mercersburg College is vital to the success of Franklin and Marshall College.

The time is not far distant when students from Potomac Synod must be obtained through the instrumentality of our own educational institutions in these sections. We cannot hope to get more than an occasional student for Lancaster, if we do not have preparatory institutions in sections where there are strong and flourishing denominational institutions like Dickinson and Pennsylvania College.

To gather our own from Potomac Synod for Franklin and Marshall, etc. ; to give the opportunity to hundreds of our young people to gain at least a partial classical training at a cost within their reach ; to properly use what already providentially belongs to the Reformed Church ; it is viatlly important to support and in every way possible enlarge the usefulness of Mercersburg College.

These words are written because the writer visiting Mercersburg for the first time was impressed with the rich opportunity of the Church and with the great need for such an institution. Moreover he believes as a young minister of the Church, with Gerald of Wales that "new times require new fashions," and that it is wise to adopt the fashion of colleges which is actually in vogue to day as well as "the fashion of speech."

God bless all the workers and well-wishers of Mercersburg College. And may the efforts now being made to free it from debt result in grandly establishing it as a centre of Christian education!

From "Reformed Quarterly Review," July, 1891.

WHY AM I REFORMED?*

BY C. CLEVER, D. D.

It is sometimes necessary to climb a mountain height, that we may get the lay of the land, the course of the rivers or the direction of the highways. If we desire a more definite knowledge, we must go down from our commanding position and select some circumscribed portion for more careful investigation. It is in the latter spirit that we approach our subject at this time. If we can get a clear conception of the name belonging to the honored Church of which I am a member, we will at once have a position from which, as an integral part of Protestantism, its whole field of practice and theology will be evident, at least in its general outline. A rose might smell as sweet if called by any other name, but no other word in the whole range of language, home or foreign, would be as fragrant with historic meaning as Reformed. Some churches are called after a man. His towering stsength, powerful courage and unwavering constancy and devotion so impressed themselves upon his followers, that they were proud to be called by his name. Others have been so livingly identified with certain forms of government, that this has been the central idea around which the thought and devotion of their followers crystallized. Others have selected some prominent doctrine, and called themselves by that name. With this inscribed upon their banner, they have appealed to their fellow-men, and determined to win their share in the crowning glory of the consummated kingdom of God. Others have determined that a certain form of worship possesses significance enough to form a rallying-point around which its sacred memories can cluster, and definiteness enough to make it intelligently appreciated by those who ask a reason for its being. Our Church was simply called Reformed. It is not Reformed Presbyterian, Reformed Episcopalian nor Reformed Lutheran. The question put to us so often, Reformed what? shows at once a lack of historical information. If an old Israelite would have said, I belong to the tribe of Judah or to Dan, it would have been senseless to have asked him, Judah what? or Dan what? If he would have belonged to one of the smallest tribes, the question would have been meaningless. The air of historical consequence would not have redeemed it from the disgust which it would have provoked.

Dr. Schaff says Reformed, as used in all continental works on Church history and symbolics, means originally, the Catholic Church reformed of abuses or regenerated by the word of God. The name originally was applied to that whole movement of the XVIth century, which liberated Christianity from the burdens which ages of superstition and idolatry had piled upon it. Afterwards, when the unseemly controversy waxed so hot between Luther and the rest of the Reformers, the name Lutheran was assumed by those who took such extreme sacramentarian views. Our name, then, belonged to the oldest Protestant body.

Like the great priest that Abraham met when returning from the slaughter of the kings, we are without earthly father or mother. No king had power enough to lay our corner-stone. No single theologian had wisdom enough to construct our theology. We claim no man as leader, and we acknowledge no man as Lord. There is a sense in which Zwingli, Melancthon and Calvin are our heroes. But one, or all of these, could not have laid the broad foundations on which we have builded.

If it be needful to designate one man as our Reformer, it would be Ulric Zwingli, born A D. 1484, who preached the pure Gospel in Switzerland some years before Luther in Germany. The movement of which he was the head was wholly independent of Luther—that is to say, Luther was in no way whatever, directly or indirectly, the cause or the occasion of Zwingli making a breach with the Church of Rome and adopting the course which he pursued. "Zwingli had been led to embrace the leading principles of Protestant truth, and to preach them in 1516, the year before the publication of Luther's Theses ; and it is quite certain that all along he continued to think and act for himself, on his own judgment and responsibility, deriving his views from his own personal and independent study of the Word of God." *

He began with the fundamental thought, that the pure teaching of God's holy word, was the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice. He left a powerful impression upon his followers, and gave the cardinal points for subsequent Reformed theologians to develop. The foreign theologians, whom the advisors of Edward the Sixth invited to their aid, either belonged to the Reformed Church or were largely under its influence. "The Marian exiles breathed the air and imbibed the principle of Zurich ; while the same spiritual succession has been continued in Puritanism, in English dissent, in the prevailing character of American religion." † In speaking of Zwingli, Beard says : "There is an admirable and cheerful good sense about him, a keen apprehension of the simplicities of piety, a firm grasp of religion on the ethical and practical side. But the sense of mystery does not weigh upon him ; the contemplation of divine things neither excites him to paradox nor awakens him to rapture." This is the spirit that was impressed on the Reformed Church in the beginning, and it has been its ruling characteristic till the present, and must be in all the future. We are members of the Reformed Church on account of

(1) ITS UNWAVERING LOYALTY TO CHRIST.

The Reformed Church has made current some of the most important watch-words that distinguish the theological thinking of these latter days.

Christological and Christocentric—Christ the periphery and Christ the centre—are familiar terms to us, and are fast becoming so to all those who are in the fore-front of the great battle for truth. Forty or fifty years ago these would have been pronounced senseless jargon, the users of which should be banished from the company of earnest thinkers. Our theology has been made to revolve around Christ. As little as the movements of the stars and planets can be explained by making the earth the centre, so little can redemption be understood by making anything but Christ the beginning, the middle and the end. He is the all and in all. By Him were all things made, and He is before all things In Him all things stand together. One of the old confessions of the Reformed Church will be found to contain these words.

The sum of the Gospel is that our Lord Jesus Christ, the true Son of God, has made known to us the will of His heavenly Father, and redeemed us by His innocence from eternal death, and reconciled us to God.

Therefore Christ is the only way to salvation for all who were, who are and who shall be.

Christ is the Head of all believers.

Christ is the one eternal High Priest.

Christ who offered Himself once on the cross, is the sufficient and perpetual sacrifice for the sins of all believers. Therefore the mass is no sacrifice, but a commemoration of the one sacrifice of the cross and a seal of the redemption through Christ.

Christ is the only Mediator between God and us.

Christ is our righteousness. From this it follows that our works are good so far as they are Christ's, but not good so far as they are our own.

Christians are not bound to any works which Christ has not commanded.

God alone forgives sins through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Here already we have the first fruits of that grand, living, Christological theology which has made it worth while for us to struggle on, and, though least among the tribes, to furnish the king who can save the Church from a heartless rationalism. Dr. George P. Fisher says, in his "Church History," p. 576: Into the Heidelberg Catechism, the creed of the German Reformed Church, there had flowed influences from the school of Melancthon, the character of which may be described in somewhat vague terms as churchly and sacramental, in conjunction with influences from a more defined, yet not rigid type of Calvinism. In the writings of the Mercersburg school, the former of these two elements, that which emanated from Melancthon, was once more brought into the foreground. A central position in the system was given to the divine-human person of Christ, by whom, it was taught, not only reconciliation, but a new spiritual life is introduced into the race which in the first Adam fell from God."

ROTHENBUELER—A REPLY.

Your correspondent, L. H. S., inquires, "Who Was Rev. Frederich Rothenbuler?" In reply we refer him to the "Historic Manual of the Reformed Church," by Dr. J. H. Dubbs, page 408, necrology, where we read as follows:

Frederick Rothenbuehler, born Berne, Switzerland, July 29, 1726; died Philadelphia, Aug. 7, 1766. Ordained in Europe, 1752. Pastor of the Ger. Reformed Church, London, England, 1759–'60. Came to America, 1760. Pastor, New York, 1761–'62; Race St. Church, Philada., 1762. Not received by Coetus on account of improper conduct. Organized an independent congregation, and built a church which after his death was sold to the Methodists, and is now known as St. George's, the oldest Methodist church in Philadelphia.

This is evidently the person concerning whom your correspondent inquires, though there is a slight variation in the spelling of the name. Additional information may be found in Harbaugh's "Lives of the Fathers," vol. 2, page 386. In Bishop Perry's "Collections" there are several interesting letters from Mr. Rothenbuehler and his congregation, in which they offer to conform to the rites of the Church of England, if that Church will aid them in the payment of their debt. The result of this application is not known. The publications of the times, as preserved in our public libraries, contain many references to this man, who certainly made his presence felt, both in New York and Philadelphia, during the brief period in which he labored in the American Church. His contemporaries regarded him as a very troublesome man.

The date of his death is given by Dr. Harbaugh on the authority of the records of the church in Philadelphia. It will be observed that the advertisement which your correspondent reproduces was published about one month after this date. I explain the discrepancy by supposing that the advertisement had been inserted in the paper at an earlier date and had been left standing by the publisher, who probably had not been informed of the advertiser's death. ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The 28th Anniversary is past. It was a success. In spite of the disagreeable weather in the morning, between three and four thousand friends of the Home were here and we were glad to greet so many.

There were about 60 ministers present.

The receipts at the Bazaar amounted to about two hundred dollars.

Over two hundred copies of the "History of Bethany Orphans' Home" were sold.

A friend of the Home had provided a number of souvenir spoons. The supply gave out long before the day was over. A few gave orders and they will be supplied. If there are any others who deserve them they can get them by sending orders to the Superintendent. One kind with name of Home and date on costs one dollar. With cuts of Home engraved on handle cost two dollars.

The banners were not all taken along on the day of the Anniversary. Those congregations which were represented and did not get theirs will please notify the Superintendent and he will see to it that their banners are forwarded to the proper places. The banners are free but will be sent at the expense of those who get them.

THE FOREIGN BOARD'S EMBARRASSMENT.

The complications and difficulties of the Board of Foreign Missions seem to be increasing rather than diminishing. The response which the appeal from our missionaries, made to the Church last winter, called forth for two or three months, was reassuring. But a sad reaction has followed, and now the receipts of the Board are insufficient to meet current expenses. The announcement of the inadequacy of the receipts to cover running expenses is certainly coming to be annoying to the Board, whatever may be its effect upon the sensibilities of our Church. We have been struggling to avoid the necessity of curtailing our work in Japan, not to mention our inability to enter new doors of usefulness which God in His providence is, from time to time, opening to us.

A few months since the Board did venture an advance step, when Bro. Moore was asked to enter a Government School of some five or six hundred scholars, as a teacher to a limited extent. Previously these schools had persistently discarded the missionaries, and the entrance of Rev. Moore was regarded as a new conquest, by the missionaries of other churches, as well as our own. In a short time he was enabled to form a private class from among the scholars for religious instruction. He was happy in securing the favor of the Japanese authorities, and the outlook was bright and promising.

When Bro. Moore notified the authorities of his intended visit to America, they applied to our Mission to furnish them a person to take his place in the school. Our missionaries all joined in a petition to the Board to send out another missionary for this purpose. The Board carefully and prayerfully considered the request. But what could it do? With deep and painful regret we were compelled to refuse the request. Quite recently letters have come to hand, written since the refusing word reached our missionaries. To read these letters is painful—it is really distressing. Poor souls, they are almost crushed with disappointment—they are almost disheartened. They are laboring almost beyond their strength, and when they succeed in gaining space for an advance step, the parsimony of the home Church forbids them taking that step. Worse still, the advance step taken in faith, in case of the Government School, they find themselves compelled to retrace. And they are growing discouraged.

Yes, brethren in the Church, we have been compelled to do what we, as a Board, have deprecated in public, and begged the Church to save us from the necessity of doing—we have been compelled to contract, and to recede in our work. We call God to witness that we have begged the Church for the necessary means to hold our own and to go forward. And up to this date a favorable response has been withheld. Is it possible that we must still further contract our work, so as to arrest the increase of our indebtedness? Is it possible that our Reformed Church cannot—no, will not, exceed the average of eight and a half cents, a member, a year, and this sadly small average being contributed by a comparatively few? The majority of our congregations and members are not giving one cent to save heathen souls. "Forasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these, ye did it not unto me."

MISSIONARY NOTES.

BY REV. A. C. WHITMER, SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSIONS.

NO NAME.

Lately $5 were received from "a member" at Middletown, Md., as a harvest thank-offering. We hope he will see this acknowledgment. The Lord reward his well-doing.

A REQUEST.

As the Bi-synodic Board of Missions will by October 1st need about $2000 more than is now on hand to pay the missionaries in full to that date, the pastors are hereby respectfully requested to send to the treasurers of their respective Classes all money for our use as early as possible; and the latter will please promptly send in to treasurer W. H. Seibert all that may come to hand before October 1st. Indeed treasurers should never hold money more than a few weeks.

THOSE WITHERED HANDS.

Our Lord found one man in one synagogue having one withered hand. How many men and women with two withered hands apiece will be found in each of our churches next Sunday?

The average church-member of to-day does not appear to realize that he has hands. He prays "Thy kingdom come, amen!" and that is the end of it. Instead of making it his business to give effect to his own prayer in so far as his personal efforts can do so, he leaves the hands of his spiritual nature unoccupied and they become withered for want of exercise.

Nobody has inherited hands spiritually dead. Those whose spiritual faculties are benumbed must lay the blame on themselves, for they have brought themselves to that condition either by inactivity or by indulgence in some improper self-gratification. Thus, if a man is known to take an occasional glass of whiskey he cannot with a brother who has the same or some other failing. Such a man is therefore hindered from doing the good he might do—in other words, his hands are withered. It is a spiritual law just as truly as it is a law of our physical nature that a faculty which is not exercised loses its capacity for work.

As we reflect on these things let us remember that the Great Physician is as able and as willing to heal spiritually withered hands to-day as He was to heal the physically withered hand of that poor man in the synagogue so long ago. It is only necessary to listen to His command. "Stretch forth thine hand" and then stretch it forth to do His work. He will give us power for service of some kind whenever we are willing utterly to forsake the sin which has deprived us of that power and to place ourselves freelyat His disposal.

ALL CALVINISTS BEFORE GOD.

Religion on earth finds its highest expression in the act of prayer. But Calvinism in the Christian Church is simply that tendency which makes a man assume the same attitude towards God, in his profession and life, which he already exhibits in his prayer. There is no Christian—be he Lutheran or Baptist, Methodist or Greek—whose prayer is not thoroughly Calvinistic; no child of God—to whatever Church organization he may belong—but in his prayer he gives glory to God above and render thanks to his Father in heaven for all the grace working in him, and acknowledges that the eternal love of God alone, has, in the face of his resistance, drawn him out of darkness into light. On his knees before God, every one that has been saved will recognize the sole efficiency of the Holy Spirit in every good work performed, and will acknowledge that without the atoning grace of Him who is rich in mercies he would not exist for a moment, but would sink away in guilt and sin. In a word, whosoever truly prays ascribes nothing to his own will or power except the sin that condemns him before God, and knows of nothing that could endure the judgment of God except it be wrought within him by the divine love. But while all other tendencies in the Church preserve this attitude as long as their prayer lasts, to lose themselves in radically different conceptions as soon as the amen has been pronounced, the Calvinist adheres to the truth of his prayer, in his confession, in his theology, in his life, and the amen that has closed his petition re-echoes in the depths of his consciousness and throughout the whole of his existence.—Presbyterian and Reformed Review.

ELEMENTS IN THE BIBLE.

In a recent discourse, the Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, of Rome, N. Y., mentioned the divine and human elements in the Bible, as follows:

Truth itself is always one and the same. But, as men apprehend it, it is progressive. All sciences are alike in this. None are stationary. Calvinism may not be presumed to be at the top, even though it be the brightest hill-top we can see. I should be sorry to be in a church where progress is impossible, where creeds could not be criticised and revised. Creeds are all human. The Bible only is divine. Even the Bible has a human element in it. Just what that element is, the best friends are not agreed about. But, sure as man exists, wherever there is a human element, there is fallibility of some kind. Until somebody can prove that God superintends a printing press heaven and sends Bibles by some air-shute to earth, we must admit that our Bibles are liable to mistakes. The human part of our Bible had to be revised once in our day, and will be again if the world shall stand long—and that not to weaken it, but to strengthen it. Creeds have always been forming and breaking up. That process will go on while the world stands and man continues but a pupil here at school. The substance of the Bible only is changeless, for that alone is God's word. In just what sense it is God's word will continue a subject of differing opinion and dispute and inquiry among men.

TRUE YOKEFELLOW.

This is what Paul calls some one who had labored with him in Philippi. See Philippians iv. 3. Some commentators tells us that the Greek word here translated "yokefellow" is a proper name, but this the adjective prefixed to it seems to forbid. Paul was not in the habit of calling his friends the true Luke, or the true Clement, but simply by their names. And his departure from that custom here, and the appropriateness of the adjective to the noun as a common one satisfies me that he referred to somebody who had worked with him as closely and as truly as matched oxen or horses work in a yoke. Who this true yokefellow was we are not told, and need not try to know. But the fact that Paul had such a yokefellow is suggestive.

Of all the men in the Apostolic Church, no one seems to have been so well adapted to work in single harness as the apostle to the Gentiles. He was a man of eminent ability, of varied culture, of great decision, and of indomitable energy. Yet we find that he nearly always had some one with him as a special companion and fellow-laborer. At first it was Barnabas, then Silas, afterward Luke, and finally won Mark, who was the cause of his separation from Barnabas. See 2 Timothy iv. 11. Does not this fact point us to a principle that seems to run through the Bible? In Eden God established the home on the sexual duality of the race. The woman and the man were yoked together as helpmeets. The man was to go out, in his individuality, from the home circle into which he had been born, and cleave unto his wife, so that they twain should thenceforth be one. And when God appeared to deliver the Hebrews from bondage he initiated a dual ministry—that of Moses and Aaron. When Christ sent out the twelve and afterwards the seventy, He sent them two and two. He did this in harmony with what he had inspired Solomon to write, "Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their labor; for if they fall the one will lift up his fellow, but woe to him that is alone when he falleth."

It is a noteworthy fact that animals have been worked in pairs ever since they were trained to work at all. The yoke in all the old languages means union as well as submission. The idea is not service merely, but serving together. The duality of humanity has thus been extended to the brutes, and it has been found that two oxen or horses, if well matched, will do more than twice as much as if they worked separately. But the animals in a team must be matched, and they must be true yokefellows. If one is stronger than the other or quicker in movement than the other, or is baulky, they only fret and worry each other and their driver. And it is so with yokefellows in domestic life, in business and in Christian work. Paul's adjective must go with his noun every time or there will be discord and the saddest of failures. What can be more trying than to be yoked with an uncongenial partner—with one who always wants to go when you want to stop, to work when you want to rest, to eat when you are not hungry, and to sleep when you are not sleepy? We have seen oxen who have pulled apart just as far as the yoke would let them; and there are people who are like them. Unequal yoking fills our divorce courts with business, but there are thousands of cases that don't get into the courts which are even sadder than those that do—cases where meek and patient women endure a lifelong slavery as galling as any in Africa or China.

The yoking of men and women for work is in one respect unlike that of animals. The matching is not so much that of equality as of contrast and complement. The sexes are yoked together because they are unlike. Two men or two women can not make such a home as one man and one woman can make. Each can do something in and for that home which the other can not do at all, or can not do as well. And it is so in work outside of the home. Partners in business should not have the same special tastes and talents. In a mercantile house one should be a good buyer and the other a good salesman. In a law firm one should be a good counselor and the other a good pleader, etc. And this applies also to Christian work. Moody and Sankey went together over Great Britain and America drawing thousands to the churches and to Christ because one was a good talker and the other a good singer. With a great purpose in common and "gifts differing," they were true yokefellows.

Our Presbyterian Church in its form of government recognizes this law of duality. Our Presbyteries and Synods and our General Assembly are composed of an equal number of ministers and elders. The ministers bring to the Church judicatory their special training in theology and exegesis. The elders bring their more practical knowledge of human nature and the world, acquired in the office, the store and the workshop. Thus they are admirably fitted for efficient co-operation. Let them be true to each other and to the cause of Christ, and the result will be as wise in all cases as it was in Detroit a few weeks ago.

But the co-operation of the minister and the elder is valuable in the local church as well as in the higher courts. Let them recognize that they are ordained to work side by side in the Gospel yoke—that each has his own side, and should not trespass on that of his yokefellow—that they are to be in full accord, and yet each is to act in his own sphere; let them avoid that temptation to jealousy which is so insidious; let the minister not try to boss his elders, or the elders try to run the church and the minister. Then our system will be as perfect in practice as it is in theory.

The adjective "true" had, I doubt not, a two-fold meaning in the mind of the great apostle. The nameless yokefellow was true not only to him personally, but also to the cause that both were seeking to promote. A pair of oxen or horses may be true to each other, so that when one steps the other will also, and yet both may be unfaithful to their owner and to their work. There must be, in an ideal team, both mutual sympathy and fidelity. Husbands and wives should love each other in the Lord. Partners should work together honestly. Ministers and elders, while seeing eye to eye, should have an eye single to the glory of God. How sweet it will be when we go into the upper sanctuary to have some golden-crowned saint meet us and say, "Welcome, true yokefellow! You toiled with me faithfully on earth, now enter with me into the joy of our Lord!"

The Family.

"I WILL LIFT UP MINE EYES UNTO THE HILLS."

When petty cares my heart oppress,
With all their weary bitterness,
And all my soul seems growing
A home where low ambitions dwell,
Where envy lurks, suspicions swell,
I lift my eyes unto the hills,
And dream of wild flowers blowing!

Of happy fields where golden-rod,
And sweet pale asters sway and nod,
'Mid graceful, waving grasses;
Where tender leaves are floated down,
And fleecy clouds are lightly blown,
And care and doubt are put to route
By every wind that passes.

Once more I breathe, my soul expands,
And stretches upward yearning hands
With love and longing glowing;
It climbs the steepest mountain height,
Beyond the clouds that dim our sight,
And reaches the eternal hills,
Where flowers for aye are blowing.

Oh, toilers on life's arid plain,
Beset by disappointment's pain,
Where tears are ever flowing,
Lift up your eyes, your help is there,
Where all is strong and pure and fair;
For God's own thought is crystallized
In every wild flower blowing.

AN EVERY-DAY QUEEN.

"Helen."

"Yes, mother. I'm coming."

With a sigh of discontent Helen laid aside her book and tied on an apron.

"Eating, eating, eating. How tired I am of it all. It seems as if the whole work of the world turned on eating. It is the first thing in the morning, almost the last thing at night, and all the way between. If only I could stay here and read, instead of muddling about in that kitchen."

No one else would have used the term in reference to Helen's quick, neat-handed movements about her work. Still, her heart to-day was less in it than usual, as her mother soon perceived.

"You're not going to put on the sliced peaches in that dish, dear?"

"Why not, mother?"

"I always think fruit looks so much prettier in the high glass dish. I supposed you thought so."

"So I do, mother," said Helen, bringing the dish. "But, after all," she added, with a little impatience, "what's the use of making such a fuss about the way things look for the short time we sit at the table? It seems to me contemptible, sometimes, the hours and hours we spend getting ready for eating—hours that might be so much better spent."

Her mother looked at her with a smile, half of amusement, half of surprise.

"What would you do without it, Helen? Even you, with all your higher ambitions, could scarcely get along without eating."

"No, I am sorry to say, I suppose I couldn't. But I would be glad to do with a crust and glass of water if I could have the time to study and fit myself for better things."

"And what would your father and brothers do?"

"O, of course, they would never put up with any such thing. I feel out of patience, sometimes when I see them coming up to dinner. Just to eat, eat, eat. Now, confess, mother, don't you think yourself there is a great deal more trouble than necessary made about cooking?"

"I have no doubt there is, Helen, in some quarters. But when we remember that the Lord has made us as we are, dependent upon the eating which you hold in such lofty disdain, I cannot feel that it is such a trifling matter."

"O I don't mean to despise necessary food, mother. But how far we go beyond what would keep us alive."

"Perhaps so. Perhaps not so very far beyond what serves to keep us in the best, heartiest life. If eating were intended merely to keep us alive, I scarcely think we should have had such a wide selection. Bread and meat would do that, but how many other things the loving Lord has made for His children! Would the bounteous earth have given us such riches of fruit and vegetables, if it were a thing to be despised that we should enjoy them?"

"You are beginning to crowd me rather closely, mother," said Helen, with a smile, as she took the lettuce leaves she had been about to throw away and laid them as a garnish around a dish of salad; "still I can not help wishing that I might be one of those for whom some other duty had been laid out than this everlasting round of house-work."

Mother shook her head with a serious look.

"There are thousands and thousands of girls all over the land, yes, all over the world, Helen, to whom it is laid out to do this same housework which troubles you. It is not in many respects exactly the work which many would select if they had the choice, but you must remember that very few have the choosing of their life-work. And as that is so, and there is so much housework to do and so many who must do it, would it not be far better to bring it up to a standard of sweetness and dignity, instead of trampling it as low as we can and then spending much useless regret upon our inability to rise above it and escape from it?"

"Go on, mother."

"If you give a little thought to it, my daughter, you will see that there is much in it to call forth the best in a young girl. It is a loving ministering to those we love. Just so far as we bring our best endeavors to it, making home sweet and attractive, so far shall we elevate our work and ourselves."

Helen set down a meat dish to make her mother a bow.

"Thank you, ma'am. You'll be making me think myself a queen next."

"I don't know any better queen, dear, than the queen of a bright, happy home—made so mainly by her own efforts. Success and happiness, say I, to the house queens all over the land, and may they grow to be more and more awake to their royal privilege."—Congregationalist.

WOMAN'S TEARS.

Stop, think a minute, dear reader, and answer to yourself whether we do not hear a great deal less about woman's tears than we did a few years ago. Time was when a girl could hardly be looked at sternly but she would burst into tears; every disappointment, little and big, caused a flow of tears; every burst of enthusiasm started the lachrymal glands into activity.

The woman of to-day weeps but little. She is too earnestly engaged in fitting means to ends, in overcoming obstacles, in accomplishing well laid plans, to have time to spoil her face with crying. Does anything untoward befall her? She begins to ask at once: "What shall I do about it?" and forgets to cry, Does a rush of emotion sweep over her? She says to the waves: "Thus far and no farther," and holds herself firm. Instead of fainting at the sight of blood, she has learned to aid in binding up wounds, in tying severed arteries, in setting broken bones, and often asks no help from any one in doing these things. She has learned to think on her feet in the presence of an audience, to keep tremors from her voice and fear from her heart, in seeming at least. With all this we cannot see that the mother of to-day is any less tender than the mother of the last generation. Instead of wringing her hands if some untoward accident befalls her child, she sets to work to repair damages in the best way, and to secure herself from trouble in the future. If she must feed her child instead of nursing it, she is careful as to quality of food given, the times of feeding, the hours of sleeping, the garments worn and their suitability, and her love expends itself in practical ways rather than in mere rapturous sentiment.

We have never been able to discern any difference between boys and girls in infancy with respect to readiness to cry. A boy baby will cry as quickly at the puncture of a pin as a girl baby, and louder, because he is generally stronger in the lungs. But as soon as he can walk and fall down he is taught not to cry, and this teaching is continued all the way to manhood. The same teaching applied to girls would produce similar effects, and if not so great as in the case of the boy, would certainly aid them in gaining control of their relatively stronger emotional nature.

There is a time to weep as there is a time to laugh and do everything else, but there is great loss of energy when the weeping comes at the wrong time, or when it is permitted to interfere with duties to be done, burdens to be borne, responsibilities to be discharged.

Repression deepens the channel of feeling. Perhaps because he so clearly perceived this, Bayard Taylor wrote:

"The bravest are the tenderest,
The loving are the daring."

SATURDAY NIGHT.

There is a restful sound about the mention of Saturday night.

To the rich man who lolls around all the week, trying to make the slow hours pass somehow, it may not mean much; but to the man who works ten hours a day for six days out of the seven it has a significance. It means rest. It means going to bed without setting the alarm-clock so it will ring out and get the house astir at five o'clock.

To the busy toilers in our factories and workshops Saturday night comes as a blessed relief—a break in a weary monotony.

The loose ends of the week's work are gathered up. The housewife sets her goodly array of eatables in the cupboard, and thinks, "To-morrow I will rest."

She draws her basket of mending toward her with inward satisfaction, and darns the stockings and sews on the buttons with a sense of relief. She will rest to-morrow! The children will put away their toys and their school books, and gather round the fire to read the weekly papers and look at the pictures.

Saturday night! No more work for thirty-six hours! Thirty-six hours of sixty minutes each! No more money-making, no fretting, no business cares, no trying to make books balance, no scanning of stock reports—nothing but rest!

The farmer looks about his well filled barns and over his growing crops, and hangs up his scythe in the apple tree by the grindstone, and pays his hired man his week's wages, and congratulates himself that another week is over.

He is tired; he has worked hard; his brow is wet with the sweat by which it was said of old man should eat his bread. He has earned the rest which is coming.

He puts on a clean shirt, combs his wet locks, and sits down to a supper which labor has given him the right to eat, and the ability to eat without killing him with indigestion. And the way the viands disappear is a sight to make a dyspeptic howl with envy.

On Saturday night our friends drop in, and talk over the news, and tell us what is in the papers, and compare notes on the weather, and give us a detailed history of the way Aunt Maria had the toothache, and what the dentist said, and how Uncle John had an attack of cholera morbus, and what cured him.

And we urge them to stay longer, for it is Saturday night, we tell them ; and we walk down to the gate with them, remark on the beauty of the night, and wonder if it will rain to-morrow.

And we go to bed, tired, but happy, and reflect that we can lie in bed just as long as we please, for to-morrow is Sunday, and Sunday is the day of rest.

SPEAK NAE ILL.

Other people have their faults,
And so have you as well ;
But all ye chance to see or hear
Ye have no right to tell.

If ye canna speak o' good,
Take care and see and feel
Earth has all too much o' woe,
And not enough o' weal.

Be careful that ye make nae strife,
Wi' meddling tongue and brain ;
For ye will find enough to do
If ye but look at hame.

If ye canna speak o' good,
Oh ! dinna speak at all ;
For there is grief and woe enough
On this terrestrial ball.

If ye should feel like picking flaws,
Ye better go, I ween,
And read the Book that tells ye all
About the mote and beam.

Dinna lend a ready ear
To gossip or to strife,
Or perhaps 'twill make for ye
Nae sunny things of life.

Oh ! dinna add to others' woe,
Nor mock it with your mirth ;
But give ye kindly sympathy
To suffering ones of earth.

GOING AFTER FIRE.

"Tell us a story, grandma," pleaded Jennie, "of when you's a little girl."

"Yes, grandma ; or when you lived in the woods, and heard the bears howl at night," said Edna. "I wish I could see one—a real live one."

"I never saw but one live one," said grandma, "and that was one morning when I ran over to our neighbors to borrow some fire."

"Borrow fire !" cried the children together.

"Yes," laughed grandma. "You know so long ago they didn't have any matches. There were none made then. If we let our fire go out, we had to borrow some. Mother usually covered up a heap of big knots deep in the ashes overnight. On raking them open in the morning, there would be a bed of coals to begin the day.

"But one night, late in the fall, the knots did not burn, and there was no fire to get breakfast. I was the oldest—about as big as Edna. Well, mother pinned a wool blanket over my head with a thorn, for we didn't have many pins. Giving me the little iron fire-kettle, she bade me be spry, for the children were hungry.

"Well, I got my kettle full of bright coals, with a blazing knot on top. I ran off through the frost, the wind keeping the coals and knots all ablaze.

"When I got about half-way home I heard a crackling through the thick bushes. Almost before I had time to stop, a great, black bear ambled out into the rough, narrow road. I was so scared that I dropped my kettle flat on the ground and stared at him. And he stared at me, sticking his long nose out toward me, sniffing and snuffling.

"But he didn't like the smell of the burning knot, and the next moment he leaped out of the path and went crashing off through the bushes.

"I didn't stop for the coals, but, scooping the knot into the kettle, I fled toward home in a great panic. A little time after that, father and Mr. Noble, our neighbor, caught the bear in a trap, and father had a coat made out of his skin."—Our Little Ones.

ELSIE AND ARCHIE.

Elsie is five years old and Archie is four. This is their first winter in America. Their mother had many times in India told them stories of the daisies in America and the wonderful snow. One of Archie's first questions in coming to America was, "Is this 'Merica ?" And oh, how delighted he was one morning to run into the house with the cold, white stuff he had watched dropping down out of the sky ! And when he slipped down on the ice, he said, "There's tumble-ice out there."

Last summer the daisies were a constant delight. He could not pick enough of them. One day, Elsie and Archie were sitting on the stairs talking. They love to talk to each other.

"Elsie, are there flowers in heaven ?"

"Many flowers, very many," said the little sister.

"May I pick all I want ?" the little fellow asked anxiously.

"If you ask Jesus first. They all belong to Him."

"Mamma," Elsie asked one day, "shall I be tired in heaven ?"

"No, dear, you will never be tired in heaven."

"But I think I shall, when night comes, picking so many flowers."

One reason that Elsie and Archie loved to talk about heaven is that before they came home to America they had a little sister Jean whom they loved dearly ; one night they kissed her good-night, and in the morning when they asked to see her and kiss her good morning, mamma told them she had gone to heaven to stay always with the dear Heavenly Father.

There is a little mound in India covered with flowers that they call "Baby Jean's garden."

One day Elsie said, "Archie, if you go to your Heavenly Father before I do, you can tell Him all about me and what I pray about, because you know all about me."

Then grandma thought, "That is like Jesus ; He tells our Heavenly Father all about us, you and me, for He knows all about us."

Last night Archie was left alone in bed. He said, "Heavenly Father stays awake all night ;" so he was not staying alone.—The Morning Light.

JOHNNIE'S ORATION.

"Got your speech ready for Friday, Johnnie ?" asked a school boy.

"No," said John.

"Well, I have. You'd better hurry up."

"Pshaw ! what's the use ?" asked John. "You see, a speech for Friday isn't just like lessons that a fellow ought to learn. Ever so many things may happen, so that I shan't have to speak at all. Visitors may come in, or some other boy may recite something real long, so that there won't be time for me. I shan't bother. Maybe I'll go out in the country that day, and then if I learned anything it would be of no use. I'll wait till the time comes."

John waited, but he did not go to the country ; the other boys chose short declamations, and Friday morning was so cloudy that there was no prospect of company. At noon John was in a state of desperation. He flew here and there about the house in search of something that would answer his purpose. Uncle Jack gave him a book of old dialogues and orations, but before he could learn more than a line or two it was school time.

The others spoke, but John listened without hearing much, and when his own name was called he walked across the floor with a very bewildered feeling. Then, staring at the ceiling, he leaned against a post in the center of the room. Mr. Grey would not accept excuses ; John knew that perfectly. He put his hands in his pockets and looked at the boys, pulled them out again and looked at the clock ; then he began confusedly :

"My name is Norval. On the Grampian hills —my name is Norval. On the Grampian hills my father feeds his—his—name is Norval."

"Runs in the family, that name does," slyly whipered a boy near him. The others began to laugh, for they all knew how grandly John had talked of not taking any trouble.

Mr. Grey began to look curiously over his glasses, and John knew that something must be done ; so he suddenly said ; "I don't know much about Norval, but I know something about industry, so I'll talk about that :

"Industry is a good thing to have ; it's better than luck. If a boy just trusts to luck, it may not turn out as he expects, and then he gets into trouble. If a boy is real industrious, and gets ready for things, why—he's ready. If the man that invented the telegraphing had waited for luck, I don't suppose there'd have been any messages sent yet. Boys, be industrious ; get ready for things beforehand, and don't wait till the time comes."

John bowed and sat down, and the boys applauded heartily.

Mr. Grey, who did not understand the matter so well, hesitated a moment, but finally said : "This address seems to be original, and I suppose we must judge it leniently on that account, though it is very imperfectly prepared. There is some valuable truth in it, however, which the speaker himself may profit by : 'Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well.' Or, rather," he added, more seriously, "there is a better motto still that I should like to give you ; 'Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men.' That will prevent all shams and careless work."

The boys thought John had escaped wonderfully well ; he was certain of one thing—that if he had not learned anything to recite, he had learned something else that day.—Kate W. Hamilton.

Pleasantries.

"Do you believe man sprang from the ape ?" "No ; but I believe woman springs from the mouse—in fact, I've seen her."

Mrs. Pettish—"I'm afraid you won't do. As nearly as I can find out you have worked in six or eight places the past year." Miss Mary Mahoney—"Huh ! and how many gir-r-rls has yurself had in the same time ? No liss, I'm thinking."

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1891.

No doubt all of us remember the sad occurrences connected with the death of Rudolph, the heir apparent of the throne of Austria. The brother of the Emperor has two sons, neither one of whom, it is said, is fit in the estimation of the people generally, to take his place when he is called away by death. When the time comes it will be difficult to fill the vacancy, unless another Maria Theresa steps forth, and serious complications may arise at no distant day, when the imperial house of the Hapsburgers shall have lost its prestige among the people. Most probably it is by the decline of ruling families in Europe that Providence is preparing the way for the revolution in Europe now manifestly going forward, by which the supreme power is descending to the people, and at the same time elevating them to a higher plane of intelligence. Neither religion nor the Church will suffer any harm by the change, from monarchical to free institutions. It will benefit them both immensely.

SPIRITUAL RECIPROCITY.

It is no doubt a matter of regret to learn that there are failures in the crops of certain parts of Europe—a shortage—but it must be highly gratifying for us on the other hand, to know that out of our own abundance, with our surplus, we will be able to supply the wants of many people in foreign countries this year, thus keeping them from extreme suffering, or it may be, starvation. This is an illustration of our mission as a nation, to become a blessing more and more to the world at large. But we may hope that it only points to something still higher and better. If we can supply other nations with temporal food, earthly bread, we can, and as we ought, likewise supply them with the bread of eternal life, especially pagan people. We have made a beginning in this kind of spiritual reciprocity, but it is only a beginning, and we can do much more. Let the good work go on under the gladdening beams of the Sun of Righteousness.

NAMES AND PATRONYMICS.

It is a remarkable fact that family names as well as the names of individuals had not only a meaning orignally, but that to a large extent they express the spirit, genius or character of the race of people in which they sprung up. The children of Israel were of all other nations religious in their tendencies, and the thought of the true and living God was always uppermost in their minds. Their names accordingly have a characteristically pious import, indicating trust in God, dependence on Him, or love for His character, as the author of all things. Many of them embody His name in one form or another. Thus from Jehovah or Elohim we get Joshua, whose help is Jehovah; Jonathan, whom Jehovah gave; Jehoshaphat, whom Jehovah judges; Joel, Jehovah is His God; Samuel, heard of God; Michael, who is like unto God? Nathanael, the gift of God; John, whom Jehovah loves; and many other of kindred signification. The name last mentioned has entered into all of our modern languages, and been variously modified, so as to suit the ears or the tastes of the people. Thus selecting a few out of the many Johns, we have Johannes, Jahn, Jans, Jansen, Johnson, Johnston, Hannes, Hans, Hansen, Hensen, Hansel, Hensel, Henselor, Hanneman, Hanke, Henne, Grosshans, Langhans, Kleinhans, Joanna, Jean, and so on to the end of the chapter.

The Greeks although a truly religious people in their way, were predominantly idealistic in their life and this shows itself in their beautiful names, many of which end in cles, signifying glory. Pericles signified very famous; Sophocles, famed for wisdom; Themistocles for justice; Callietes, for beauty; Cleophanes, radiant with glory. Their reverence for God manifested itself in the names commencing with Theos, God, such as Theodotus, Theodorus, Theophilus, Theophrastus, Theocritus, Theodosia, Theodota, Theodora and so on.—The Romans on the other hand were preeminently a practical and realistic race, as prosy as the Greeks were poetical, as may be seen at once in their vocabulary of names. Their ancestors were an agricultural people, and in this respect favorably distinguished among the ancients. Hence their patronymics. Agricola meant a farmer; Fabius, a bean; Lentulus, a lentil; Cicero, a pea; Piso, a vetch; Porcius, a swineherd; Niger, black; Rufus, red; Flavius, yellow; Livius, blue; Longus, long; Paulus, little; Crassus, fat; Macer, lean; Calvus, cabbagehead; Capito, thickhead; Claudus, the lame; Plautus, the flat-foot; and Balbus, the stammerer. The poverty of inventive power in finding graceful names among the Romans rises to a climax when they called their children Secundus, Tertius, Quintus, Sextus, Octavianus, or the second, the third, the fifth, the sixth and the eighth. Whatever we may think of such names, it must be remembered that the old Latin people were good farmers, and that their agriculture lay at the foundation of their social life and of their greatness as a people in the history of the world. Further, whatever odor must must be encountered in connection with the origin of their names in the barnyard as in Porcius or Asinius (Esclzüchtu), it must be admitted that many of this brave race made their humble names very illustrious, the brightest in the firmament of history. All this goes to show that such names as Ochs or Teufel do not necessarily bind the individual to the animal creation or the world of darkness. And so too, Scriptural names will not of themselves make any person like Abraham, Moses, Samuel, David, Solomon or Daniel, and yet those who bear them ought to strive to be like them in spirit at least. It involves a misnomer, in fact a desecration, to bear such titles, if they involve a broad contradiction to our characters.

GRATITUDE.

Gratitude is one of the noblest instincts of our human nature. It is something spontaneous, and if it springs up of itself when we receive favors at the hands of our fellow-men, how much more so should this be the case when we come to trace them back to God, who gives us all our friends, and is, in fact, the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Gratitude involves thanksgiving, the exercise of love, and a sense of responsibility to Him as the Author and Giver of all our blessings and gifts. As these come down to us for the most part only as we work and labor, it follows that we all should cultivate habits of industry and economy. Every person should occupy his time in doing something useful. We have often seen aged people, in declining strength, who were always doing something useful about the house or on the farm. Children, also, having had enough playtime, should be required to do some kind of work, so as to cultivate in them habits of industry. It is right that people should make as much money as they can, provided they get it honestly, and do not set their hearts upon it, laying it by for the benefit of their families or of the community. It is the love of money, not its acquisition or possession, that is the root of all evil. But whilst our obligations to God require us to be active in things pertaining to this life, it should be much more so in things pertaining to the life to come. Here more than elsewhere we should be active, ardent, and faithful workers. The child Jesus when He was in the temple, only twelve years old, said that He must be about His Father's business. That is a lesson for all alike. We are the stewards of God in His Church, His husbandry here on earth, and much remains to be done in the spread of His kingdom on earth, at home and abroad. Here there is work for every one to perform, and the allotted time for each one of us to work is short. Hence let all together work while it is called to-day.

COME AND SEE.

The psalmist in his famous forty-sixth psalm calls upon the people of his nation to come and see the works of the Lord. There was much in their previous history that was eminently worthy of their attention and prayerful consideration. His language, however, may be applied with equal force and propriety, in fact even more so, to the inhabitants of this country, and, we may say, of the entire western hemisphere. In the year 1893 representatives from all parts of the earth, Europe, Asia, Africa, Oceanica and of this western continent will meet at Chicago to celebrate the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus in the year 1492. It is meet, right and most proper that this should be done on such a magnificent scale. No merely secular event in all past history has ever exerted such a salutary influence upon the destinies of nations as the discovery of this continent, four hundred years ago. The hand of God was in it most manifestly throughout. Columbus had many enemies to encounter who denounced him as a mere dreamer; but he also had some intelligent and powerful friends, a few at least, who at length obtained for him an audience with the King and Queen of Spain. Queen Isabella possessed enlarged views of the subject, and she could see that, whilst a new world would add to the glory of Spain, it would be another field for the spread of Christianity among savage and benighted nations. She therefore pledged her jewels, most costly and rare, to pay the expenses of the expedition, and Christopher, with his three small vessels, was soon far out on the ocean, on his way, as he supposed, to the Indies. Up to this time the great navigators had never gone far from land. Boldly and heroically he launched out into mid-ocean, with the sun, the stars, and the compass as his only guides; and after much trouble with his sailors, he at length came to land, of which the old world knew little or nothing. In all this the finger of God seems to be so palpably manifest that any one who runs may read its writing on the sands of time. It is consequently very becoming that we, now living on this side of the great water, should say to the peoples of all lands and nations, ourselves included, Come and see the works of the Lord.

HE possesses dominion over himself and is happy, who can every day say, "I have lived." To-morrow the heavenly Father may either invade the world in dark clouds, or cheer it with clear sunshine. He will not, however, render ineffectual the things which have already taken place.—Horace.

For the Reformed Church Messenger.

THE PROFESSORSHIP OF THE PITTSBURGH SYNOD, GREENSBURG, PA.

Sunday, August 16th, was the time appointed by the Committee of the Pittsburgh Synod for presenting the claims of the Theological Seminary, Lancaster, to the membership of the two Reformed churches of the thriving town of Greensburg.

Greensburg is rapidly advancing in population and wealth. During the last three or five years a strong impulse has been given to various branches of industry and trade, due chiefly to the development of the vast deposits of coal in the vicinity of the town and throughout the county of Westmoreland. As a matter of course the growth of population and of financial resources is affecting the churches. Favored with faithful pastors and having many active members who are devoted to the progress of the kingdom of Christ, Reformed churches are increasing in numbers, in ability and in liberal giving.

Services were held on Friday and Saturday evenings in the First Reformed church, of which the Rev. C. R. Dieffenbacher is pastor. Of Friday evening, not having then arrived, the writer cannot speak. On Saturday evening the Rev. D. B. Lady addressed the congregation on the importance of an educated ministry, the Rev. Prof. J. C. Bowman on the interest of the people in an additional Chair in the Theological Seminary, and Elder Wm. R. Barnhart on the call for large and cheerful offerings to the cause of ministerial education from the membership; the Rev. C. R. Ferner presiding.

On Sunday, Prof. Bowman occupied the pulpit of the second Reformed church in the forenoon, the Rev. D. N. Dittmar, pastor, and of the first church in the evening. Alternating with him, the writer preached in the forenoon in the first church and in the evening in the second church. The general theme was the necessity of strengthening the educational institutions of the Reformed Church, especially the call for increasing the teaching force of her oldest theological school. The attendance was good, and new interest was awakened in the cause of liberal education, as the gifts of the people during the following days revealed.

The brethren Lady, Truxal and Ferner, associated with the pastors and Elder Barnhart, distributed into sub-committees of two or three, visited the members of the two congregations, and met with a cordial welcome.

On Saturday evening in the course of his remarks, Elder Barnhart had said his first thought was to give $100, but added that on further consideration he had decided to make an offering of $500. On Monday forenoon he subscribed this amount. One or two others pledged the same sum. One member drew his check for $600, which was passed to Elder John B. Roth, Lancaster, Treasurer of the Seminary. Several responded by subscribing $100 each; and many by pledging or contributing smaller sums. The final result of the canvass is not known; but the total will be deserving of commendation, and be cheering to the committee of the Pittsburgh Synod, who, without compensation, but with energy, ability and perseverance, and, it may be added, with no little self-denial, are prosecuting their important work.

The consequences of this method of holding Conventions and addressing the membership in a series of discourses on the Theological Seminary touches all branches of higher education. Opportunities naturally arise for showing the close connection of theological with classical training, of the Seminary with Franklin and Marshall College; and the greatness of the educational work which is claiming the serious attention and calling for the liberal offerings of all classes of our membership, ministers and laymen, rich and poor. We may look for other fruits growing out of these labors, fruits which, as "bread cast upon the face of the waters," our institutions of learning will gather "after many days." E. V. G.

THE VALUE OF THE FAMILY ALTAR.

A variety of excuses are offered for a failure to erect the domestic altar, or for the neglect of the morning and evening sacrifice where it has been erected; but in most instances, if not in all, they are excuses only, not reasons. If the plea is a lack of ability on the part of the head of the household, whether a father or mother, the answer is, that all, with rare exceptions, are capable of reading the Bible, and that those who regard themselves as incapable of offering extempore prayer may use a form. They may write their prayers and read them, or they may make use of one of the many excellent volumes that have been prepared for the benefit of this class; and all who have been able to read may unite in the service. But if the excuse is a lack of time, the answer is, "Prayers and provender never hinder the journey." However pressing our work may be, we cannot afford to neglect our daily food; and prayers are no less necessary and important. No man accomplishes more during the year by neglecting family worship. It was Martin Luther, if we remember, who said: "When I have an unusual amount of labor to perform during the day I spend more than the usual length of time in the morning in prayer." But this was the wise and reasonable course. If it were necessary to do more than the ordinary amount of work, he had more than his ordinary need of the divine blessing, and if he would secure this he must be willing to take more than the ordinary pains to obtain it.

But those who neglect the worship of the family altar do so because they have no adequate conception of the importance of a faithful discharge of this duty. The family altar should be conscientiously maintained, not only because it is by the discharge of this duty that the blessing of God upon the family for the day is secured, but also for the sake of its influence upon the household. It is an educating process in a spiritual sense which no household can afford to neglect. It is needed by the parents, and it is needed by the children. And if there are domestics, or boarders, or visitors, it is needed by them. And though they may not understand its value and refuse to avail themselves of its benefits, the knowledge that family worship is regularly maintained will leave an impression. It will prove to them a spiritual educator. In many instances the immediate influence is very marked. Visitors who have not been accustomed to this exercise, during a stay of a very few days, or even of a single day, have received impressions which have led to their acceptance of Christ. But the importance of the family altar is to to be measured, not by its immediate results, but by the influence exerted during a series of years. Its quickening and restraining power is felt by the adult members of the household, and to the young it is prominent among the home influences by which the character of the future man or woman is molded. For a day or for a month its formative influence may not be perceptible, but during a series of years the impression becomes deep and abiding.

Parents and other heads of families who live in neglect of this obligation make a very grave mistake. They wrong their own souls and they wrong every member of their households. No one can afford to live without the family altar, so far as relates to his own spiritual interests, and to do so is to neglect a most important means of doing good to others.—The National Presbyterian.

Poetry.

A CRY.

A cry, as of pain,
Again and again,
Is borne o'er the deserts and wide-spreading main;
A cry from the lands that in darkness are lying,
A cry from the hearts that in sorrow are sighing:
It comes unto me;
It comes unto thee;
O, what—O, what shall the answer be?

O! hark to the call;
It comes unto all
Whom Jesus hath rescued from sin's deadly thrall:
Come over and help us! in bondage we languish;
Come over and help us! we die in our anguish.
It comes unto me;
It comes unto thee;
O, what—O, what shall the answer be?

It comes to the soul
That Christ hath made whole,
The heart that is longing His name to extol;
It comes with a chorus of pitiful wailing;
It comes with a plea which is strong and prevailing:
"For Christ's sake" to me;
"For Christ's sake" to thee;
O, what—O, what shall the answer be?

We come, Lord, to Thee;
Thy servants are we;
Inspire Thou the answer, and true it shall be!
If here we should work, or afar Thou shouldst send us,
O, grant that Thy mercy may ever attend us;
That each one may be
A witness for Thee,
Till all the earth shall Thy glory see!

We may compare the Bible to the Tabernacle with its three courts. "Daily," only, He saith to thee,
"Take up thy cross and follow me."

AN ELECTRICAL BRAIN-TESTER.—An apparatus for measuring brain effort has been made by Mr. J. L. Balbi, who suggests that the arrangement might be made to point out the proper studies for children, or those which can be pursued with the least work and greatest profit. In the center of a headgear of some light heat-conducting material he places a thermo-electric pile, which is connected by flexible wires to a sensitive galvanometer. The slightest rise in temperature due to rush of blood to the head is indicated by the galvanometer, the effect, of course, increasing with the intensity of the mental work.

A fruit of any kind is regarded morphologically as a changed branch. A branch may have several whorls of leaves, and thus the calyx, corolla, stamens and pistils represent several theoretical whorls of leaves on a branch; and the same is true of the formation of fruit. In this way is explained the well-known phenomena of an orange within an orange; the branch has not been thoroughly arrested in its growth, and two whols have had a chance in the transformation. But this explanation has never accounted for the rind of the orange. It is now said that the rind represents a lower whorl on the arrested branch which forms the orange.

The recent action of the Governors of Kieff, Polia and Volhynia, in Russia, requiring all foreigners to become naturalized citizens, which involves becoming members of the Orthodox Greek Church, or leave Russia, if carried into effect, will practically extinguish the Baptist churches in Russia, as nearly all of the twelve thousand Baptists in that empire are Germans, and resident in these provinces.

A novel plan for extinguishing a church debt has been hit upon in Melbourne, Australia. The total debt is divided among the members of the committee, and each man insures his life for the amount that falls to his share. The policies are transferred to the church, and the annual payments on them are made out of the collections. Then, of course, as the members of the committee "drop off," the sums insured on their lives drop in, and later, when the only survivor dies, the last installment of the church debt is paid.

Hints and Recipes.

PEACH PRESERVES.—Clingstone peaches are good for preserves, as they usually have a high flavor. Peel them and remove the pits; boil these till all the good is out of them with the peeling; weigh the fruit, and put its weight in sugar into the liquid from the peach pits and make a syrup. Add the fruit, a small quantity at a time; cook slowly about ten minutes; skim into a jar, add more fruit, and so on till it is all done, pour the boiling syrup over all. Next day pour off the syrup, boil it down and pour over the fruit. Repeat daily until the fruit looks clear. A few kernels from the peach stones added when the fruit is cooking heightens the flavor.

A CURE FOR RED ANTS.—A sure cure for red ants is powdered cinnamon, strewn in cracks of closets, or wherever the ants congregate. No one was ever more burdened by these pests than I have been; the large black ants being as offensive in number and persistency in following us from house to house as the little red ants, to which there seemed to be no end. In one season the misery of years was, however, ended, and none have visited us since. I also strew powdered clove about; but the cinnamon seems to work the most expeditiously. Tomato leaves will keep them aloof, but they have to be often replenished and are disagreeable in odor.—Good Housekeeping.

HOW TO MAKE COFFEE.—There are numberless recipes for making a good cup of coffee, but perhaps the most delicious product of the bean can be obtained in this way: Take of freshly ground Java and Mocha, in equal parts, one ounce; pour over it sufficient cold water to thoroughly saturate the coffee; then add the white of one egg—together with the shell—and mix well together. This paste is now put into the coffee pot, and boiling water (about one quart) poured upon it. The pot is then placed over the fire, where it is allowed to boil for about half a minute, after which it is allowed to rest for five minutes. The coffee is then ready. It is clear as crystal, and the addition of a spoonful of thick cream, instead of hot milk, with sugar to the taste, make a cup of coffee fit for the gods.

Farm and Garden.

Those who own timbered lands would do well to get out what posts they need as early as possible. Posts and rails split out during summer and piled up to season become very hard, and resist atmospheric influences much better than timber gotten out later.

GREEN CORN FOR DUCKS.—One of the cheapest and best foods for ducks is green corn stalks cut up into short pieces and sprinkled with bran. A few rows of corn may be used for summer feed, and it can be grown thickly in the rows. If cut when it is about three feet high, and cured, it makes excellent food for ducks and geese in winter. Ducks should be raised with little cost in summer. So saith the Mirror's poultry writer, who is good authority.

A CAUTION TO FARMERS.—Intelligence and honesty seems to be the only protection from the lightning-rod man, the Bohemian oats vender and the innumerable sharks who find the farmer easy game. No man is safe who signs his name to a paper in the hands of a stranger, and he should only deal with them by paying cash when the goods are delivered. No farmer should form a partnership with a traveling agent to speculate off his neighbors. If he does, and finds in the end that he is himself the victim he has only himself to thank, and is not deserving of sympathy.—Exchange.

DIED.—In Lancaster, Pa., at 124 South Prince street, August 11, 1891, Mrs. Elizabeth Smaling, aged 86 years, 6 months and 25 days.

The deceased was a native of Lancaster county and lived there all her life. She was a consistent and life long member of the Reformed church and was thoroughly devoted to it, always being in attendance upon the services in the house of God whenever the feeble state of her health would permit. This was always her greatest joy. She possessed a lovely Christian character, being a true servant of the Master. She was highly esteemed by all those who knew her and although leading a quiet life and being of a quiet disposition yet she manifested in her life the true spirit of Christ. One reaching such a ripe old age and being a life-long member of Christ, is well prepared to leave this world for another.

She was thoroughly devoted to her children and grandchildren, and they deeply mourn her departure from them.

Her body was laid to rest at Lancaster cemetery, August 14th, 1891, Rev. Dr. J M. Titzel, of the First Reformed church, officiating. A FRIEND.

DIED.—At his home, July 23, 1891, near Bridgeport Mills, Franklin county, Pa., Elder Peter Shearer, aged 78 years, 11 months and 28 days.

The deceased was a very useful and active member of the Reformed church in Fort Loudon, Pa. He served in the capacity of ruling elder for a period of forty years; and acted as superintendent of the Sunday-school at Bridgeport for more than a generation past. His Christian counsel, his prayers, and his quiet Christian life, were of great value and importance to the community where he lived. Of his moral, Christian character, it can be truly said, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile."

His funeral was largely attended on Wednesday following, when his pastor, Rev. J. Hassler, preached from the words of David, in Ps. 12: 1, "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." H.

DIED.—Lydia Riddle, at Altoona, Pa., August 17th, 1891, of an apoplectic stroke, aged 57 years, 5 months and 13 days.

Mrs. Lydia Riddle was one of the daughters of the late John and Elizabeth Mark of Lebanon, Pa. In her early life she became a member of the old Reformed church at her native place and continued a consistent member until her death. About 1867 she moved to Altoona where she remained about two years when she returned to Lebanon, where she resided until September, 1890, when she came to Altoona again to undergo a successful treatment for a rheumatic affliction. She recovered sufficiently from this to be actively at work again. At the time of her death she was keeping house for a family of this city. Commonly known among her friends as "Aunt Lydia," she always manifested a most cheerful and pleasant disposition. She endured her affliction with patience and without a murmur. On the ninth day after being taken with the stroke she died. While in Altoona, during the past year, she attended all the services regularly at Trinity Mission church, whenever she could. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor of this church at the home of Levi Snyder.

BETHANY ORPHANS' HOME, WOMELSDORF, PA.

For Reformed Church Messenger.

ANNIVERSARY OF BETHANY HOME, WOMELSDORF, PA.

BETHANY DAY.

The anniversary of Bethany Orphans' Home was celebrated on Thursday, Aug. 27th, according to announcement. Notwithstanding the threatening aspect of the weather, no less than 66 ministers of the Reformed church with about 3000 of its people assembled to participate in the festivities of this occasion.

It is with proud satisfaction that we note the fact, that the peculiar influence of this charitable institution, for the past thirty years, has enlisted the warmest sympathies of the church—and has been helpful in cultivating the spirit of Christian benevolence in the hearts of the people.

A strange spell comes over the visitor as he enters these grounds, consecrated to Christian charity in caring for the physical, intellectual and spiritual well-being of the orphan. With feelings akin to that inspired when entering a grand cathedral, the reverent heart is prompted to say as it sets foot upon this consecrated soil of the church, "How holy is this ground." As the visitor approaches the main building which was erected in 1881 on the very spot where the former building that was destroyed by fire stood, he is confronted with the sight of another building, erected in fine architectural taste, standing to the left, which has been named by the Board of Managers Santee Hall, in grateful recognition of the fact that Mr. Charles Santee, of Philadelphia, has contributed $7,000, or the one-half of the cost of its erection. It is supposed that it will require an additional $4,000 to furnish the hall and to put up all the modern conveniences, which are absolutely necessary for the proper management of such an institution.

Santee Hall, standing in close proximity to the main building, will be the girl's department. When fully completed there will be enlarged facilities to accommodate an increased number of orphans, affording the church an opportunity of seeking a place for the shelter and Christian training of its homeless children.

As we sat on the veranda and watched the approaching trains unloading the crowds of visitors that subsequently eagerly wended their way to the Home, we felt like according them a cordial welcome.

Among the crowd we noticed many familiar faces. To many of them this has become a Mecca—a religious camping-ground—where sundered friends often chance to meet to exchange friendly, Christian greetings, and where under the hallowing influence of prayer and praise the spiritual bond is strengthened—that binds kindred hearts in warm Christian fellowship.

As the weather for the past week, up to the very morning of the anniversary, partook of the character of "clouds and tears," the flags at the Home were at half mast. Instead of white dresses the girls had on their ordinary garments, and instead of the new grey suits, the boys had on weather-boarded pantaloons. The gay and festive holiday dress was laid aside for the Sunday service—the children, however, were neat, tidy and clean. They behaved well, looked bright and rosy, and consequently, made a very respectable appearance on this their festal day.

The accustomed platform, and the spacious amphitheatre, neath the ample shade of forest trees, had to be abandoned, on account of the condition of the ground, flooded by recent rains.

A temporary platform was erected to the left of the spring for the accommodation of the clergy, the orphans, the union choir and the speakers.

For the protection of the audience from the rays of the sun, an improvised awning was constructed with pieces of unbleached muslin. The afternoon became warm and sultry, and beneath the awning quite a number of the audience felt as though they were in an evaporator.

BETHANY DAY.

A new epoch has been reached in the history of Bethany Orphans' Home. With its anniversary is to be blended what will be known as Bethany Day. It is to be in the form of an annual picnic—a gathering of the people of the Reformed churches of Eastern Pennsylvania—similar in character to that of Pen Mar and Idlewild, in the southern and western part of the State. On account of this combination the programme was more varied than on former occasions, and yet of such a nature as would tend to the development of a clearer consciousness of our own peculiar church life.

We were favored with the services of a union choir composed of material from different churches under the leadership of Revs. Profs. Krebs and Coon. With such material there was volume and force and dignity added to the influence and power of Christian song.

The programme was as follows:

An opening song, sang by the orphans.

Invocation by Rev. S. N. Callender, D.D., Superintendent of Board of Foreign Missions.

Hymn, "How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord."

Reading of 23rd Psalm, by Rev. J. B. Henry, Norristown, Pa.

Seraphic hymn by the Union Choir.

Prayer by Rev. J. W. Santee, D.D., Cavetown, Md.

An address of welcome by Gussie Bright.

Introductory address by the presiding officer, Rev. John H. Sechler, Philadelphia.

An address, "Bethany Day," by Rev. B. Bausman, D.D., Reading, Pa.

A duet, "Scattering Seed," by two orphan girls.

Recitation of a poem by Thos. Harner.

A brief report, Rev. T. M. Yundt, Supt. of Orphans' Home.

A musical selection by the Union Choir.

The gathering of the offerings.

Address in the German by Dr. E. Keller, Zionsville, Pa., subject, "Growth of the Reformed Church and History of Bethany Orphans' Home."

A song by three orphan girls.

An address by Dr. D. E. Klopp, of Lebanon, Pa., subject, "The Reformed Church, her origin and special mission."

A solo, by Rev. C. H. Coon, "Jesus Pilot Me."

A motion song by nine orphan girls.

An address by Rev. L. K. Evans, of Pottstown, Pa., subject, "The Pennsylvania Germans and the Reformed Church."

Hymn, "Sun of my soul, Thou Saviour dear."

Impromptu addresses by Revs. J. W. Meminger, W. F. More and O. H. Strunck.

Hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

Closing with doxology and benediction.

We could not attempt to tell the many good things that were said and done in the execution of the above programme. To be fully appreciated it must be heard and seen. Suffice it to say that Bethany Day will be annually observed, and no place for the time being seems to be so appropriate as that lying neath the shadow of Bethany Orphans' Home. The trend of the addresses in connection with these anniversary exercises was to give more significance to our Reformed life, and to stimulate the Reformed people to more faithful work for the Master and to nobler deeds of Christian charity.

The Board of Managers are to be highly commended for the faithful manner in which they are providing for the interests of this institution, and in so wisely dispensing the charities of God's people. In noble deeds of charity they have been in the lead. Ten acres of woodland lying in the rear of the buildings, extending up the mountain in a southerly direction have been lately purchased for $500, and the funds for the payment of the same were provided out of their own pockets. This ground is needed on which is to be constructed a reservoir to supply the building with clear fresh mountain water. Their praiseworthy deed is a challenge to greater liberality on the part of the church to meet the growing demands of this worthy institution. There is a present deficit of nearly $900, and it will yet require $4,000 to complete and properly furnish Santee Hall. Let none forget the needs of this institution in his prayers and his offerings. The Home had made ample provision to meet the wants of all its guests. The proceeds realized in meals, sales, offerings, and donations aggregate about $1104 31.

The thanks of the Church are due to all the faithful workers and volunteer help that assisted in this great work, and also to the energy manifested by the Superintendent to make this occasion a success.

A "MISSIONSFEST."

Once a year almost every one of our German congregations celebrated a missionary festival. One or more ministers are invited to deliver sermons and addresses, and the pastor loci's work is to secure a good audience. The whole Sunday is spent in and around the church, special provision being made for meals. In their sermons the ministers try to awaken a missionary spirit in their hearers by impressing upon them what Christ did for us, and what we may do for Him. Special collections are taken, and to these are added contributions of the benevolent societies, laid up during the year for this purpose. In all, the offerings generally amount to from one hundred to five hundred dollars.

Such a festival was held on August 23rd, near Clay City, Indiana, in a country church, Rev. W. H. Wittenwyler, pas-

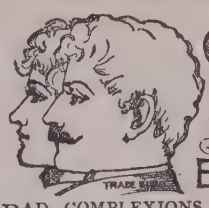
What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.



How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS OF THE REFORMED CHURCH OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

The idea of holding a Ministerial Conference in Western Pennsylvania seemed good to many ministers who for sufficient reasons could not attend the Spiritual Conference at Lancaster. Accordingly a few ministers prepared a programme, fixed a place and date, and notices were sent out and published, that the Conference would be held at St. Paul's Orphan Home, Butler, on August 25 to 28, 1891.

It was with the greatest delight and satisfaction when the time arrived, and we got together at the Home, to find how many we were, and what a good time we were having. This being the first meeting of the kind in Western Pennsylvania, and the notice given at such a late date, caused many to have misgivings that the attendance would be very small, and the enjoyment and benefit not very great. But we are glad to record that we have been most agreeably disappointed. Taking everything into consideration, the attendance has been large. The papers read were all carefully prepared, full of thought, and abounded with inspiration and instruction. The place of meeting could not have been better. The Home is in every way most excellently adapted for such a meeting. All who were here testified to this. The spacious rooms of the Home, the beautiful lawn and grove surrounding it, and the kind and bountiful entertainment of the Superintendent of the Home and his family, all contributed to make our sojourn here one continual round of pleasure and comfort, while the papers read, with their consequent discussions, and the devotional exercises, afforded us the spiritual and mental help that we all needed just at this time, when about to begin and renew active work for another fall and winter.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. S. S. Miller, on Tuesday evening, from the text, Psalm 119: 130. The theme of the sermon was, "The Spiritual opening or illuminating power of God's Word as it leads up to the Incarnate Word."

On Wednesday morning, devotions were conducted by Rev. S. C. Long. A paper was read by Rev. W. Rupp, D.D., on "The Inspiration of the Bible." In the evening, the Superintendent of the Home delivered an interesting lecture on the "Past History and Present Condition of the Home."

On Thursday morning devotions were conducted by Rev. H. S. Garner. A paper on "A Review of Prof. Alexander Winchell's Pre-Adamites," was read by Rev. J. H. Prugh. That evening a prayer meeting was held in St. Paul's Reformed church. The lecture was delivered by Rev. A. M. Keifer on "Likeness to Christ."

A paper was read by Rev. J. M. Schick, D.D., on "The Ministry of the Word."

On Friday morning devotions were conducted by Rev. S. T. Wagner. A paper on "Can we Improve our Method of Placing Pastors," by Rev. A. E. Truxal."

The Conference then held a farewell meeting, at which addresses were made by different ministers.

Business meetings were held at different times during the Conference. An organization was effected by electing the following officers: Rev. J. M. Schick, D.D., president; Rev. S. S. Miller, vice-president; Rev. E. S. Hassler, secretary and treasurer. These officers were constituted an executive committee to arrange for the next year's conference. The name agreed upon is, "The Conference of Ministers of the Reformed Church of Western Pennsylvania."

The Conference adjourned finally at noon on Friday. A hymn was sung, the Apostles' Creed repeated in union, together with the Gloria in Excelsis and the Lord's Prayer, and the benediction pronounced by the vice-president.

Thus closed our first conference. It was a season of great physical, mental and spiritual refreshment.

The following were in attendance either during the whole, or during part, of the Conference: Revs. W. Rupp, D.D., J. M. Schick, D.D., C. R. Dieffenbacher, D.D., P. C. Prugh, D.D., S. S. Miller, D. G. Klein, D. N. Harnish, S. C. Long, J. H. Prugh, S. T. Wagner, A. M. Keifer, C. Knepper, D. A. Souders, H. S. Garner, A. E. Truxal, D. N. Dittmar, C. A. Limberg, T. S. Land, H. E. Snyder, E. S. Hassler, and Laymen B. Wolff, Jr., P. Keil, Prof. E. Mackey, J. T. Hamilton and A. O. Eberhart. E. S HASSLER, Sec.

A MISSIONARY SERVICE.

(Any of these Services may be used in the Sunday-school on Missionary Day; and with a little adaptation they may be made very effective.)

1) Opening Sentences.

In His days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth.

For He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also and him that hath no helper.

He shall live, and to Him shall be given of the gold of Sheba.

Prayer also shall be made for Him continually, and daily shall He be praised.

His name shall endure forever.

His name shall be continued as long as the sun.

And men shall be blessed in Him.

All nations shall call Him blessed.

Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things.

And blessed be His glorious name for ever.

And let the whole earth be filled with His glory.

Amen and amen.

For I know that the Lord is great.

And that our Lord is above all gods.

The idols of the heathen are silver and gold.

The work of men's hands.

They have mouths, but they speak not.

Eyes have they, but they see not.

They have ears, but they hear not.

Neither is there any breath in their mouths.

They that make them are like unto them.

So is every one that trusteth in them.

Bless the Lord, O house of Isral.

Bless the Lord, O house of Aaron.

Bless the Lord, O house of Levi.

Ye that fear the Lord, bless the Lord.

Blessed be the Lord out of Zion which dwelleth at Jerusalem.

Praise ye the Lord.

2) Hymn.

"O Christ, Thou glorious King."

3) Prayer.

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the glad tidings of the Gospel which we enjoy, and for all the blessings of our salvation. We thank Thee for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, for the establishment of Thy Church and for the precious means of grace. We thank Thee for Thy Word and for the office of the holy ministry, by which its sacred truths are proclaimed unto us. Make us deeply feel our duty to send this Gospel to others. We ask forgiveness for our past omissions and careless performance of duty, and humbly beseech Thee to quicken us to greater zeal and diligence in promoting Thy cause in the world. Give us grace henceforth diligently to employ our talents, our means and our influence in extending Thy Church. And we pray Thee to bless our efforts and the efforts of Thy people everywhere, that soon the knowledge of the Lord may cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. To this end bless our own Church. Increase her earnestness. Awaken her liberality. Pour out Thy Spirit upon her ministry and people, encouraging the hearts and strengthening the hands of Thy faithful servants, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven. And all the glory shall be unto Thee, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

4) Scripture Lesson, from Ps. 15: 1–18; Is. 11: 1–16; 35: 1–10; 40: 1–11; 44: 9–20; 55: 1–13; 60: 1–14; Matt. 28: 16–20; Acts 17: 16–34; 2 Cor. 8: 1–12; Eph. 3: 1–21. (Or any lesson may be read antiphonally.)

5) The usual programme.

6) Hymn.

7) Prayer.

8) Closing Sentences.

Leader. And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

Society. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

Leader. Peter, standing up with the eleven, said, This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel:

Society. It shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Leader. Now when they heard this they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

Society. Then Peter said unto them: Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Leader. For the promise is unto you and to your children.

Society. And to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

Leader. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

Society. And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved.

9) Lord's Prayer and Doxology.

THE MARYLAND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Mr. G. S. Griffith, President of the Maryland Sunday-School Union, has just returned from his annual visit of inspection of the Sunday-school work on the Eastern Shore. Such visits over the State are productive of much encouragement to the schools already established, and materially aid in the effort of organizing new schools in the rural districts, and thus stimulate the missionary spirit to higher and more pressing movements.

"The good work of the Maryland Sunday-School Union is widely acknowledged and has obtained decided prominence in Sister States and different nations. This is certified to by the many letters received from abroad asking information in regard to its methods, means of support and general system of management, thus showing that it is worthy of notice and imitation.

"No other State in the Union can show such a large percentage of its population on the Sunday-school records as Maryland. Our of our population of 1,042,990 as many as 247,000 or 23¾ per cent., including the officers, teachers and scholars, are gathered into the Sunday-school ranks, a much larger army than all the secular, private and public schools of the State can exhibit. During the past year 16,994 members were brought into the different churches through the Sunday-school teaching. This is a larger addition from the Sunday-school work than any other State can show in proportion to her number of inhabitants. Mr. Griffith says from the information gathered from interviews with the different pastors and Sunday-school workers, and from his own observation he is favorably impressed with the work that is being accomplished in the towns, and especially in the country towns, where there are from five to nine schools in each place.

"He found much interest manifested by the different clergymen and superintendents in the Sunday-school operations. They seem wide awake and fully abreast with our city methods and in practical results, yet there is room for an advance in many of the schools to promote the cause. There should be more thorough and earnest preparation of the lesson to be taught by the superintendent and teachers, and also a more punctual attendance of the teachers. Visitations by the teachers is a very important feature, but too often neglected. They should become acquainted with the surroundingss, parents or guardians of their scholars, in order to gain more fruitful results. The teacher's visit to the children is like the pastor's to the family, it brings them nearer together, makes them familiar with their temptations and dispositions, creates a greater interest in their welfare and has a benign influence."

Mr. Griffith was especially well pleased with the Sunday-school work in Centreville. They have nine schools, including those for the colored people. I attended one of the teacher's meetings connected with the M. E. church. There were ninety persons present; the pastor, the Rev. V. S. Collins, presided. They were instructed in the lesson to be taught on the following Sabbath, the subject was ably handled and all seemed deeply interested, and the questions were promptly answered. In the rural districts the schools are not so progressive and the attendance is not generally as it should be. They need more teachers and more punctual attendance.

The Maryland Sunday-School Union furnishes, as far as practicable, all the books and necessary appliances to establish new schools and the Rev. George H. Nock, the Sunday-school organizer, and other missionaries have done a good work on the Eastern Shore as well as in other parts of the State, in arousing a more active spirit in the effort of gathering in the sheaves. They visit from house to house, distribute good reading matter, preach the Gospel and labor in every way to build up the cause, through Union meetings, Institutes and County conventions. It is proposed to hold county conventions in each county of the State during the fiscal year.

The Union has also the services of one colored missionary, appointed to labor among his own race, who has done an effective work. A decided improvement has been noticed among many of this class within the last few years. They have followed in the footsteps of their white brethren, and have a higher standard or improved methods of management and instruction. They use the International Lessons; but there is still one impediment very detrimental to their progress, that is, the camp meetings which draw away the members. They close their schools for two or three weeks and thus disorganize them, and it is very difficult to get them back to the same order and attention. The promise is made

Plum Roll

BY MRS. S. T. RORER,

Add one teaspoonful of Cleveland's baking powder and a half teaspoonful of salt to one pint of sifted flour. Sift again. Rub in one tablespoonful of butter, add sufficient milk to make a soft dough. Roll out, sprinkle with one cup of chopped raisins and a half cup of chopped citron. Dust with cinnamon, roll up and steam for thirty minutes. Serve warm with hard sauce.

Use only Cleveland's baking powder, the proportions are made for that.

by a number of members to have this defect rectified.

TALBOT COUNTY.

They have recently held a Sunday-school Convention at Oxford, which was successful.

At St. Michael's they are also prospering in their Sunday-school work.

At Trappe, ten miles from Easton, they have five Sunday-schools, including those for the colored people. All are doing well and have good attendance. This we learned from the Rev. S. C. Highle and from my own personal observation.

Accompanied by Rev. Lewis F. Zinkhan, a member of the Board of the S. S. Union, we passed a most delightful Sabbath day at the beautiful town of Easton in the prosecution of our Christian work. Our attention was given to the colored schools in the morning.

The Asbury Sunday-school registers 220 scholars, and the African Methodist also has a large school, both are kept open morning and afternoon.

By invitation of Rev. J. W. Trout, the M. P. minister, we attended his school in the afternoon; they have 220 scholars. After the close of the International Lesson we were invited to speak; there was quite a large and attentive gathering. Afterwards we went to a meeting of the Ladies' Temperance Union. Being invited by the ladies, who have accomplished such a noble work in their country and town, we gave them encouragement and cheer for their future efforts in the temperance cause.

In the evening Mr. Zinkhan preached at the M. P. church; by request his discourse was on "Christianity and Crime." It was very instructive, striking and eloquent, and held the attention of the audience for nearly one hour.—The Field Record.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Lebanon.—St. John's. Rev. W. J. Johnson, of Baltimore, Md., has accepted a call to the St. John's church, Lebanon, Pa., lately vacated by Rev. George B. Resser. He expects to remove to his new field of labor about November 1st next.

Elderton.—During the month of August the Elderton charge, Rev. William D. Lefevre, pastor, celebrated its harvest home and greatly enjoyed its communion season. The pastor was assisted in two of the congregations by Rev. Theo. L. Crouse of the Lutheran church, Harrisburg, Pa. Twelve persons were confirmed and one received on renewal of faith. The offering for classical and benevolent purposes, in the four congregations amounted to $142.61.

Boyertown.—Rev. J. E. Freeman. Mr. Geo. K. Kaneko spoke in the Reformed Church of the Good Shepherd, Boyertown, Pa., last Sunday evening. He discoursed on the life in Japan and the status of Christianity there. The congregation gave him a present of $18. He was very greatly encouraged. The people were pleased to see, hear and converse with one from Japan. He stimulated the foreign mission spirit among the people. Knowing is a condition for giving.

Shamokin.—In the twenty-third chapter of the Book of Exodus, and in the sixteenth verse, is found the Scriptural injunction, "Thou shalt keep the feast of the harvest."

This is what Rev. C. B. Schneder of the Reformed church and his flock did on Sunday, August 23rd, and in a manner that will ever make it memorable with all who participated. Custom in the Reformed church has established a harvest home festival, but its observance is more strictly confined to the rural districts, where at times very elaborate exercises are held during which the participants acknowledge the greatness of God, tank Him for His abundance and invoke His blessing upon them and theirs. This festival has never been celebrated in Shamokin before by the Reformed people until yesterday.

Rev. Schneder some time ago suggested to his people the celebration of "harvest home," and also invited the church work society to take charge of the decorating of the church. The president of that society, Mrs. E. A. Smith, accepted the trust for herself and her colleagues, and the duty was well performed, exceeding in every way the expectations of pastor and people.

As the harvest home exercises are services of thanks offerings from the abundant harvest with which this land has been blest this year, were brought to the church altar. To give a complete description of the decorations would be impossible. There were fruit from every clime. And not alone fruits, but every thing that grows for man's benefit in the shape of food. Fruits, cereals, grains, flowers and all that we can eat, were arranged in pyramids of ripened fruit, with shocks of golden grain and growing stalks of corn, sugar maples, amid which are plants of richest bloom and choicest perfume; a fig tree bearing fruit at one side, and in the front of the platform a table covered with the ripened productions of God's green earth. One could not fail but give thanks to the supreme arbiter of all humanity at this bounteous and lavish display of His gifts. Involuntary the words would shape themselves "God is good."

Appropriate exercises were held during the day. In the morning the services were in the German language, the pastor taking for his text the 7th and 8th verses of the 6th chapter of Galatians. But the festival proper was reserved for the evening. It is doubtful if the chapel ever held a larger audience than that of last evening, and it is doubtful if Pastor Schneder ever had a more appreciative audience than he had last evening. His text was the words quoted in the first paragraph and his remarks very pointed and pertinent.

Hazleton.—Rev. R. G. Aszman has resigned his charge at this place.

MARYLAND.

Middletown.—Rev. T. F. Hoffmeier. Harvest services were held in the Reformed church, Middletown, Md., at 10 A.M., and at Fairview (Braddock), Md., at 3.30 P.M., on Sunday, August 23rd. At both places chancel and pulpit were tastefully decorated for the occasion with wheat, corn, oats, fruits and flowers. The Middletown choir conducted the singing at Fairview. The pastor preached from Ps. 148: 11–13. The offerings amounting at Fairview to $19.03, and at Middletown to $181.15, were devoted to payment of classical apportionment.

Union Bridge.—Installation of a Pastor. Rev. M. L. Firor, pastor-elect of the Union Bridge charge of the Reformed church, was installed on Sunday evening, August 23rd, at Union Bridge by the committee appointed by the Maryland Classis, consisting of Revs. Calvin S. Slagle, U. H. Heilman and H. Ditzler. The sermon was preached by Rev. Calvin S. Slagle and the installation service was conducted by the other members of the committee. The large and attentive congregation showed a deep interest in the solemn and impressive service. Mr. Firor enters upon his work in the Union Bridge, Baust's, and Haugh's congregations, under circumstances most favorable for the accomplishment of much good.

Baltimore.—Rev. P. H. Wienand has accepted a call to the church in Baltimore, Md., lately vacated by Rev. A. E. Schade.

Convenient lodging, good transportation, railroad and steamship tickets, passes, etc., can also be secured through the aid of our missionary. Address,

PAUL SOMMERLATTE,
30 State Street,
New York City, N. Y.

WE depend a good deal, in our life rulings, upon the names by which we call things. If we do not class a temptation, among our temptations, we are very apt to be entangled in its folds before we know it. Indeed, it is a part of the Tempter's art to prevent our seeing the temptation in temptations. We are often restrained from wrong doing by the fact that we feel ourselves being tempted. We shun deceit, lying, theft, and a score of well recognized sins, because we realize in them the power of the Tempter. But these temptations that more nearly affect our outward conduct among our fellows are in no wise so subtile and so dangerous as those which are more essentially personal and spiritual. The temptations to doubt, distrust, and reject God steal over us before we are aware that we are in the Tempter's hands. We are tempted to think of God's mercy as unfairness or injustice, of his love as wrath, and to set ourselves up as judges of what God has or has not a right to do. Every occasion of suffering, loss, sorrow, ought to be regarded as the peculiar opportunity of the Tempter. But such temptations are correspondingly to be regarded as divine opportunities given to us to witness for Christ.—Sunday School Times.

SMALL THINGS.—Living to Christ in small things, and living for Christ every day is the secret of large fruitfulness. A peach-tree or an orange does not leap into a bounty of fruit by one spasmodic effort; an orchard does not ripen under a single day's sunshine. Every raindrop, every sunbeam, every inch of subsoil does its part. A fruitful Christian is a growth. To finish up a godly character by a mere religion of Sundays and sermons and sacraments and revivals and special seasons is impossible. A man may be converted in an instant, but he must grow by the year. The tough fibre of the slender branch that can hold up a half-bushel of oranges is very different from a little willow switch; it is the steady, compacting process that makes the little limb like a steel wire. Such is a healthy and holy believer's life. Every honest prayer that is breathed, every cross that is carried, every trial that is well endured, every good work for our fellow-men lovingly done, every little act that is conscientiously performed for Christ's glory, helps to make the Christian character beautiful, and to load its broad boughs with "apples of gold" for God's "baskets of silver."—The Examiner.

"Turned Upside Down"

Is your home in this sad plight—many are and house-cleaning does it. Cold meals and no comfort, sour tempers and aching backs, hard work and too much of it, tired women and "mad" men—all from house-cleaning. And it's all needless. Don't make such a fuss over it. Take a little Pearline, and have it done easily, quickly and quietly. You'll have it done better, too—you won't have to rub the paint off to get the dirt off. You can save half your labor and half your time, if you'll clean house with Pearline—and everybody in the house will be thankful for it. Millions use nothing but Pearline for washing and cleaning

Turn the Key On the peddlers and grocers who tell you "this is as good as," or "the same as" Pearline. IT'S FALSE; besides Pearline is never peddled. 307 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Get tough glass chimneys.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" are tough against heat; they do not break, except from accident.

They are also clear, transparent, not misty or milky; they fit and stand upright; shape and proportions are right to direct the draft upon the flame.

They cost a little more than rough and wrong chimneys of common glass that break continually.

Editorial Notes.

—Reader, will you do the Publisher of the MESSENGER a favor by looking at the tab on your paper and see if you are in arrears for it or it is time to remit for another year? If you owe for it, will you not remit the amount at once, as funds are needed to pay obligations that are constantly accruing? There is a must in the case and it applies to debtors to us as well as to those to whom we are debtors.

—As a return for our patience and forbearance some of our subscribers who owe for their paper for more than two or three years, upon remitting amount due also add, "Please stop sending paper when time of subscription expires." An effort to collect what is long due us results in our losing a subscriber; but who is the greater loser? Is it not the subscriber?

—By reference to the Program of the Third Annual Convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip to be held in Baltimore, September 25th–27th, given elsewhere, it will be seen that the committee has made full arrangements for the meeting and also ample provision for the entertainment of those who may be in attendance. There is no doubt the great interest anticipated will be shown and felt in the proceedings of the convention and in the growth and prosperity of the Brotherhood. The members of the local Chapters will do their utmost to give a warm and generous welcome to the visitors and doubtless the coming convention will mark a new era in the history of the organization, which is rightly claimed to be Reformed and is devoted to the interests of the young men of the Church of Christ. A correspondent gives a brief elaboration of the work of the Brotherhood and the character of the exercises that will be held in connection with the Convention.

—The August number of The College Visitor which is devoted to the interests of the Catawba College, Newton N. C., contains the Alumni address delivered by Major S. M. Finger at the Commencment of the College last May. Major Finger in his address traces the history of the early settlement of North Carolina and what led to the establishment of Catawba College, and step by step unfolds the history and progress of the College itself and makes a strong plea to the community in which the College stands, to the Alumni and to the Church at large for liberal contributions to the endowment fund of the College which has an honored history and has many sons and daughters through that section of our great country who are in their pursuits in life reflecting honor upon their Alma Mater. Properly endowed the College can enlarge her usefulness and take rank with other institutions that have not such a history as she, but have been more liberally remembered by those possessed of a due share of this world's goods. It is to be hoped Major Finger's address will be largely circulated and read, so that the claims of the College and through her, that section of the Reformed Church may be properly encouraged and enabled to go forward.

—On other occasions we have alluded to the needs of North Carolina in the way of pastors for their long vacant and neglected charges and have even suggested a remedy for such a condition of affairs. And in that suggestion we are well aware we have not the full concurrence of all, still we gain our purpose in part if we but start a consideration of their needs, which may result in the adoption of a way by which they may be supplied. We have received by private letters the thanks of some of the brethren of North Carolina for the attention we have called to what to them is an important, yea a vital matter. And why should not the Potomac Synod in a regular and constitutianal way provide means by which ministers could be trained on the ground for work there? Would it not be far better to do this than is now the case, young men studying privately with pastors there, or upon graduating from the College, with little or no theological training, being licensed and ordained to the sacred office of the ministry? Several fields are and have been for a long time pastorless and almost despair of ever securing a pastor. One of these is the congregation at Newton, the seat of the College. Several attempts have been made to induce men to come to them from the North but none of them seem to be willing. Who will be willing to say, "Here am I, send for me." We are sure he will receive a warm welcome from the people of Newton, and will find an enlarged field of usefulness. With the matter of theological differences buried far enough out of sight by all concerned and the interests of the Reformed Church the sole and only aim, we venture to predict that some one, worthy and able, will be found ready to take up the work there and be the instrument of doing a good work for our beloved Church in the town of Newton and other localties in that State.

—The Reformed Church is, as all Churches ought to be, a Church of order. She is governed by a constitution in which is laid down very plainly the manner in which her affairs are to be managed, and also how new things, for her welfare and progress are to be organized or instituted. In order that her institutions of learning may be properly conducted and supervised, Boards are created to have their affairs in charge, and in like manner Boards of Publication are appointed by her judicatories to have in charge the publications of the Church, and thus the periodicals and books which these Boards publish and send out bear the imprimatur or authority of the Church. Hence, publications issued by private parties have not the sanction of the Church, and are, in consequence, unauthorized and have no claims upon her membership. It may, therefore, be taken for granted that there is something wrong when a paper, for instance, is not published by her authority, and assumes that which does not belong to it when it claims to be devoted to the interests of the Church.

—To apply the above, it may be said, the eastern portion of the Church has only one English paper, THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER, which is the oldest of all the periodicals of the Church, now in its fifty ninth year, published by the authority of the Church through the Eastern Board of Publication. It has the right to expect that it should receive the full support of those within the bounds of the three Synods, especially as it speaks as their official organ. And more than this, the three Eastern Synods, Eastern, Pittsburgh and Potomac, through their common Board of Publication have entered into a contract with its present publisher, who upon the lease granted him by the Board is to pay a certain percentage upon receipts and, as will be seen by reading the extract from the contract at the head of the last column of the ninth page of the MESSENGER, the Synods in turn are not to endorse or publish any other, but give it their full support. Strange to say, in the face of this obligation of the Synods, which in the nature of the case binds every minister and their congregations to the same, a number have encouraged and allowed agents of a private paper to enter their congregations and secure subscribers for it, which is an open endorsement of another paper and which is in violation of that contract, and has the effect to injure more or less the property of the Synods, which the MESSENGER undoubtedly is to this day.

—In the light of the above, the question is, do not the Synods owe it to themselves to call the attention of pastors and others to the terms of the contract and of their moral obligation to carry them out to their full intent, so that the Synods may, if for nothing else, reap an increased revenue from the leased publications, since they receive a percentage therefrom? In doing this, unauthorized and purely private publications will be frowned down upon and not be allowed to interfere with the regular and legitimate ones of the Church. The lessee or publisher is expected to fulfil to the letter his part of the contract, and no one can say he has not done so, but have the Synods through all the ministers within their bounds, fulfilled their part? Verily, no publisher of an unauthorized paper could secure a single subscriber if he has not the aid and encouragement of the pastors of the congregations in which it has a circulation. Brethren should think on these things, and see the wrong and at once seek to rectify it. The recommendation of such a paper surely does wrong to the members themselves, since a wrong is thereby encouraged and they are not receiving the recognized paper of the Church. The MESSENGER aims to meet the wants of the Church, and no one will say it does not do so. Hence all should be true and loyal to it, so that it may extend its usefulness and be the means of helping forward the Church, of which it has for more than half a century been the official mouthpiece.

Poetry.

DO HIS WILL.

If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine.—John 7: 17.

Amid the schoolmen's wordy strife
I bend my pained and wearied ear,
With all its quickened sense attent,
Some surer, safer voice to hear.

My unskilled hand seeks not to wield
The critic's scalpel, keen and cold—
To touch unbid the jostling ark—
Nor yet the scales of judgment hold.

I dare not mark my brother's path—
I know not what his work may be—
Enough to hear the Saviour's call—
"Come thou, leave all and follow Me."

And so I take His gracious word;
I trust for all I may not see;
Thro' every dark and stormy way,
I know His hand is holding me.

In learned tomes I've sought for light,
And found myself in cloudland still—
The shorter way I fain would take,
And do from day to day His will.

NOTES.

"We believe it to be capable of exact demonstration that Methodist churches cannot thrive without two well-attended Sabbath services." —The Christian Advocate.

And yet it is an open question whether or not two full church services on the Lord's day are required by the normal order of things. In this country there are few Protestant congregations so large that they could not be accommodated in their house of worship at a single service a day. If this were done, then the other half of the day could be devoted to a grand Sunday-school service, in which the old and the young might alike take part, and might make it what scarcely any of our Sunday-school sessions now are, in the way of efficiency of study and devotional worth.

We also believe that many Reformed churches can thrive and do thrive without two Sabbath services. The same may be said likewise of many churches in other denominations. The necessity for two services on a single day is largely an artificial one, now established, and difficult to change. Circumstances had something to do with it, and the peculiar ways adopted by the Methodist Church as a body struck hands with these circumstances to bring it about. To save their interests, other Churches have been forced to fall in line, whenever they are in the presence of the Methodist Church, or of the methods evoked by it. Illustrations of this statement we have seen ever so often.

"The American college, says Prof. W. W. Goodwin, differs from the German university especially in this fact:

"By retaining the bachelor degree as the necessary goal toward which all must strive—a degree which it is no honor to gain but a disgrace to lose—it assumes a responsibility for the scholarship of each student which is purely an English tradition and wholly foreign to the spirit of a German university.""

The foregoing paragraph has been having free course in the newspapers. We quote it for two reasons. The one, because we do not believe in the assertion that the bachelor degree in our American colleges is "a degree which it is no honor to gain, but a disgrace to lose." It is a disgrace to lose it by negligence in study on the part of the collegian, and it could scarcely be that if it were not an honor to gain it. Irrespective of that consideration, however, it is an honor to gain the bachelor of arts degree from a college which makes the curriculum of studies, without proficiency in which it cannot be obtained, what the idea of a liberal education in the old, well-understood, sense really involves. It is the dilly-dallying with too many things and proficiency in nothing which tend to degrade the bachelor degree, and all other degrees.

The other reason for quoting the paragraph is to emphasize the statement that, "By retaining the bachelor degree as the necessary goal toward which all must strive" the American college does "assume a responsibility for the scholarship of each student." It is well for college authorities to bear this responsibility constantly in mind, and it is all-important for the student to know and appreciate it. He does not stand independently, at liberty to study little or much. The college is a full partner with him in his own advancement, responsible as much as himself, while he is its pupil, for his success or failure. That gives it authority and rights which students are at times inclined to forget. That responsibility has an inherent claim to stand out prominently.

Of the late International Council of Congregationalists in London the Rev. Dr. Wolcott Calkins has the following to say in the Christian at Work:

"It was not a council at all. It was an International review, or parade, or a maneuver; but it was in no sense a council. From beginning to end there has not been a question debated, nor a vote taken on any serious question, nor any deliberation. It was not a deliberative body. It was simply an assembly of Congregational ministers, with a few laymen from all over the world, to hear, with much applause, the reading of papers prepared at a distance, and without consultation, on a series of prescribed topics. Readers of these papers as published will know what the Congregationalism of some score or more of individuals may mean. But as far as any decisive expression of the congress as a whole on any one of them, no trace of it can be found.

"In a word, the great London Council has turned out to be a meeting to read and listen to lectures. It has cost about $70,000 merely to get itself assembled; the cost to the generous hosts who have entertained it can hardly be estimated. Such an experiment ought to lead to a successor which shall be a deliberative body with definite results."

"Definite results!" It is far more easy to talk about them than to accomplish them, in so far as all Pan-something bodies are concerned.

WHY AM I REFORMED?*—II.

BY C. CLEVER, D. D.

Much of the so-called Christian thought of the past has been cold and heartless. The chilling influences of Deism and Agnosticism have percolated into every sphere of church life. Christ has not even been thought of as walking on the shore, in darkness, when the angry winds from the desolate shores of doubt are vexing the deep on which the Church of God is sailing. He is hidden in the clouds. He is not held in sympathetic touch with tempted and tried humanity. Many a hungry soul might justly say: "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." If not this, they can say: "Who shall ascend up into heaven to bring Christ down? or, who shall go down into the deep to bring Christ up?"

If they have not put Him in the heavens, and thus exalted Him so far above men that He is totally indifferent to them, they have not gone with Him beyond the cross; they are still lingering there. They are listening to the awful groans; they are watching the terrible darkness that is gathering over the earth, and trembling as the rocks and hills are shaking upon their broad foundations. Reformed theology has not been indifferent to all this; but it has gone out of the chill of Good Friday. It hurries forward through the three awful days in which the sanctified body remained in the grave. It caught the life-giving breath of Easter morning, and shouted with a voice that it hoped would girdle the earth and fill the whole heavens, "The Lord is risen, indeed, and become the first-fruits of them that slept."

It is with this living Christ that it deals. It thinks of Him as immanently present among the people, and as ready to distribute to the necessities of the saints as when He walked by the shores of Galilee. He is as certainly speaking to those who can and will hear as when He commanded the disciples to thrust out a little from the land, and poured the beatitudes upon the waiting throngs that lined the shore.

Thought now becomes living. Words about Him and to Him and for Him are instinct with the breath of God. With this key a thousand otherwise impenetrable mysteries are unraveled. Standing securely upon this Rock, a thousand crucial, critical questions are shorn of their terror. The new and living way opened up for sin and uncleanness to the house of David becomes easy and plain. We have found the Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets did write, and the Lion of the tribe of Judah who shall break the seals of the book, and shall direct all the energies of all the centuries in the whole volume of the book of time. The weary eye sweeps the boundless horizon, but finds no place in heaven or in earth where the enlightening and enlivening influence of the Star of Bethlehem is not felt. The true Light has come, and He lightens every man that cometh into the world.

(2) ITS CATHOLIC SPIRIT.

It was our Zwingli who first insisted that infants dying unbaptized should be saved. When he came to make up a catalogue of the saints, he numbered among them Socrates, Plato, Marcus Aurelius and the rest of the heathen world that had lived up to the light that had been granted unto them. When Zwingli began to preach, he loved to expound the gospels, chapter by chapter and word by word. Some of the other Reformers were more interested in the Epistles than in these records of the perfect life. If our minds will ever widen out to that breadth that can believe all things, hope all things and endure all things, there must be a return to the study of the perfect life. One of the latest works to make a sensation, closes with the thought that a new study of the life of Christ will bring men nearer to each other, and nearer to the great problems that clamor for solution in these waning years of the century.

There is no other Church which can so easily fellowship with other Churches as the Reformed. It will reach out the the hand of friendship farther than any other. It will grasp the proffered hand with a heartiness precluding the faintest idea of conventionality. It has no theological crotchets that it imposes on others. It has no shibboleths that have lost the spirit, and the form of which brings into bondage those who try to pronounce them. It has but one creed, short, incisive and pointed, and upon this it insists—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." It could not be Christian without this; from this it will not vary one single hair's breadth; with this it extends a hand of welcome to all who may knock at its doors. It never holds itself aloof from any movement that can be called Christian. It looks with some jealousy upon any effort that will not acknowledge to the full the need of Christ's life and power to reach an end which will be at all commensurate with the needs of sinful men. There are reforms that are simply of the earth, earthy. They do not propose to reach anything beyond the betterment of the present state. While charitably the Reformed people may give these the benefit of the doubt, and may say, with the Rabbi of old : "Let these men alone, for if this thing be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, but if of men, it will come to naught ;" yet they insist that unless men are made Christians they cannot be the sons of God.

It holds that Christianity must touch every sphere of human activity. "There is a breezy atmosphere about this religion. It is meant for every-day use among the affairs of men. Its ultimate object is practical. If it aspires to soar on wings of faith into the heavenly abyss of the divine decrees, it always comes back to earth with a message of innocence and purity and justice between man and man." * The Reformed Church was born in free Switzerland. The mountains were her sponsors, and the fountains and rills flowing from the eternal snowy caps, fashioned and won their nursling with their smiles. Having been blessed with the ideas of freedom, and of that rugged spiritual health, from communion with the great and grand in nature, it went forth to gladden all the earth. It found a home in several important parts of Germany, as the Palatinate, the lower Rhine and in Brandenberg and other provinces of Prussia. But it was yet far more vigorously and fully developed among the maritime and freer nations, especially the Anglo-Saxon race, and follows its onward march to the West and the missionary fields of the East. Every historical student has heard of the Reformed Church of France ; the Reformed Church of Germany ; the Reformed Church of Switzerland ; the Reformed Church of Holland ; the Reformed Church of Italy ; the Reformed Church of England ; the Reformed Church of Scotland ; the Reformed Church in America ; the Reformed Church of the United States. "The Reformed Church had a large number of leaders, as Zwingli, Œcolampadius, Bullinger, Calvin, Beza, Knox, Cranmer ; but not one of them, not even Calvin, could impress his name or his theological system upon her. She is independent of men and allows full freedom for national and sectional modifications and adaptations of the principles of the Reformation." † Viewed in its relation to the mediæval Church, Lutheranism is more conservative and historical ; the Reformed Church more progressive and radical, and departs much farther from the traditionalism, sacerdotalism and ceremonialism of Rome. The strength and beauty of the Reformed Churches lay in aggressive energy and enterprise, power of self-goverment, strict discipline, missionary zeal, liberal sacrifices and faithful devotion, even to martyrdom. It has produced Puritanism, Congregationalism, Methodism, Evangelicalism (in the Church of England), the largest Bible, Tract and Missionary Societies, has built most churches and benevolent institutions.‡ The old mother has remained at home, somewhat circumscribed, practicing the same economy, living in the same simplicity, while some of the daughters have gone out into wider spheres of activity and have attained much larger proportions. The glamour of their triumphs must not blind us to the vigor and virtue and glory of the old homestead from which they came out. Cosmopolitanism is always in danger of spreading too far and wide. It may become a stream, having no banks, instead of consecrating its energies and carrying on its broad bosom the welfare of the world. This same spirit, unless carefully guarded, is in danger of multiplying sectarian divisions. Having but little respect for authority or sacred traditions, private judgment may run riot, and the lessons of history be turned into old wives' tales or cunning fables. But these perils only prove the catholic spirit which underlies the whole movement.

The Reformed Church watches with consuming interest the growth of the Evangelical Alliance. In harmony with the first Council at Jerusalem and the last Assembly of the Evangelical Alliance, it insists that no unnecessary burdens be imposed upon Christians, in order that they may have fellowship one with another. And it could fairly have shouted for joy, when the American branch of the Alliance declared that the divine-human person of Christ and His atoning work are the heart and soul of Christianity. If this broad, catholic, Christian thought can once be livingly apprehended the whole Christian Church, the Reformed branch of it can say, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation which Thou hast prepared before all people, a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of Thy people, Israel !"

THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION.—III.

Reply to A. D P., in "The Lutheran" of May 14th.

THE REFORMED TENDENCY.

The very fact that Melancthon felt constrained to alter the wording of the Xth Article of the Augsburg Confession of 1530, is evidence, that the original article as then interpreted and understood was not satisfactory nor acceptable. The Zwinglian view, though undeveloped had gained influence and it is said "that during the Diet at Augsburg, 1530, the citizens of Augsburg sympathized with him (Z) rather than with Luther." This tendency, the Reformed, finds, for that time, some expression in the Confession of the Four Cities, known as the Tetrapolitan Confession, also called "the Strasburg and the Swabian Confession." It was hastily prepared by Bucer with the aid of Capito and Hedio, in the name of the four cities, Strasburg, Constance, Memmingen and Lindau, for various reasons, as Dr. Schaff says, and was done during the sessions of Augsburg. The Confession has the germ of the Reformed. On the doctrine of the Lord's Supper, "the language is dubious and was intended to comprehend in substance the Lutheran and Zwinglian theories and contains the germ of the view afterwards more clearly and fully developed by Calvin." It must be borne in mind that on this rock Protestantism was in danger of wrecking and the danger became more apparent as these two tendences developed.

The two Confessions, the Invariata, (1530), the Variata, (1540), seemed apparently to move quietly and peacefully side by side, and the "difference was unobserved by Protestants, but observed by Dr. Eck, early in the year 1541. The peace after all was not secure. The embers, for a general conflagration were at hand and all that was needed was to fan them into a flame. That moment came. The attack was made on the Variata, (1540), containing the Reformed tendency, and was made by strict Lutheran divines, such as Flacius and Hesshuss, stigmatizing it 'as heretical and treacherous' and overwhelmed it with coarse abuse." Now commences a fierce and long war "against Melancthon and Crypto Calvinists, and ended in the triumph of genuine Lutheranism and the transition of some Lutheran countries to the Reformed Church." "The Book of Concord (1580) gave the text of the Invariata, (1530), while the Melancthonian and the Reformed adhered to the Variata, (1540). The Westphalian treaty, in 1648, formally embraced the Reformed, togegether with the Roman Catholics and Lutherans, in the peace of the German Empire, and henceforth subscription to the Augsburg Confession of 1530 or 1540 ceased to be a necessary condition of toleration." P. 242. What this history shows and that clearly, is the fact, that the Lutheranism of 1530, endorsing the doctrine of Article X, as interpreted and understood by Luther and others, containing the theory of in, with and under, and by logical inference that of ubiquity of Zwingli, was, and became the accepted doctrine of that portion of Lutheranism : and the other portion, and a large part it was, adhered to the Altered Confession, (1540) and accepted the Reformed tendency which was afterwards developed by Calvin and other reformers and found expression in the Reformed Church of Germany and Switzerland, the mother of the Dutch, Presbyterian and Anglican Church of England. To all this A. D. P. may demur, and Dr. Swartz, in his article in The Independent on the "Unrest" in the Lutheran Church, says : "It (General Synod) rejoiced to declare that the distracting controversies about Baptismal Regeneration and Real Presence, which had wrought so much evil in the Lutheran Church in Germany, were left behind as profitless and vain, and that the faith of the General Synod was substantially that of the Reformed Churches." (Underscoring the writer's.) And it is this difference, existing in that early reformation day which caused controversy and "which continued for four hundred years and not settled," and because of these different types you find in the Lutheran Church, "three distinct organizations, which hold as many different relations to the Symbolical Books, and are, in fact, three denominations under a common name : the General Synod, (1820,) Synodical Conference of N. A., (1872,) General Council, (1867)." That Reformed tendency is in the Lutheran Church as represented by the General Synod, and is opposing "the distinctive doctrines," which is the cause for the "Unrest" in our sister denomination. S.

"REGENERATION, OR THE NEW BIRTH."

In the MESSENGER of August 8th, an article by X. appeared on the above-named subject. It was a discussion in the form rather of a study than of an argument. The writer commences by considering the question, whether the new birth is instantaneous? He informs us that the general opinion in the Church is, that it is instantaneous, as analogous to natural birth. But the assumption that natural birth is instantaneous, he calls in question, and then proceeds to point out, that in his view, natural birth is not limited to the fact of the separation of the child from the mother, but involves a process taking in the period of gestation and reaching to the emergence of consciousness on the part of the child. This impressed us as a singular and unique idea of a birth. And after a re-reading, we must confess that we were not clear in our appreciation of the force of his contention. This would seem to involve, that a child dying in infancy, equally an idiot or an imbecile, could not be said to be naturally born. Is not this spreading out the idea of natural birth a little too far? If the writer forbids us to confine the idea of birth to the act of parturition, the most natural thing would be to fall back to the inception of life, as the point at which a new being emerges into existence. But in either case the birth would be instantaneous, or as we would put it, falling back to the underlying question, which the writer subsequently recognizes, the subject would be passive.

For the study in hand the question is not at what point and by what means does a man become conscious of the divine life, but at what point and by what means did he become possessed of that life. In the order of sequence, life always precedes consciousness. Undeveloped, indeed, but still in actual existence. And how it is possible to comprehend developed consciousness in the birth—the beginning of life, we are at a loss to see. To our thought, the writer, theologically speaking, confuses conversion with regeneration. The very thing against which our Church has been contending. In conversion the subject is active, both before and after the regenerative act, co-operating with the Holy Spirit. In this there is a process, and that too, in a sense which does not involve Melancthon's synergism.

The writer asks, "May we not say that in the new birth there is an objective side, God's act in us, and also a subjective side, our response to this divine act?" We would say in reply, if we understand the new birth to be the imparting of, as he himself says, "the regenerate life" which "comes from God alone," no, but if you broaden the new birth out to the dimensions of conversion we say, yes. The regenerate life is dependent upon subsequent conversion, which is but the beginning of sanctification, for its development and growth into full Christian consciousness. But in case of the beginning of the regenerate life, God alone acts, and the preceding activity of the subject can only be of the nature of conversion—wrought by the energizing agency of the Holy Ghost, by means of the preached Gospel.

While objective faith is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," subjective faith is the spiritual sense for the perception of the unseen—the organ for the reception of the spiritual and the divine. This sense, naturally irresponsive to the supernatural light, shining from the page of revelation both of nature and inspiration, is quickened by the illuminating power of the Holy Ghost, through the preached truth. By this ministry the sinner is led to discern his spiritual relations and his condition as a sinner. Repentance and belief in Christ are the results. Thus is his will impressed, and he is led to resolve, I will. This experience may be denominated, his preceding conversion, his preparation. Upon his arising and going to his Father—in the ordinance of grace, there is imparted to him by the new birth, the regenerate life. This impartation is by the Holy Ghost, through the organ of his faith. Faith thus, is purely receptive. As in the sphere of the natural, the senses and perceptive faculties discern objective truth, and present it to the mind, to be by the rational powers apprehended and appropriated as knowledge, so faith receives the supernatural, but does not apprehend and appropriate. The first activity upon reception is attention, this is an act of the will. The will apprehends—lays hold upon it, and subsequently, by the activity of the rational powers, it is appropriated and enters into the substance of the life. Thus the regenerate life, introduced through the receptive power of faith, is apprehended by the will, and by the ministry of the assimilative functions of the reason the whole man is gradually transformed into its likeness. This apprehension by the will, and appropriation by the rational powers, together with the effects upon the life, may be denominated the subsequent conversion, or the beginning of sanctification.

With X, we would deprecate any view which would make the mystery of the new birth magical. And that, we submit, is not in the view presented. While the view that the subject is passive in regeneration (we do not like the expression, instantaneous, yet as over against a process, involving the co operation of the subject, we accept it), commends itself to our judgment, in accordance with the general opinion of the Church, we conceive it as being effected in full harmony with our human constitution—its affinities and susceptibilities. It does no violence to the human will, but requires its consent as precedent to its effectuation and equally requires its acceptance and apprehension subsequently. Our objection to the view propounded by the writer, is just because of its synergistic character, involving as it does somewhat of a semi-Pelagian element.

It may yet be added, that the writer's desire to join "together the two factors, baptism, and a believing acceptance of divine grace," is fully provided for, in this view; not, indeed, "in one process or act," but in full accord with both human and divine rights and requirements. While the reason "why some in whom some elements of the new birth are present, . . . but fall away into their old sinful life," is not "because some one element is wanting, and never come to the full birth," but because of the refusal or neglect of the will to accept and appropriate the regenerate life actually at hand. CYRIL.

"AS IT WAS AND IS."

In the MESSENGER for August 6th, appears an article under the above heading by an able and worthy correspondent, which at first reading inspires a feeling of joy and gladness at the signal victory gained over the reign of "King Herod." There appears upon the surface of the picture many things pleasant and agreeable to contemplate, and indeed to be thankful for; altogether a beautiful picture, as viewed from the writer's lofty standpoint. But there is another point of observation, viewed from which the picture presents quite a different aspect. The crimson coloring is of a deeper hue, because of the oft-repeated re-touching and re-painting; the figures are more numerous and stand out with life-like boldness, so much so that we can discern their identity and trace upon the outlines of their countenance features resembling our own, a likeness, as of close kinship, which cannot be denied. Many of the victims which confront you seem so recent as though fresh from the artist, and their fiendish glare strikes terror into your soul, as though they accused you of gross wrong and condigning their own doom.

Is it, indeed, true, that the world is growing better, instead of worse, as the good brother's argument seemingly proves? True, all Christians know of the bloody deed of "King Herod"—the inhuman massacre of the innocent children of ancient Bethlehem, and shudder at the mention of his name. All are cognizant of the "law" made and enforced by this brutal king, the like of which the writer says, "No ruler in Christendom would dare enforce." Would that were so!

How does this deed of King Herod and his "law" which took place but once in the world's history come with the daily and yearly slaying of the innocents by the terrible law and fiendish rule of King Alcohol in Christian America, to say nothing of the world beyond? King Herod lived, as is said, in a dark age, yet, withal, an age of reason. The Christ-King was anticipated by this cruel king, and when His birth was announced, he reasoned that, unless the design of the Almighty could be frustrated, he would lose his kingship and his throne usurped by this Child King. Hence the massacre of all the male children. Nor were King Herod's fears groundless. The Child of Bethlehem did become King of kings, and Lord of lords, and indeed, usurped the thrones of the heathen kings; and now, after the lapse of centuries, in an age of so-called high civilization, the followers and devotees of this same Child King fall in with a worse king than Herod and by their "law" slay more in one single year than did Herod during his entire lifetime—more by far are the innocent victims slain by this one monster demon king, than by all the heathen potentates combined. And by whom is he held in power? By many persons who have sworn allegiance to the King of kings. The Christian public submits to the license of the slums and grogshops, receiving therefrom a revenue by means of which they corrupt the law-makers, and those appointed to rule, even to the extent of dethroning justice in our civil courts, where justice, and truth and mercy are to be meted out by the chief magistrate alike to all, regardless of race or color. Take a glance, good brother, then at this side of the picture. True it is that "The early Christians struggled manfully against the monster evil of King Herod's law, and laid the axe at the root of it, and the blessed fruits have come down to us in a social condition." So much is true, but note the next paragraph, "Which will not allow any one to indulge in a brutal butchery of human life for the gratification of selfish purposes." What a revelation that is! Look around and witness on all hands the human butchery through the drink traffic, the monopolies of breweries and distilleries, who by their money sway the public partisan and make laws to suit their selfish, diabolical ends. And yet our good brother calls this state of affairs in this era of the world "humane" and "under the control of divine mercy and personal restraint." If that is so then we mistake the meaning of words and signs of the times.

ORPHANS' HOME COLUMN.

BY REV. T. M. YUNDT, Superintendent.

The "Farmer's Picnic and Donation" this year will be held on Wednesday, October 7th. Those of us who were present last year enjoyed the day very much, and we also recall with pleasure the fact that it was enthusiastically decided to repeat the occasion this year. It is principally intended for those friends of the Home who do not live so far away, and who will make their donations in provisions, &c. This year, however, because so many friends of the Home were prevented from being present at the Anniversary, the scope of the day might be enlarged somewhat. Therefore, while we will still consider it "Farmer's Day," we will also cordially welcome others who may feel inclined to spend the day at the Home, and who will contribute to make it a success. Visitors will provide their own dinners, but they will be furnished with plenty of hot coffee (with sugar and cream) free of charge.

On "Farmer's Day" such donations as were made last year will again be thankfully received. The list last year included wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, flour, beets, apples, apple-butter, honey, groceries, dry goods, soap, money, &c. Should the donations of one kind, as wheat for instance, prove more abundant than our needs for the year require, they can readily be converted into money, and thus the Home be helped. A few bushels of wheat may not mean much for one farmer, but if many farmers bring a few bushels each it will in the aggregate amount to much for the Home.

The Board of Managers and Ladies' Committee will hold their quarterly meeting on Thursday, Oct. 8th, the day after "Farmer's Donation."

A number of friends who were not able to be here on Anniversary Day remembered the Home in their own peculiar ways.

One brother in Monroe county took up a "Breakfast collection" and sent it. A nice idea. Make an offering unto the Lord early in the morning before the cares of the day distract your mind from His cause. Another one in Easton sent a $5 bill, the amount it would have cost "for railroad fare and incidentals," and suggests that if every one, who had intended to come but stayed at home, would do the same, the receipts for the day would be large. A friend, prevented by a cold from coming, sent a crisp, new $20 bill to be "dropped into the hat." Another, yes two others, each sent a check for $25. Still another sent in one letter a check for $50 and two $10 bills, the latter to be "dropped into the hat." So that although the day was in some respects not as successful as we had hoped it would be, yet many things occurred which caused us much cheer and contributed to the support of the Home.

DEFECTS IN TRAINING FOR THE SEMINARY.

BY PROF. GEO. NYE BOARDMAN, D.D.

The question is put to me, "What are the defects in the men who come to the seminary to study theology?" In reply I shall have reference simply to the intellectual training of theological students. There is a moral training, more important, as all admit, than any intellectual attainment, to be required of those preparing for the Christian ministry; but it is not characteristic of those looking forward to the ministerial profession to be specially defective in this respect. Whatever individual exceptions there may be, it is generally true, that those who enter our theological seminaries are in a good degree free from from selfish ambitions, and are desirous of promoting the religious welfare of the world.

I shall also, in reply to the question, have reference to those who are preparing for pastoral work in connection with churches over which they may be settled. Much attention is given of late to the methods of Christian labor among those who are indifferent to the Gospel. How shall the rural populations of sparsely settled regions be led to attend to the truths of revelation? These are very important questions, and there may be ways of communicating to zealous young men and women the art of eliciting attention and awakening interest among such classes. But Christian people, those rescued from an irreligious career as well as others, receive their religious culture in our churches, and the great work of Christian nurture in the world must be performed by those who, for prolonged periods, do ministerial service in the churches and among those who come under their influence. My remarks will therefore relate only to those preparing for pastoral work.

The first defect which I notice—one quite too common—is a lack of familiarity with the English Bible. The Bible is the minister's pocket-book. Its doctrines, phrases and expressions are his current coin. He should never be left to say, "Silver and gold"—of this kind—"have I none." The master of Bible teachings and Bible words will find himself able to meet almost any demands that may be made upon him. The treasury is as competent to large drafts as to small. Young men who are studying theology should be able to finish almost any sentence of the New Testament after hearing a word or two, should be able to refer readily to the Messianic passages of the Old Testament, and be familiar with all Bible history.

Preparation for theological study begins at home, at family prayers, in families where the Bible is read in course, and read by each one in turn. Those families that are satisfied at their morning devotions with a few verses from the Gospels, a dainty selection from some Epistle, and an extract from what a compiler thinks an appropriate Psalm, are only half-Christian in their worship. The Sabbath-schools are also preparatory schools of theology, especially if the pupils are required to commit to memory verses of the lesson. If the Scriptural phrases cling to the memory and recur again and again, they are worth more than any commentary or any side illustrations from geography and science. The latter have their value but are not the main thing. "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

The defect here noticed is a sad one. It is often surprising to notice the vague ideas which young men have of Scripture statements, young men, it may be, brought up in Christian families. Phrases are grasped at as if one were grasping into vacancy; sentiments are sought for as if they belonged to a dimly-remembered dream; John is only partially distinguished from Paul; Proverbs is possibly confounded with the Apocalypse, and the fifty-third of Isaiah belongs to an unknown realm. This is a defect that can never be fully remedied after childhood has passed. I once heard President Finney deplore his inability to quote freely from the Scriptures. He said he was not in early life a Bible student. It is well that attention has recently been turned to the study of the Bible in colleges, but it should be begun long before college days.

Another defect which I notice, is the failure to make seminary work a part of the consecrated work of the ministry. Students are generally impressed wirh the seriousness and solemnity of the work before them in the churches, but they are not apt to feel that their work of preparation is equally serious. To lose an hour which should bring with it the only opportunity to teach some one the saving truths of the Gospel would indeed be a sad loss. Any pastor would mourn it for a life-time. But to lose by the score hours which afford the opportunity to prepare for an efficient ministry, often brings very little compunction of conscience. Consecration to God does not embrace the present hour with its solemnities and sense of responsibility. I believe that the attainments of theological students are less than they should be, less than they would be, if the young men were constantly under the pressure of the thought that study is a part of their service to God. So much has been said by over-zealous men, and by light-minded men, and by indolent men, against theology, that sometimes those who are elected to preach have been deceived. And when students have not been deceived, and have not believed that they were unfitting themselves for saving souls by their studies, they have yet been led to think theological learning of small importance, and a waste of time no great waste, after all. All the students in our seminaries ought to look upon the attainments to be made in their course of study as definite, clearly marked objects to be secured without failure, indispensable possessions to be held for use in after life. If every candidate for the ministry were during his preparation days possessed of such an idea, and spent his days as under the pressure of unfinished business, there would be fewer hours wasted in listlessness and idle conversation. If every one felt that he owed it to God to master as far as possible his revealed truth, the sacredness of the holy calling would reach out farther towards the threshold of the profession than it does now.

Another defect which I notice is a wrong estimate of what constitutes a practical education. That education is the most practical which enables one to accomplish most in the fulfillment of a calling. It seems to be the common view that an education acquired with, and partly by means of, useful and remunerative labor is the most practical. Student work that ends with scientific attainment and discipline of mind, is often stigmatized as scholastic and unproductive. But it may be by far the most productive when student life ends and professional life begins. The practical value of thorough training can not be known till the end of the race. It is well-known that many student-preachers fail early as professional preachers. It is well known too that their habits contracted in premature work hamper and weaken them through life. It is greatly to be desired that students should be contented with student work, and that our seminaries be surrounded with an atmosphere that promotes high scientific attainment. If he that teacheth should wait on teaching, he that learneth should wait on learning.

This false estimate of the duties of a student is due largely to a false popular sentiment. It has become the fashion to praise the young man who supports himself while pursuing his education. This is considered a noble exhibition of character; and no doubt it is, but where does the nobility come in? Everyone replies, In overcoming unavoidable obstacles. On the other hand, there is no title to nobility in being subject to the obstacles, much less is he entitled to praise who throws obstacles in the student's way or even has pleasure in seeing them there. The crude and barbarous idea, however, prevails, that there is an intrinsic merit in the crippled and incomplete education acquired amid distractions and interruptions. So obtrusive is this view that even students themselves are carried away with it. The sooner it is felt that three years of uninterrupted study is too little time for the best minds to master the rudiments of the ministerial profession, the better it will be for our churches.

The closest study is, of course, consistent with the incidental trial of one's gifts in preaching, teaching and personal religious conversation.

I notice one other defect; it is the want of proper habits of study. Most of our schools might do more than they are now doing in teaching the proper methods of acquisition. Many students creep over a subject as a child creeps over a floor; a room may be much better comprehended by looking at it from a well-chosen position. Dr. James Marsh was in the habit of entering on a new topic of study with the question, "What do I already know about this subject?" Everyone should find for himself a way of arriving at the mastering of a topic and would find some such question a good beginning. Every teacher is pained to see how much time is wasted by faulty methods of study, and how much that has been tolerably understood passes over, after a little time, into the limbo of vagueness and conjecture. Students are too apt to feel that they may have a clear conscience if they are busy, and do not seem to understand that their occupation itself may be mere indolence and stupidity. Man is endowed with more than one sense. He should not grope where he can see; and he has a higher power than sense, and should compress and simplify his knowledge, and bring order out of confusion. He should also make his mind a treasury where he can lay away his matured ideas and settled judgments for future use. It is not to be expected that students entering on a course preparatory to professional life, should have accumulated a large store of ideas; but work should have been already begun and a definite method of accumulation adopted.—The Advance.

DAILY BREAD.

M. E. SANGSTER.

Give us this day, dear Lord, our daily bread;
We do not ask to morrow's till it come;
But on the jonrney, day by day, are fed,
Until Thou guide us to our heavenly home.

Give us this day the patience that we need,
So many little things our spirits try;
Give us the Word with eager love to heed,
Content, although our wish Thou mayst deny.

Give us this day Thy wisdom; when perplexed
We know not how to turn or what to do;
Save us, we pray, from being weakly vexed,
And lead us, hour by hour, this one day through.

Give us this day the courage and the cheer
To face Thy foes, and ours, with look serene;
Reveal Thyself, so constant and so near,
That we shall see Thee, not a cloud between.

Give us this day more loyalty to Thee,
More hatred of the sin that wounds Thy heart;
More grace Thy loving followers to be,
Choosing in Thee, for aye, the better part.

Give us this day our own light cross to bear,
As though it bore us on to heigths divine;
Give us to realize Thy cross who share,
That still the heaviest end, dear Lord, is Thine.

Give us this very day our daily bread;
Thou knowest all our wants. That want we bring,
And in Thy footsteps, Saviour, as we tread,
We hail Thee Master, and we crown Thee King.

PICKING UP.

One of the time-consuming cares of every housekeeper may be described under the general head of picking up. She picks up after her husband, after her girls, after the babies in the nursery. The latter strew the nursery floor with their blocks, toys and picture books: about one baby in a hundred being taught to put its little properties away when done with them, while the other ninety-nine are diligently instructed at an early age in the art of being waited upon by their elders. Girls come in from their pleasant excursions here and there, flushed, dimpled, sweet as the rose that laughs in the hedge; but, sweet as they look, they are thoughtless beyond belief in the matter of making work for their mothers. Doubtless their intention is to carry their things to the proper places themselves, after a period of rest; but she who procrastinates in such an affair is lost. In putting away one's out-door clothing, one's letters, one's books, it is the first moment of decision which counts—the primary indecision which is fatal. What the young person lazily or thoughtlessly imposes on somebody who is older, and by reason of her added years less able to bear the strain, may be just the traditional straw, beyond which strength and vigor will endure no more.

For the good man of the house we have also the most elastic toleration; yet we think that too often he binds a burden on the shoulders of his wife, which frets her unwarrantably, though she makes no sign of complaint. "My husband's progress through the house," said a matron recently, "is marked by a litter of hats, coats, slippers, newspapers, pamphlets, books, boots, corkscrews, inkstands, collars, handkerchiefs, etc." He is forever saying,—"Dear, do you remember where you put such or such a thing of mine?" and wondering why his wife has so inconvenient a habit of clearing things up.

It needs only a glance to show that, if everybody were of one mind about putting articles at once where they belong, picking up would be reduced to a minimum, and one labor of the housewife greatly simplified.—The Home-Maker.

CARE OF SERVANTS.

The habitual manner toward servants and their treatment afford one of the most significant indices of a man's character, and of a woman's as well. The kind, the wise, the humane mistress keeps her servants year after year, not all of them, but those of them who have the sterling qualities. Their interest becomes her interest, and her interest becomes theirs. She provides for their comfort, for their happiness, for their amusement, and they in turn consult her wishes, her choices, her preferences, her tastes. The pecuniary consideration, once settled and approved, is lost sight of largely, and a bond of mutual good-will and helpfulness unites the two as they pass together along the highway of life.

There are a great many servants who do not know when they are well off, and who are constantly changing their places; and there are a great many mistresses slow to see in the rough diamond the possible treasure that forbearance, training, and patience will develop.

The motto, "Put yourself in his place," is a good one for the mistress, and perhaps easier for her to act upon intelligently than it is for her maid. If she has done the work herself that she requires her maid to do, she will know what allowances to make, what grade of excellence to insist on, and what meed of praise or censure to bestow when the work is done. If she has not done the work herself, she has doubtless had opportunities of judging regarding it which should make her wisely lenient and justly exacting. It is no favor to anybody, servant or otherwise, to let them off from good honest work. The employer who insists on a certain high grade of achievement in her employees is in so far their benefactor, provided she makes reaching this high standard easily attainable, and rewards its attainment worthily.

Mutual confidence is and must be at the bottom of all long service, and mutual confidence implies unselfishness in both parties, or at least mutual recognition of the rights and interests of the two parties. A thoroughly selfish individual cannot be a good mistress or a good servant—cannot be anything good.

We are all alike, mistresses and servants, accountable to one Master, and the constant remembrance of this truth is a good corrective for both parties.—Selected.

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES."

One night at the Bowery Mission, among those who came forward for prayer was a man of commanding presence, and a head and face which indicated more than ordinary intelligence, but whose dilapidated appearance, bleared eyes, and offensive breath told plainly that he was one of rum's wretched victims. Our conversation with him revealed the fact that he was indeed a man of marked ability, well educated, and that he belonged to one of the most distinguished families of the State. He had for years been a popular temperance lecturer, and was well known throughout the country. He appeared deeply to realize his sad and humiliating condition, and to feel his need of Divine help to save him from his besetting sin, which he earnestly and tearfully sought. At the close of the inquiry meeting he seated himself at the organ, and running his fingers over the keys with the skill of a professional performer, he sang with a voice of peculiar sweetness and pathos the familiar hymn "Nothing but leaves." Tears filled the eyes of the listeners as they looked upon the old man, who with bowed head and trembling voice breathed forth from a burdened and sorrowing heart in that plaintive song the bitter experience of his own wasted life. Of the tens of thousands of wrecked and ruined lives through the curse of strong drink, who have crossed the threshold of the missions, seldom if ever have we seen a sadder and more remarkable example. Home, friends, character, fame, and fortune all sacrificed to satisfy the cravings of a terrible appetite, and left in old age a homeless wanderer, without a place to lay his head. Young men, take warning. Beware of that fatal first step in the drunkard's career—the first glass. Daily experience and observation, as well as the Word of God, solemnly admonish you. Give heed to them, lest the sad wail of your life at its close shall be "Nothing but leaves."—Christian at Work.

IS BEAUTY A BLESSING?

ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

Of the beautiful women that I have known, but few have attained superiority of any kind. In marriage they have frequently made failures; why, I do not know, unless the possession of great loveliness is incompatible with the possession of an equal amount of good judgment. So much is expected by the woman accustomed to admiration that she plays and palters with her fate till the crooked stick is all that is left her. This we see exemplified again and again. While the earnest, lofty, sweet-smiling woman of the pale hair and doubtful line of nose has, perhaps, one true lover, whose worth she has time to recognize, an acknowledged beauty will find herself surrounded by a crowd of showy egotists, whose admiration so dazes and bewilders her that she is sometimes tempted to bestow herself upon the most importunate one, in order to end the unseemly struggle.

Then the incentive to education and to the cultivation of one's especial powers is lacking.

Forgetting that the triumphs which have made a holiday of youth must lessen with the years, many a fair one neglects that training of the mind which gives to her who is poor in all else an endless storehouse of wealth from which she can hope to produce treasures for her own delectation and that of those about her, long after the fitful bloom on her handsome sister's cheek has faded with the roses of departed summer.

MOTHER'S BOY.

Mothers, it will not hurt your boys to learn to do many things pertaining to the domestic machinery of your home. They may be taught as easily as girls, and would be delighted to feel that their help was really needed and appreciated. Do not say "What can a boy do?" for a boy can do any kind of house-work which a girl can, yes, and he can learn to use a needle and thread just as easily. Do you not remember the trials you had in learning to sew; especially to use the thimble? Why not teach the boys to sew on buttons, and mend torn garments, as well as their sisters?

I know a mother who has taught her boy to take off the bed clothes from his bed every morning, turn the mattresses, open the windows, etc., and at stated times go back, make up the bed, and put the room in order. This he does daily, and the servant is not allowed to assist him.

Another boy always swept and dusted the sitting and dining-rooms, and when the mother or sister were hurried, washed the dishes, laid the table, etc. That same boy now has a home of his own, and his wife, not over-strong, never has the care of the sweeping, no hard work is ever left for her, but his trained eye sees all the little places where he may assist, and in his quiet way he is helping to bear his share of the burdens which most men think belong to the woman. Is he any the less manly man, think you?

If boys are taught neatness and order in their homes as well as personal neatness, their whole lives will be a benediction upon the mothers who thus early gave them training. The future happiness of our girls who are to become wives of these boys depends largely upon the early habits and instruction which mothers are now giving the boys. A boy who is careful not to bring in dirt on his boots, who puts papers and books where they belong, always hangs up his hat, and who is looking out for places where he can help his mother, will make a better husband than the one who thinks his mother was made purposely to wait upon him.

There is now-a-days a great cry to teach the girls to be good housekeepers; why not teach the boys to be helpful instead of helpless? Besides laying the foundation for habits of neatness, order and helpfulness, some of the time of active, boyhood days will be spent where it should be, with the mother, instead of on the street.

BONNIE'S PRAYER.

Dear little Bonnie, four years old,
Thoughtful as child of her age could be,
Said her prayers as her mother told,
Nightly kneeling beside her knee.

But she said one night, this quaint little elf,
"I've a wish, my mamma, so good and true,
Let me kneel by the bedside, all by myself,
And make my prayers as the big folks do."

So all were quiet as mice could be,
While Bonnie, robed in her night-gown white,
Stole on tiptoe and bent her knee
All alone for her prayers that night.

Only a moment the wee head bowed,
Then the face came up with a smile most fair,
While the other children laughed aloud
At the wondrous shortness of Bonnie's prayer.

Then came a little flush of dismay
Over the radiant face so small:
"I couldn't think of much to say,
So I said 'Lord keep me,' and that was all."

Papa kissed her gravely and smiled:
"That was the best of prayers, my dear;
It was all you needed to say, my child,
You could ask no more if you prayed a year."

TOLD IN THE DARK.

Leo was in bed. He had said, "Now I lay me;" then he had asked his mother to turn down the light.

Leo was a very lion to face outside foes. He was not so brave when face to face with the little Knight of Right within him. That was what his mother called his conscience—the little Knight of Right.

Mother knew what it meant when Leo asked to have the light turned out; she sat down on the bed, and took Leo's hand, and said in a tender, encouraging way:

"Tell mother all about it."

Leo lay very still for some minutes; then he burst out in a boy's way, right in the middle of the story:

"P'rhaps you'll think it wasn't so—and I don't think I'd believe it myself, only I saw them with my own eyes—I did, mother! 'an you'll say yes, won't you, mother? 'an I couldn't help it, really I couldn't—'an she's down in the kitchen!"

Mother smiled. She stroked the little brown fist. She spoke gently:

"What was the strange sight, and who is 'she?'"

"Well, it was this way. We boys were coming home from skating, just dark, and a cat skatted across the road, and all the boys snowballed her—I did, too, mother—and she tried to squirm through a picket-fence an' got caught and couldn't get through, or back either, an' all the boys yelled—an' at that very minute the East Enders fired on us from over the wall, an' we had a regular fight, and drove 'em all the way back, just like the minute men that time at Lexington.

"Then it was dark, and I came home from the corner alone. An' along in the pine woods—this is true, mother, 'tis, I saw it with my own eyes—I saw that kit's face in the dark, in the air—and lots of other kits' faces—the dark was full of them, an' all the eyes looked at me, so beggin' like! I was so sorry—an'—a little bit afraid, too—an' I just started an' ran."

"Did you leave the kitten faces behind you when you ran home?" asked mother.

"I didn't run home—I—I ran back to the road—to where we snow balled the kit. There she was, stuck fast in the fence, and mewin' just awful—an' I got her an'—an'—she's down in the kitchen now!"

The little brown fingers squirmed around mother's as he went on, doubtfully: "An' you'll say yes, won't you, mother? I couldn't help it—I really couldn't, mother—an' we've only three other kits, you know—only three, mother."

Mother lifted the little brown fist and kissed it. "We will take care of her somehow," she said.—Selected.

A BOY'S MANNER.

"His manner is worth a hundred thousand dollars to him!" That is what one of the chief men of the nation lately said about a boy. "It wouldn't be worth so much to one who meant to be a farmer, or who had no opportunities, but to a young college student with ambitions it is worth at least a hundred thousand."

The boy was a distant relative of the man, and had been brought up by careful parents in a far-off city. Among other things he had been taught to be friendly and to think of other persons before himself. The boy was on a visit in the town where the man lived. They met on the street, and the younger, recognizing the elder, promptly went to his side and spoke to him in his cordial, happy, yet respectful, way. Of course the man was pleased, and knew that anybody would have been pleased. The sentence above was the outcome of it. A little later the boy came into the room just as the man was struggling into his overcoat. The boy hurried to him, pulled it up at the collar and drew down the wrinkled coat beneath. He would have done it for any man, the haughtiest or the poorest.

The boy has not been in society a great deal. He has not learned orthodox selfishness. He positively can't be easy at the table until his neighbors are waited on; a chair is torture if he thinks anyone else is less comfortably seated. He wouldn't interrupt to let loose the wittiest or the most timely remark ever thought of. He may learn to do so some day—after he has earned his hundred thousand—but it is doubtful. The expression of his kindness may become conformed to popular usage, modified, refined, but the spirit which prompts the expression will only grow with his years.

Do not misunderstand, boys. You may be truly unselfish and yet not have this boy's prize. You may wish to do things for others and yet feel that you do not know how. The only way to learn is to try; to hesitate for no feeling of bashfulness or awkwardness, but to put into direct and instantaneous practice whatever kind, helpful thoughts occur to you.—Congregationalist.

SO MANY OF THEM.

Nobody knew, except the three little maids themselves, why Rosa, and Jenny and Bab were in such a hurry to be dressed that morning. They were often a wee bit lazy about buttons and strings, but this morning the boot hook must have wondered what possessed them, he had to fly so fast.

The truth is, it was old Grandmother Higgins' birthday. She wasn't the "really-truly grandmother" of Rosa, and Jenny and Bab, she was only an old woman living in a farm-house where they were boarding. But they called her grandma because she was old, and because she was gentle and kind, and because she loved little children.

So they made up their minds to trim her chair with flowers, very early in the morning, and away they flew beyond the hay-field to gather the daisies, the black-eyed Susans and the long, purple spikes whose names they did not know.

But just as they had filled their fat arms with the wet, dewy things, Bab came to a sudden stand-still. "We'll have to frow 'em away," she said mournfully, "Dey is all weeds."

Sure enough! Rosa and Jenny looked at their white and gold treasures, and remembered that when dear old Grandmother Sloan had her eightieth birthday, there were roses and lilies and double violets, but no daisies, and they felt downhearted.

Suddenly Rosa's face got as bright as a sunrise, and holding up a glittering, long-stemmed bunch, she cried, "Any way, God mus' love 'em, 'cause He makes so many of 'em!"

And when the little girls thought of God's loving them, the field flowers looked beautiful again, and Grandmother Higgins had her flowers show. The old lady thought God must love three dear little maids better than daisies, and she did, too!

WITHOUT HIM YOU CAN DO NOTHING

A little boy once said: "How hard it is to do right! I've tried and tried, and there's no use trying any longer."

But one day, after reading his Bible, he said: "Why, I've been trying to change myself all the time, and here I read that only God can change me. I can no more change my heart than a colored man can make himself white. How foolish I have been not to ask Him!"

And he was right. Are you trying to change your own heart? You can never do it. It will get worse and worse, until you ask Jesus to give you a new heart.—Ex.

Pleasantries.

Pastor: "If you live rightly, you will meet your departed in the happier state." Widow: "You didn't know William, did you?"

Mistress (to new cook)—"I hope you haven't a young man?" New Cook: "Oh, no mum; he's gettin' on for fifty!"

An Irishman, of course, getting upon a street car found one place vacant, which he proposed to occupy. "Sure," said he, with a twinkle in his eye, "I came just in the nick of time." "How is that?" "Arrah! If I was to come now, I shouldn't find a single seat."

Old Lady: "Doctor, do you think there is anything the matter with my lungs?" Physician (after a careful examination): "I find, madam, that your lungs are in a normal condition." Old Lady (with a sigh of resignation): "And about how long can I expect to live with them in that condition?"

THE REFORMED CHURCH MESSENGER,

907 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1891.

FROM personal observation, we have learned for ourselves, that our Reformed people, passing over into other denominations, become some of their most valuable members. We have likewise been informed that such is the case with those of them who emigrate from the East to the West. At first view it might be supposed that this is owing to their new surroundings, which is no doubt true to a limited extent; but the principal cause, as we conceive, is to be found in their early family training and the catechetical instructions which they received in their churches at home. There are some that plant and others that water, and the waterman too often takes to himself the credit due to the planter. We have seen congregations growing and prosperous, which we knew to be largely owing to the labors of former self-denying, or, it may be, suffering pastors or elders. It is well to bear this in mind, so that we may not think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. Self-conceit is one of the sins in our day that doth most easily beset us. But let it also be remembered that, as Paul says, "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase."

A MERE HYPOTHESIS.

Hitherto it has been conceded that the faculty of speech distinguishes man from the brute creation by an impassable gulf. But a recent writer, E. P. Evans, in the Atlantic Monthly, always rationalistic in its utterances bearing on divine revelation, tries to set aside this difference, and show that animals have a language of their own, and that they think, judge and reflect in their own way very much as men do. There is no doubt that there is such a thing as animal mind, and much that the writer says on this subject is interesting and instructive. On apparently reliable medical authority he says that the "third frontal convolution," on the left side of the anterior lobe of the brain, is extraordinarily developed in man, whilst in the monkey it is quite rudimental or scarcely has any existence at all; that this "convolution" is the seat of speech; that when it is affected by disease, a lesion, or any other cause, an individual loses his power of speaking or talking; and that as the ape does not possess this "lobe" he is speechless. He then goes on to say with wonderful simplicity, that the rudimentary lobe in the anthropoid ape could have been easily evolved into a complete lobe or convolution, and that then he could have articulated just as freely as a man does. Of course he could, as he then would be a man. But it is not so easy to see, as the writer imagines, how this could be done. It would be something contrary to analogy, to experience, and all true science. Universally, living creatures, as far as we know for certain, spring from germs, which embody definite possibilities, that in process of time are developed according to fixed laws. The body of a monkey is the development of his peculiar life, and nothing more. To suppose that his "third frontal convolution" was developed at some period of history is to suppose that he was driven out of his own house of clay, and that a man with his human life was put into his place. That, however, would be difficult to believe. How could he keep himself alive in such a house? It is much more natural and easy to suppose that man from a germ built up his own habitation out of clay, one that would suit him, with the breath or help of the Almighty.

FACTS AND REFLECTIONS.

In one of our dailies we are informed that eighty pilgrims left Hoboken the other day on the steamer Obdam to pay a visit to the Holy Coat of Treves, in charge of Father Brown, who organized the pilgrimage a few months ago. In the same paper, the New York Sun, appears an appeal against the Salvation Army by "one of the sufferers." He complains that the Army Contingent, blessed with good lungs, commence their operations nightly about 8 o'clock and from then until 11 o'clock, regale the residents of the neighborhood with their music, rendered in stentorian tones that prevent, the sick and tired from getting a little sleep, until the strong-voiced singers see fit to give the neighborhood a respite for another day. On Sunday morning the din begins bright and early, is kept up till noon, and with a short intermission, is continued during the whole afternoon, until the climax of the week of noise begins in the evening. A prominent feature of these meetings is the crowds of hoodlums, half-grown boys and girls attracted to this locality nightly, whose coarse talk and ribald language beggars all description.

From the papers generally we likewise have had ample descriptions of what has been going at the camp-meetings along the sea-shore or out in the country. Distinguished preachers—so they are, at least called—have all been preaching wonderfully eloquent sermons for which they receive due credit in the papers next day; and sometimes we have imagined that we could almost hear the responsive shouts of the immense crowd from the ocean beach or the inland forest, in our own quiet retreat in the country.

The facts here referred to are suggestive, well calculated to furnish us with valuable material for reflection and instruction. In the first place they prove to us that we are a religious people—such to the very backbone—no matter what sceptics may say about the decline of religion in our times. Unbelieving philosophers and scientists may say what they please in books or learned reviews about the overthrow of supernatural truth; all their rejoicings are in vain. The great mass of the people, where the majority rules, will not believe a word they say, when they come to understand what they mean. The colored people more orthodox than some white folks, will not for a moment believe that there is no hell for the punishment of wicked sinners.

In the next place we observe that the facts mentioned show that there are tendencies at work in much of our religion, which if not checked or otherwise directed must lead the people back into "old superstitions" or idolatrous practices on the one hand, or on the other, land us in mere emotionalism, or, in the end, in hard, dry, petrified rationalism or deism.

Lastly, we say, dangers of this sort may be averted by judicions treatment, by vigilance on the part of pastors and people, and by a firm stand on the part of all concerned, that nothing shall defraud us of the rich inheritance of our faith. We all alike need instruction in our knowledge of salvation, not merely appeals to our feelings, to our fancies or our fears. The subject is of the most momentous importance to our souls. We must know who and what Christ is, what we are and what we have become, how we are to be delivered, from our misery, what is the nature of true faith, what we are to believe and do and what in brief the articles of our undoubted Christian faith are. On these vital points we all need to be taught line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, in the order set forth in the plan of salvation. We should eschew bigotry, but at the same time we should not give place by subjection, no, not for an hour, to the lecturers, newspapers, or false liberalists that tell us it matters not what our creeds are provided our moral conduct is all right.

The religious feeling abroad in our land may thus be properly directed, utilized and turned to good account in the Churches. In our own denomination this will no doubt be largely done, as we hope, in our catechetical instructions during the coming fall and winter. Let catechetical classes then fill up as soon as they are opened, and all who are not in the Church be encouraged to attend, so that they may learn to know intelligently what they are to do to be saved, and thus be enabled to give a reason for the faith that is in them.

GERMAN NAMES.

Whilst the predominant feature in the life of the ancient Greeks was idealistic and of the Romans realistic, that of the Germans or Teutonic race may be briefly described as heroic. They found their highest delight in war and on the battle field, and for struggles of this kind they were remarkably well qualified by their large bodies and physical strength. Both Cæsar and Tacitus describe them as of immense stature, and it is said that even the Roman soldiers could scarcely endure "the sight of their fierce countenances or the glance of their eyes." They were fond of wild adventures and courted dangers of the most extreme character. Josephus reports King Agrippa, as having on one occasion said to the Jews: "Without doubt you have heard of the Germans. You have seen their strength and the greatness of their stature. But they have a spirit greater than their bodies, which despises death itself, and an anger as ferocious as that of wild animals." But with all this fierceness these old Germans were a deeply religious people. They worshipped the grand and the sublime in nature, the heavenly bodies, not stocks and stones. Wuotan or Odin was their god, their ideal hero, who rode upon the storm or thunder clouds, and whose spirit penetrated the light of the sun. He was also their god of war and of carnage on the battle field, and after death he gathered his heroes together in the halls of Walhalla. Like other pagans, they regarded their gods as having been formed in the image of man, and not the reverse, and so they received their light not from above but from themselves. As in the case of other races their characteristic spirit expressed itself in their names, which have come down to us from a remote period of antiquity, embodying to a large extent a reference to conflicts, carnage, weapons of war, to physical strength or courage. After they were first given they formed alliances with other words, and by composition or abbreviations gave rise to large families of names with endless variations, so that we would scarcely believe they were the same, if German scholars and philologians had not traced them out for us to their parents or roots. We here can give only a few illustrations.

Thus from Hild, conflict or battle, we get Hildebrand, Hillman, Hilder, Hiller, Heller and Hellmuth; from Wig or combat sprung up all the Wigands, the Weigands, the Weiands and the Wayants; from Hard, strength or firmness, the Herders, the Hartmans, the Hartwigs, the Harts, the Eberhards, and many others of similar import; from Hari, an army, come the Herrs, the Hermans, the Herolds, and, as we presume, the Harbauchs; from Hag, a hedge, we get Hager, Hegel, Hacker, Hake (Hache), Heiner, Heinrich, Hendrichs, Heyne, Henke, Henckel, Hinkel, Heinitz, Heinzel (Heinzelman); from Thind, or the people, Theobald, Deibel, Dittmar, Dietrich, Ditwald, Dewald, Tittel, Deutschen, Deetz, Dippel, Doderlein and Tieck; and so on through many generations of words, which, like other living things, grew, and were evolved out of their predecessors. Germanic tribes, including, of course, the Anglo-Saxons, were great and strong when they lived in heathenish ignorance and darkness, but in due season they were converted to Christianity, and then they became still stronger and more heroic on the side of truth and religion. Through an overruling Providence they were first called to break the chains of the old Roman tyranny in government, and then afterwards a similar tyranny in the Roman Church. They were planted as a noble germ amidst the foul corruptions of the old Roman empire, which grew, expanded, until they have become the chief bearers of the highest development of the human race as a whole. Those who wish to obtain further information touching individual or family names can consult with advantage Die Deutschen Familien Namen, Geschictlich, Geographisch, und Sprachlich, von Albert Heintze. LEARN IT BY HEART.

We have been asked by a correspondent to publish an article on the best method of Bible study, especially with reference to obtaining from the Scriptures the most help for daily needs. We hesitate in attempting to comply with this request, merely because we fear that our answer may seem insufficient on account of its simplicity and we may offend as the prophet did in prescribing for Naaman. But if we take this risk and say sincerely just what we think as to the best practical method of making the Divine Word serviceable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, for comfort, for encouragement, for enjoyment, for protection, for every possible useful purpose in all times and circumstances, we are compelled to say that there is no study of the Bible which compares in usefulness with committing it to memory. That portion of Scripture which we know so well that we can reproduce it at any moment in mind and in word, is popularly said to be known "by heart." It is true that it may be known only "by head," and yet so great is the power of divine truth by head that it occupies a position very near the heart. Im reading and studying any literary material of the highest quality, it will be found by many minds that it is not thoroughly understood in the fullness of its meaning, until it is actually appropriated by the memory. It is in the memorizing process, and in the contemplation which memory continues, that we obtain our grandest impressions of much that was given us by Shakespeare and Milton, and other writers of the first class. In the Word of God, there are unfathomable fountains of wisdom, of love, of power, which we may in some degree make wells within our own hearts by making them inseparable parts of our own mental furniture, living water of which we may drink at any leisure moment. In times of temptation this two-edged sword is thus always in our grasp, and we may use it as our Saviour did when He encountered the adversary in the wilderness. He knew the Word of God by heart and three times He used it to discomfit the hater of God and the enemy of souls.

In times of sorrow during those weary hours when reading or conversation is impossible, it is a strong consolation to have a rich supply of this delicious balm close to the bleeding spirit. In times of illness, when sight and hearing may both be so much impaired that we cannot obtain any fresh supply of outward impressions, there may be the best medicine for both soul and body in these words that are for the healing of the nations. But apart from all these and other great necessities, this memorizing of the Divine Word may be made continuously useful in the daily, hourly hurry and worry, toil and trouble, of modern life, which places such a strain on all our powers. These Gospel stories, these apostolic statements of doctrine, these glorious prophecies, these heavenly songs, have a power to hold, to calm, to expel and to uplift which is unknown to any other words that were ever uttered. If you know them, so that you can dwell on them in all their matchless beauty, and sweetness and strength, they will often rest your weary brain in the midst of all the roar and confusion of the busiest and noisiest corner in the world. There are many cures now being offered for various infirmities. Many of them have been helpful to many. But we do not know of any greater help for struggling, trembling, suffering, toiling men and women, than this precious Word of God, which He has given us as the living bread which cometh down from heaven.

We know that it is the Spirit of God which enables us to feed upon it, to our spiritual nourishment. But we also know that those portions of it which we have made our own at all times and seasons, are those upon which we are able to feed most frequently and enjoyably.

Samuel Rutherford, in writing to Lady Kenmure, says: But we fools believe those promises as the man that read Plato's writings concerning the immortality of the soul; so long as the book was in his hand, he believed all was true, and that the soul could not die; but so soon as he laid by the book, presently he began to imagine that the soul is but an airy smoke or vapor, that perisheth with the expiring of the breath; so we at starts do assent to the sweet and precious promises; but laying aside God's book, we begin to call in question." Now our counsel is to appropriate all we can of God's book so completely, that we cannot lay it aside, that we carry it about with us as the turtle his shell, that we may never be a moment at any distance from our strong tower.—N. Y. Observer.

OF the six million Jews on the globe about four and a half million live in Southeastern Europe and Western Asia. For these, the typical representatives of historic Judaism, the Hebrew is by no means a "dead" tongue, but the sole literary language, and the object and in part the medium of instruction in the schools. In these the Talmud is dominant, and knowledge of its mysteries is the essence of education. The schools are of three grades, the Cheder or primary; the Yeshiba, or advanced; and the seminary for the candidates for advanced orders. Primary schools are established in every Jewish community, however small. They are conducted in nearly all cases in private houses by men having some other work in addition to the teaching. The whole and sole work of the primary school, where the youth attends until he is fourteen years of age, is the acquision of Hebrew prayers, litany and grammar, and the rudiments of Talmudic wisdom. The method is that of memorizing. The Cheder aims at making the youth good, traditional Jews. Of the advanced grade of schools there are about seventy in Eastern Europe. They are Talmudic schools for young men from fourteen to eighteen and twenty, and practically nothing but the Talmud is taught. The pupils have not the office of rabbi in view, but see in the Talmud true preparation for all callings in life. The largest advanced school is in Pressburg, with an attendance of more than 200 pupils. These support themselves, the rich helping the poor. During the vacation the poorer students often go begging from place to place, as did the wandering students during the Middle Ages.—The Christian at Work.

BELIEVE.

BY MISS SUSANNA CORRELL.

Believe! believe! the Son of God
For you His sufferings bore;
Believe! believe! it was for you
That crown of thorns He wore.
For you He humbly, meekly bore,
The scourge's cruel smart,
In silence heard the bitter taunts,
That pierced His loving heart.

And oh! for you on Calvary's cross
That fearful death He died.
Oh! soul unsaved, why not believe?
What can you ask beside!
And 'tis for you to-day He sits
On yonder throne above,
And there in tender pleading tones
He asks you for your love.

Believe! believe! and at His feet
In penitence repair,
And in His ever listening ear
Pour out your soul in prayer.
For He will hear each faltering word,
And pardon all your sin;
Will give you grace to overcome,
The "Crown of Life" to win.

Believe! believe! with thankful hearts,
That home of glory claim,
That Jesus has for you prepared;
Oh! seek it in His name.
That you with Him through endless years
That life of bliss may live,
And to His everlasting praise
Your song and service give.

The beginning of all wisdom is to know one's sin.—Heubner.

The knowledge of one's defects is all the more beautiful, inasmuch as it is not only the most necessary of all sciences, but also the most rare.—Bossuet.

Go make thy garden fair as thou canst,
Thou workest never alone,
Perchance he whose plot is next to thine
Will see it, and mend his own.
—Mrs. Charles.

Virtue consists for us in not falling into even the slightest faults, because in the case of sin, nothing can seem indifferent to us.—St. Gregory of Nazianzen.

To-morrow's fate, though thou be wise,
Thou canst not tell, nor yet surmise;
Pass, therefore, not to-day in vain,
For it will never come again.
—Omar Khayyam.

A soul which enjoys the serenity of a pure conscience preserves all its beauty, all its sensibility, all its freshness; it has in everything the clearest ideas, the most exalted views, and the most noble sentiments.—Dupanloup.

Art thou longing for a mission
In the earth?
For a noble, high endeavor
Springing into birth?
Let thy dreams be wrought in living,
And thy God, He richly giving,
Will thy needs supply.
—Mrs. H. E. Brown.

God wills, and things are; that is divine omnipotence. Things are, and man wills them; that is human wisdom. Things are, man wills them, and that, too, as God wills, when He wills, and because He wills; that is Christian philosophy.—Mme. Elizabeth of France.

Science and Art.

A discovery more curious than any other yet made with the Lick telescope is the recent one of a new moon. Since the first hint of the discovery many observations have been made, all of which tend to confirm the original impression to wit: That this particular satellite of the greatest of the planets is double—a dot of a moon revolving around the main moon.

Throughout the month of August the sun hurries away toward the south, and the days shorten. More than nine degrees in northerly declination separate the first and last days of the month. The sun's rising hour on August 2 was 4.57 while its corresponding hour on the same day last month was 4 33. At the close of the month the rising hour will be 5.26.

The electric light which shines from the torch of the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor has the power of 8,000 candles, but it fails to supply the desired illumination. The statue itself is mostly in complete darkness, and while the light in the torch can be seen for many miles, yet it does not give the illumination it should, nor does it give the appearance of a flaming torch. Efforts will be made to remedy these defects.

Careful observations and comparisons made by scientific Americans prove that the hottest region of the earth is on the south western coast of Persia, where Persia borders on the gulf of the same name. For forty consecutive days in the months of July and August the thermometer has been known not to fall lower than 100 degrees, night or day, and to often run up as high as 128 degrees in the afternoon.

In a paper lately read before the Scientific Section of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, Mr. John Watson maintains that the redevelopment of lost limbs is not unusual among insects. He himself has had three cases in which limbs have been redeveloped and one case of complete cicatrization. Redevelopment, he says, can take place either at the larval or the pupal stages of an insect's metamorphosis.

Items of Interest.

Dr. Briggs has written to friends in New York that he will be at his post about the middle of September.

Dr. Z. X. Snyder, Principal of the State Normal School, Indiana, Pa., has resigned, to accept a position in the Normal School at Greely, Col., with a salary of $5000.

Rev. John J. Bonar, D.D., brother of the more widely known Horatius and Andrew Bonar, afier a ministry covering 64 years, died recently in Greenock, Scotland. He was 89 years old.

The United States is young yet, but it leads the world in its libraries. The public libraries of all Europe put together contain about 21,000,000 volumes; those of this country contain about 50,000,000.

The Rev. Dr. Robert Nevin, for twenty years rector of the American church in Rome, is spending his bi yearly vacation in this country, being now out in the Yellowstone Park region. He and the Church of England rector in the Eternal City alternate in leaving for the summer.

The supply of theological graduates is so much in excess of the demand in Saxony that a large number of candidates of theology accept positions as teachers in common schools and in the elementary branches. The rush into professional life, including the ministry, is simply phenomenal in Germany.

The Battle Monument at Bennington, Vermont, was dedicated on the 18th ult., and the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Vermont into the Federal Union of States was also celebrated. President Harrison reviewed the procession and made a short address. The orator of the day was Hon. Edward J. Phelps.

The Suez Canal is being widened in some parts to the extent of fifty feet. The widening had been completed at the close of 1889 for a distance of about 10 miles from Port Said. In the course of last year the widening was completed for a further distance of 5 miles. By the close of 1891 the widening works are expected to reach a point 22½ miles from Port Said.

Hints and Recipes.

No kitchen should be without scales to test the integrity of things purchased by weight, and to measure the quantities of various receipts.

In making custard, pumpkin or lemon pies, it is better to partly bake the crust before adding the mixture, so that it may not be absorbed by the paste.

One of our best salads for tea or dinner is one made of string beans. Wash a quart of beans, string them, but do not break them. Cook them for two hours till tender. Sprinkle them with salt and pepper, and lay them aside till they become cold. Then add to a quart of beans a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, three tablespoonfuls of salad vinegar, the same of good oil, and a little more salt and pepper. Toss the beans in this salad mixture without breaking them, and serve them at once.

SHORT SHOES.—A shoe, or even a stocking, that is too short may so seriously deform a child's foot as to cause trouble through life. Indeed, foot gear of all sorts should have, above everything, length, breadth and thickness. The shoe ought to be at least half an inch longer than the foot, with a double sole broad enough to save the upper from touching the ground. Given these essentials, the closer it fits to the foot the better.

IMPROVED BREAD BAKING.—It would seem as if the method of bread baking could be but little improved, but an English gas engineer has devised a process which is said to be a decided improvement over that at present used for baking the "staff of life." The process consists in placing the moulded dough in a gas oven just warm, and then gradually increasing the heat until the maximum point is reached. The theory upon which the method is based is that the usual great heat of the oven kills the yeast germ, thus preventing it from fulfilling its allotted work. Some experiments recently made showed that the loaves baked by the new process were larger in size and finer in quality than loaves from the same batch of dough which were baked in a regular oven.

Farm and Garden.

One of the prettiest shows in Marshallville, Ga., is a peach orchard of 6000 trees planted by the compass in squares, well filled, beautifully trimmed, and each limb gracefully bending under the precious burden of fruit.

After every heavy rain soil that has any clay in its composition will form a crust on its surface. The water that dries off or evaporates leaves all its mineral constituents behind, and this forms a crust. These mineral elements are soluble, and if cultivated under they form excellent plant food, as they do not lose their solubility. Besides, the breaking up of the crust as soon as possible admits air to the soil, and thus in decomposing, as some of it undoubtedly does, increases its fertility.

IN FAVOR OF DUCKS.—It is printed that Mr. M. K. Boyer, a well-known Pennsylvania poultry breeder, claims that, aside from the meat and eggs, ducks are valuable on the farm for their manure. It is of the richest quality, and ranks next to hog manure. For gardening purposes he finds it excellent. His experience has been that a duck will make a good wheelbarrow load of manure in a year. Every farmer should keep a few ducks. The Pekin, Rouen, Cayuga, and Aylesbury ducks are land fowls, and need no bathing water. They are by far the best fowls for a farm.

THE ANIMAL ODOR.—If one will test the milk of cows kept in filthy stables, and upon whose sides filth is permitted to collect in adherent flakes, in this way, the foulness will be very apparent. This odor has been called sometimes the animal odor, and has been thought to be inseparable from a cow. This is wholly untrue. It is the odor of filth, which has every characteristic of manure, and which is discharged with the milk because it could not escape through the skin, which is the natural outlet for it, and by which it would escape freely and imperceptibly if the skin were kept clean and in healthful action by means of thorough carding and brushing every day.—New York Times.

DRAUSS UN DEHEEM. Gedichte in Pennsylvanisch Deitsch bei'm Charles Calvin Ziegler vun Brushvalley, Pa. Leipzig, Druck von Hesse und Becker, 1891.

This little book deserves more than a passing notice. That Brush Valley should increase its celebrity by producing a poet, confers an honor upon that ancient settlement which should not be lightly regarded. Certainly, these verses are exceedingly creditable. The author not only possesses genuine poetic feeling, but is a man of culture who has elaborated his verses with the utmost care. In these days, when the Pennsylvania vernacular is so frequently represented as a mere jargon, it is a real pleasure to find it treated in a scholarly way, by an author who appreciates its true position as a genuine German dialect.

As the title indicates, many of these verses were produced under the influence of that longing for home which leads the wanderer in distant regions to sing the songs of his childhood. Harbaugh, in the dialect of Pennsylvania, and Schandein, in the cognate dialect of Westrich, have touched this chord, and it is therefore not surprising to find here and there in this volume unconscious reminiscences of such earlier singers. A few short pieces playfully describe the rustic employments and pleasures of youth, but the greater number are of a decidedly religious cast. One of the very best is "Die alte Lieder," in which the author enumerates some of the grand old chorals which are sung in our German churches. There are also a number of excellent translations, among which are versions of several of Longfellow's lyrics, and one of Bryant's "Thanatopsis," which indicates extraordinary skill and patient labor. The volume concludes with several excellent poems in pure German. It is, we think, to be regretted that writers in Pennsylvania German have not agreed to use the same orthography. That adopted for Harbaugh's "Harfe" appears to us to be on the whole the best; and though the system employed by Mr. Ziegler has certain advantages, it will hardly be so acceptable to the general reader.

It was an excellent idea to publish these poems in Germany. In that country there are many students of the dialects, who will welcome this publication, and will accord to the author the appreciation which he deserves. The book is published in excellent style. A few years ago the typography and binding of German books were regarded as rather inferior to those of other countries, but this specimen shows that there have been great advances. The typography is excellent, and the cover is decorated in a style which is new and attractive.

DIED.—Near Hanover, July 27th, 1891, Mr. Blaine Sprenkle, aged 39 years, 1 month and 24 days.

Mr. Sprenkle has been a patient sufferer from pulmonary trouble for a number of years, but especially so for the last few months. At last he passed peacefully away from earth, in the hope of a blissful immortality. He leaves an aged mother, a widow and three small children to mourn his departure, but their grief is softened by the fact that they belong to the God of the living. R.

DIED.—Departed this life, August 7th, 1891, Mrs. Laura F. Meyers, aged 29 yrs., 3 months and 21 days.

Mrs. Meyers was one of the most faithful members of Bethel congregation at Pine Grove Mills, Pa. She was one of the kind of Christians of whom no church need be ashamed, at all times trying to live consistently and in the fear of God. She was not only a faithful disciple, but she was also a faithful wife and a devoted mother. In all the relations of life it was her sincere desire to develop true Christian womanhood.

She is very much missed in the church, in the family and in the community where her lot was cast, and though, by her death, there is a gloom cast upon the home of which she was the center, yet she still lives in the good deeds that marked her brief career in the flesh. And that is one of the greatest sources of comfort to those who are left behind. It is a satisfaction to know that our dear departed have well done that which was committed to them, that they have nobly fought life's battle even though they were permitted to be in the strife but a short time.

May God, in mercy, comfort those who by this visitation are made to mourn, and especially may He sustain the husband who seems to be left desolate.

DIED.—In Frederick, Md., at 7 A.M., 26th ult., Mrs. Harriet Quynn, widow of the late Allen G. Quynn, in the 69th year of her age.

She was the youngest daughter of Daniel and Margaret Hauer, deceased, one of the best known families in Frederick. Her husband died in March, 1875, leaving her with a family of eight children, three sons and five daughters to mourn their loss A fresh grief than which death can bring none more bitter—the removal of a mother—the center and charm of the home, has now come unexpectedly to this family. Mrs. Quynn, though never robust in health, was rarely sick. The home was the kingdom, in which she ruled a lovely and beloved Queen. She was herself so pure and gentle, so thoughtful and sacrificing, so modest and true, so helpful and devoted that to live in her presence was a constant benediction.

She was dedicated to God in infancy, and at early womanhood became a communicant member of the Reformed church, in the confidence of which she lived and died.

She was one of those quiet, amiable, but strong characters, that always commands the confidence, affection and esteem of all who may be associated with her. She was faithful as a wife, a mother and a friend and consistent in her religious belief. Death came to her after a brief illness.

The evening before her death the mortal remains of a beloved niece of the deceased, Mrs. Charles F. W. Cashour, who after protracted and severe sufferings, in the 41st year of her age, was released, were laid away. Her death was a loss to the home, the church and the community.

These doubly bereaved homes have the sympathy of all who knew them. May a Father's love be multiplied to them according to their need.

Mrs. Quynn, after appropriate services at her late residence, conducted by her pastor, was buried at Mt. Olivet on Friday afternoon.—Examiner.

OUR LITERARY AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS AT LANCASTER.

According to previous announcement the Fall Term of Franklin and Marshall College, of the Theological Seminary, and of the Academy, commenced on Thursday, September 3. Perhaps never before did these institutions begin a year's work under more favorable auspices, both in point of numbers and in the prospect of effective work.

The examinations for entrance began on September 2, and at the time of this writing they are not quite completed; enough is known, however, to warrant the statement that the accession of new students in the three departments is larger than at any previous time in their history. There are upwards of fifty applicants for admission to the College, twenty or twenty-two to the Theological Seminary, and twenty-eight to the Academy, making about one hundred new students in all.

The opening address was delivered in the College Chapel on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock by the Rev. Joseph Henry Dubbs, D.D., on "Petrarch and the Renaissance." The address was able and scholarly, and was listened to with marked attention by the large audience present. The attendance at the opening was larger than we have ever before noticed it on a similar occasion, comprising not only a very large body of students, but also a great many friends of the College from the city of Lancaster and the vicinity. This shows the estimation in which the College is held, and the growing interest manifested in our institutions. May we not hope that the interest thus shown, the fidelity and enthusiasm of the students, and the zeal and ability of the professors, will bear rich fruit during the coming year? R.

ABSTRACT OF DR. DUBBS' ADDRESS.

In comparing the industry of the present generation with that of former ages we find that its most remarkable feature is the minute sub-division of labor. "It takes ten men to make a pin" and the man who puts on the head has no idea how to sharpen the point. This leads us to expect a similar division in literary labor. In every department of knowledge scholars are rapidly becoming specialists and the man who discovers a new microbe is more highly exalted by his coadjutors than if he had written an epic, though his greatness may be unknown to his next door neighbor.

It is not surprising that young men desire to devote themselves to the study of specialities, but the chief danger is that they fail to recognize the relation of a specialty to other branches of knowledge. They want to leap from the grammar school to the university at a single bound. In this way they may become expert scientific mechanics but can never be scholars or artists.

All knowledge is one and the farther we advance the more it becomes necessary to study it historically, so that our sense of it may not be lost. We need examples of many-sided men as correctives of the one-sidedness of specialism. To illustrate our meaning let us consider the career of a man who stood near the source of modern civilization and directed the course of the stream.

By the Renaissance we understand the great literary and artistic revival, extending from the beginning of the fourteenth to the middle of the sixteenth century, which has been called the springtime of modern civilization. Michelet calls it "the discovery of the world and the discovery of man."

Francesco Petrarca or Petrarch was "the literary Columbus who led the way to these discoveries." He was born in 1304 during the darkest period of the history of Europe. His father wanted to make him a lawyer, but he became a collector of ancient manuscripts and works of art. He was also a lyric poet of the highest order and gave the Italian language its literary form. Laura, to whom his sonnets were addressed was both a historic personage and a grand ideal.

Petrarch did not spend his whole life mourning for Laura when at an early period of her life she died. He was the first to draw a map of Italy, the first to gather a private library. He discovered lost manuscripts of ancient authors, and projected the establishment of galleries in which the masterpieces of ancient sculpture were preserved. He also studied works of art and was the earliest collector of gems and seals. He organized and arranged knowledge and thus became a pioneer of modern thought.

Petrarch died in 1374. His people found him seated in his library, his head resting on an open book, an ideal death for a man of letters.

The arts and sciences, as anticipated by this great man, spring from a common source, and must never be violently sundered. Our learning must not consist of fragments without any appreciation of a greater organism. Above all, we must learn to know Christ, for through Him alone will the mysteries of existence become clear in the light of God's eternal day.

WESTERN NOTES.

In answer to an invitation, and by previous arrangement, we boarded a B. & M. train at Lincoln, Neb., for Imogene, Iowa August 13th, reaching the latter place in time to address the Missionary Society of the Reformed church at 8.30 P.M. Nearly one year ago we performed a similar duty. The society has been making progress during this time, and Brother Butler has reason to congratulate himself upon having so faithful a band of Christian workers.

Sunday-school Convention.

The main object of our visit, however, was the holding of a Sunday-school Convention in the Reformed church as arranged by the action of Lincoln Classis and by the direction of the general statistical secretary of Sunday-schools within the bounds of Classis, Rev. S. Mease, D. D.

All the sessions were well attended, many persons not being able to enter the church, having to stand at the door and windows of the church, with the exception of the first session.

Four sessions were held from Saturday, 2 P.M., closing with a praise service on Sunday evening, the 16th.

The topics discussed were: "The Object of Sunday-school Conventions," "Teachers' Meetings," and a sermon on "Sunday-school Benevolence," by the writer. "Our Sunday-school as it should be," was presented by Brother Butler. "The Relation of Parents to the Sunday-school" was presented by Mrs. Stauffer. "Our Sunday-school as it is" was presented by Mrs. Butler. The Misses Eastman and Retelsdorf gave suitable Bible readings at the praise service on Sunday evening. With the praise service the convention closed, having infused new life into the hearts of Sunday-school workers, and we have reason to believe that hitherto lukewarm and indifferent parents, members of the church, have been won to a more active interest in this department of church work. Should the remaining conventions to be held prove so great an interest, the plan adopted by Classis will certainly result in much good to our mission fields.

Temperance.

A lecture before the Union Temperance League of Imogene, in the overcrowded M. E. church, on the evening of the 17th, ended our duties at Imogene. The increasing interest in all of the meetings, together with overcrowded churches, is ample evidence of an unselfish interest on the part of the people as to the spiritual and moral well being of Imogene and the surrounding community. Brother J. F. Butler has proven himself an earnest Christian minister, and esteemed by all who know him. We love to visit this people because they do not fill our ears with complaints against their pastor.

Omaha, Nebraska.

Here we spent a part of two days doing some pioneer missionary work, with a view of something more permanent to follow in due time when the means and the right man are forthcoming.

Among those visited was the Brantner family, formerly of Boonsboro, Md.; father and son are carpenters and contractors. Mr. H. G. Bell and wife, from Somerset county, Pa.; Mr. Bell is bookkeeper for the Goodman Drug Company. Mr. Charles Strassner, son of Rev. F. Strassner, Canton, Ohio; Mr. Strassner is chief salesman in the shoe department of "Morse and Co.'s" General Store. We also learned of other Reformed church people in the city but had not time to call on them.

A Request.

Will the pastors of churches in the east who have members who are now located in Omaha, or any other points in Nebraska, or in Council Bluffs, Iowa, please send us their names and, if possible, their post office address? By so doing, brethren, you will aid us in seeking them out and gathering them into our own Reformed Zion, as well as opening the way to reach many other persons in no way identified with the Church of Christ.

It is useless to write of the prominence of either Omaha or Council Bluffs on the opposite side of the river. Owing to the efficient street car system the Reformed people of both cities, for the time being, might be served by the same missionary.

We have already lost much in Omaha. Are we true to our church calling by permitting such a drain upon our western resources? Other denominations began in Omaha with no better prospects than we can now. They have developed rich fountain heads for aggressive church work. The Kountze Memorial Lutheran church proves this. Without this church in existence, it is doubtful whether the magnificent offer of Mr. Kountze would have been made to the late General Synod of his church, at Lebanon, Pa.

It is in this memorial church that we find many of our Reformed people now, some of whom are most prominent in an official capacity. These people are still waiting and praying for the organization of their own church in this progressive city.

Our object now is, to do some midweek pioneer work in Omaha and Council Bluffs, preparing the way for the establishing of a mission in due time. We can do this and not interfere with our work in Lincoln just now. What has been done by other denominations can be done by the Reformed church as well.

Lincoln.

Our plea for aid to this mission has met with favor. One good brother in the east informs us that he will send $100. Here are ten ten-dollar shares to begin with. Another brother has taken two $4 shares. A lady writes that she cannot do much, but sends $1 for a share. Another lady writes us an encouraging letter and sends cash for two $1 shares. Who will be the next to remember us and our cause in Lincoln? We dare not and cannot afford to incur a large church debt in this city. Those who have done so are suffering for it. We want to pay as we go, therefore, dare not begin our building until sufficient funds are on hand to pay for material and labor done as the work progresses. God thus far owns and blesses our efforts. We commit the whole cause to Him, and by the guidance of the Holy Spirit we hope to press the mission forward to a successful issue.

A suitable house of worship is an absolute necessity. It can be secured if the cause is enthusiastically presented to the church at large. Other denominations seem to realize the need of pressing forward their claims upon unoccupied portions of the city. Why should not the Reformed church do the same and as far as possible reclaim our just right as a church? T. F. STAUFFER.

THIRD ANNUAL CONVENTION OF BROTHERHOOD OF ANDREW AND PHILIP.

The increasing interest in the coming third annual convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, to be held in Baltimore, September 25, 26 and 27, is an evidence of the deep hold it has taken upon the thinking people of our church. Like all institutions of permanent and lasting influence it has had to advance slowly. An erroneous conception of its aim and object which had crept abroad retarded to an extent its early progress. The second convention, in Philadelphia, opened the eyes of many to the inherent possibilities of this organization, and from that time its record has been one of continued growth. There is little doubt that the approaching convention will give an impetus to the Brotherhood that will place it in a position in which it can be of incalculable service to the church at large. Many, at first indifferent or doubting, have come to regard it with warm favor, and are seconding with zeal and ability the efforts of those who have from the first seen in it the germ of a better church life. Those who can be in Baltimore in September should by all means do so. The Convention properly begins Friday evening, September 25th, and concludes with a grand farewell service Sunday night, in the Academy of Music, for which 2000 tickets of admission have been printed. Eminent speakers have been secured and the service will be an inspiration.

The three days' proceedings will afford a practical opportunity of observing the methods adopted by this organization and the spirit pervading its ranks. We bespeak for it a careful and impartial investigation—if it seem worthy of support; if it meet the needs of the day; if it tend to a purer and sweeter life, then support it, lend the weight of your influence and life: if it seem vain, hollow, insincere, then denounce it, and cease not denouncing till it has utterly perished.

Great events grow from small beginnings. This organization, started in obscurity by a few earnest souls, now just emerging into the open light of day, gives promise of a great and glorious future. 'Tis truly said, "There is no difficulty but can be surmounted; no need but can be satisfied"—none will deny the existence of the special evil this organization is intended to correct; none, we verily believe, after careful investigation, will deny that the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip is, in God's hands, an instrument through which relief will be found.

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF MERCERSBURG CLASSIS.

The second annual meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Mercersburg Classis was held August 20th, 1891, at Shippensburg, Pa., in the beautiful Sunday-school room of the new church.

In the morning and afternoon business sessions were held, opened by the President, and an address of welcome by Miss Clever. The officers were re-elected to serve another year. Fifteen delegates were present, representing nine congregations. Encouraging reports of work were received from the societies, a promissory card was ordered to be printed, to be distributed over the congregations, in order to obtain a free-will offering, and not interfere in any way with congregational work. Interesting topics were discussed, especially, how to increase the circulation of the church periodicals.

In the evening a missionary service was held. A report was read by the President, a paper prepared and read by Miss Schively, a short address by Miss Hallowell, of Chambersburg, Pa., the young lady chosen by the Board of Foreign Missions as an assistant teacher in the school at Sendai, Japan, followed by encouraging remarks by Rev. Mr. Dietz and Rev. Clever, D.D., of Baltimore, Md. A collection was taken for the benefit of the society, and the interesting meeting was brought to a close.

SPECIAL MEETING OF SCHUYLKILL CLASSIS.

A special meeting of Schuylkill Classis was held in Trinity Reformed church, Shenandoah, Pa., August 25, 1891, at 7 P. M. Rev. Robert O'Boyle was received into membership in this Classis from Juniata Classis, Synod of Potomac. His call to the pastorate of Trinity Reformed church was confirmed, and a committee, of which Rev. H. A. Keyser was chairman, was appointed to install him. The installation service took place the same evening.

Bro. O'Boyle enters a good field. Harmony and good will seem to reign among his people, and the mutual attachment between pastor and people is strong. The Lord prosper both in this new relationship and give them an abundant harvest of righteousness and of the works of faith unto the upbuilding of His Kingdom.

A MISSIONARY SERVICE.

(Any of these Services may be used in the Sunday-school on Missionary Day; and with a little adaptation they may be made very effective.)

1) Antiphonal reading.

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase.

So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there will not be room enough to receive it.

And all nations shall call you blessed, for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.

Say not unto thy neighbor, "Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will give," when thou hast it by thee.

Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said:

It is more blessed to give than to receive.

Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich.

Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there may be no gatherings when I come.

Now, therefore, perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

2) Hymn.

3) Prayer.

Almighty and everlasting God, who didst send Thy Son into the world, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many; dispose and assist us by Thy grace, most heartily we beseech Thee, to follow the example of His great humility and heavenly-minded love, that with all lowliness and patient continuance in good works, we may adorn the Gospel of God our Saviour.

Grant us grace, O Lord, to sacrifice self to the good of others and to Thy glory. Awaken and strengthen in us that love which delights in ministering to the wants of others. While we are so richly blessed with all the privileges of the Gospel, may we, in gratitude to Thee, seek to extend these same blessings to the remotest parts of the world. Fill our hearts with sympathy and love for our fellow-men who know not God and enjoy not the light and peace of the saving Gospel of Christ. May we realize how little we have done, how little we are doing, for the extension of Thy kingdom. We are ashamed, O Lord, of our ingratitude to Thee, and of our indifference to the needs of our fellow-men. Help us to amend our lives in accordance with Thy will, that we may be truly the light of the world.

Grant that these missionary services in which from time to time we engage, may stimulate us to renewed and more fruitful effort in the service of our Master. These things we ask in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

4) Recitations, addresses, papers, business, offerings, special music, announcements.

5) Closing Sentences.

He that soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly.

And he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully.

Every man as he purposeth in his heart so let him give.

Not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give into your bosom.

For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again.

There is that scattereth and yet increaseth.

There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.
